We have lost more Members of Congress in the last 13 months than in any similar period in its history. There is a much different situation here today than when I came to Washington nearly 30 years ago. The burden of work upon the Members of this House has increased at least a thousand percent. There is no telling when someone may be taken suddenly ill, and this physician and the men in the office, as well as medicine, are needed. If it is necessary when one goes to the office to go to a drug store to secure a little medicine to cure his ills, the delay might be harmful.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a minute I will be pleased to yield.

I think this physician and his assistants are doing a wonderful service, and I sincerely hope the amendment of the gentleman from California will be voted down.

I now yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. Is the gentleman laboring under the apprehension that my amendment abolishes the office?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not say that the gentleman's amendment abolishes the office.

Mr. CARTER. My amendment does not abolish the office.

Mr. COCHRAN. I know it does not; but if you are going to have the office, why not give the doctor and his assistants the tools with which to do the work? That is what I am speaking for.

Mr. CARTER. Would the gentleman be willing to pay for his own drugs?

Mr. COCHRAN. Certainly I can pay for my own medicine, and am willing to do so.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman not think the membership of the House are financially able to do the same?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; but what if an emergency develops? What does it amount to? Are we to compare the life of one Member of this House with the small amount we are appropriating here?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I would say that the drugs are not supplied to all of the Member of Congress, and that ought not to be in the RECORD with any idea that they are supplied to all of the Members of Congress. If the gentlemen think that the small amount of money paid for drugs represents the amount that is to be used by Members of the House, he is very much mistaken. This item is for office help, equipment, and emergency drugs and supplies. That is all that is going out here. In ordinary prescriptions, in the matter of illness, the man can be told what is necessary and where it can be obtained, and if he cannot get it himself the physician will supply it for the Member and he will pay the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Michigan is absolutely correct. Medicine has been secured for me, and I paid for it. I paid my hospital bill, of course, as others do.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I heard with a great deal of interest the statement made by the gentleman with reference to his personal experience with the House physician. I say to the gentleman that I had a like experience with the House physician, and if it had not been for the advice and attention of the House physician to myself, like the gentleman from Missouri, I would not be here now.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida, who has had a like experience.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think many Members have had the same experience. As to saying the drugs are being paid for by the Government, I say this: I have received emergency doses there, but I have always had prescriptions filled and paid for them myself, as other Members have.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think that applies to other Members of the House. All large and, in fact, many small business establishments provide rest rooms, nurses, and in some instances physicians. We provide for physicians and equipment for some of our large departments and agencies. If we can do this for the Government employees, provide for them to receive emergency treatment and the medicine to treat them, why not do it for ourselves? No matter how well the taxpayers might not like us, still I do not think they will complain about this small appropriation. I appeal for the defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I seldom rise in opposition to an amendment to a bill to save money for the Federal Government, and I do not in this case. I want to be as economical as I can, but if I wanted to cut out money from this bill I think I could find many, many places where I could do it a little easier on my conscience than I could in striking out this particular item. We have here 430 Members of the House and 96 Senators, all of whom have two or three or four or five clerks. This doctor is supposed to administer to the people on the Hill, a population of over 1,500, and the only doctor. Any manufacturing concern today that had one-half this number of employees would try to have an emergency room where the employees could be looked after in case of illness, and the manufacturing concern would certainly have a doctor to look after them; that would be economy and efficiency. As stated here by Members of the House, many Members of Congress must have medical attention and have it here at their workshop. I have gone down to the doctor's office a number of times and had to get some medical attention, because of the fact that I happened to be on the floor of the House I did not have time to go uptown. I do not want to deny some Members of Congress certain medical attention. I feel every Member of Congress and all their clerks should receive emergency treatment when necessary. If I wanted to save money, I could take this next item for the Capitol Police, where we have 120 members on the police force.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. In a moment. I call attention to the fact that we have 120 Capitol Police here, and we were told by Members that a few of them did not know why they are here, that they are political appointees, and have little value as police. If I wanted to get rid of somebody, I would get rid of some police who do not know what it is all about, costing $100,000 a year, instead of getting rid of a doctor who administers to the care of the membership and their clerks. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. I just want to ask the gentleman where he is going to get the money? This is a rather expensive operation, and I say to him as I said to my friend from Missouri, this does not abolish the position of House physician.

Mr. RICH. No; but if you go to the doctor and the doctor wants to give you a little liniment or a pill, he ought to be able to do it, instead of giving a prescription which you would have to go downtown 2 or 3 miles to get filled. I think that would be foolish.

Mr. RABAUT. Do we not furnish this same sort of service for other Government employees, and have we not provided doctors, nurses, and emergency rooms where there are large numbers of Government employees working?

Mr. RICH. If you want to strike out something, get rid of the hospitals they have got in some of the departments downtown, where they are doing absolutely unnecessary things in hospitalization and have many doctors and many nurses, where here we only have one doctor and several helpers.

Mr. RABAUT. That does not happen to come under our appropriation; but nevertheless I want it well said on the floor that we are doing no more for Members of Congress than they are doing for other Government personnel in the departments and which all large industrial concerns do for their employees.

Mr. RICH. You are not doing half as much for the Members of Congress as you are for the people in the departments. I do not want to do something for Members of Congress that they should do for themselves, but I believe this item is justifiable; if it were not, I would have disapproved it in committee.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on this point because I think it is something on which the committee should take a stand. I think we should determine whether we are going to have a doctor or whether we are going to dispense with his services. If the House is going to provide a physician for emergencies, then I wonder if it is going to strike out that portion of the bill which provides a few instruments and medicine with which to work. If we agree to retain the amount, are we going to deny an emergency shot in the arm, or a couple of aspirin pills to a sick or ailing Member? I have had two aspirin pills in the 7 years that I have been here. I did not pay for them. I was as sick as a horse; it was a late evening session; we had been on the floor for over 9 or 10 hours, so I had to get some relief. I had a prescription or two during my service, but I always paid for those. If some Member happened to get a pain under the apron, and the doctor analyzed it as an acute green-apple pain, I wonder whether the patient Member would have to send downtown for a little paregoric, or pay 3 cents for a squirt of the stuff. I think it is sheer bunk and nonsense to raise objection to the item, and to split hairs over a thing of this kind. The House physician is as necessary as any Member of the House, and he must have something to work with. Who would deny to the venerable Judge MANSFIELD, or to ED TAYLOR, or to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], or any other Member of this House some emergency assistance, or a little medicine? Certainly, I would not. I am wondering how many Members will vote to eliminate a portion of this appropriation which will permit us to have an attending physician, but will make the rule so rigid as to prescribe the giving of a couple of aspirin pills? Frankly, if it is a question of paying a nickel or a dime for two aspirin pills, I am willing to pay it. I am willing to go along with the gentleman from California, but I think it is a mighty picayunish thing to bring up here when it is something that affects the very life of the membership. Think of it. Twenty-three Members of this House have passed away in the last year. Many of them needed emergency attention, and emergency medicine. There is certainly no reason why they should have had to pay for it, if the doctor found it necessary to give them a few pills, a shot, or whatever it was to alleviate their pain.

I am ready to vote on the question, Mr. Chairman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Library proper: For the Librarian, the Librarian Emeritus, Chief Assistant Librarian, and other personal services, including special and temporary services and extra special services of regular employees (not exceeding $2,000) at rates to be fixed by the Librarian, $1,255,120, of which sum $8,820 shall be immediately available.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which is on the Clerk's desk, which amendment has the approval of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the minority members of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 33, at the end of line 4, after the word "available", insert: "Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of any money accruing from lapses under this appropriation may be transferred in such sums as the Librarian may designate to the appropriations for Copyright Office, union catalogs, distribution of card indexes, and Library buildings; but none of such transferred funds shall be utilized for the employment of additional personnel."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to treat all branches of the Library alike.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. RAYBURN having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COSTELLO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment, and the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. RABAUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] addressed the Committee of the Whole. He desires permission to extend his remarks by including therein a letter and resolution from the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] may have permission to revise and extend his remarks and include therein certain letters and excerpts therein. He had to leave unexpectedly before the Committee rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD excerpts from a brief submitted on March 12, 1940, by Patrick McHugh, of Boston, secretary-treasurer of the Atlantic Fishermen's Union, comprising 3,500 members from New England and New York, at a public hearing on that date before the United States Commissioner of Customs in Washington, D. C., on the matter of a proposed rescinding of Treasury Decision No. 49,682 which had so redefined American fisheries as to permit a shore station.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon and to include therein a copy of a bill I introduced and a report from the Post Office Department thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I shall place in the RECORD a forthright editorial from the Providence Journal of March 12 concerning the visit to Providence on March 11 of Assistant Secretary of State, Henry F. Grady, where he addressed a combined luncheon meeting of service clubs.

The scolding attitude of Mr. Grady and others of the administrative family toward trade associations when they presume to attack the reciprocal treaties, has drawn a merited rebuke from the Journal.

This newspaper, I might say in passing, has taken a favorable position toward the reciprocal trade treaty program, but unlike Mr. Grady and others of his school, the Journal recognizes that there are two sides to this question and both have a right to be heard, especially those men who have money invested in factories and plants and those employees whose livelihood is likely to be affected by some of these reciprocal trade treaties. Incidentally, I wonder who finances Mr. Grady in his trips around the country attacking trade associations. Is it his own or the taxpayers' money he is spending on these scolding sprees? [Applause.]

The editorial follows:

MR. GRADY'S ERROR

Assistant Secretary of State Grady perhaps already regrets his observation in this city yesterday that "we are rather used to special pleadings and trade-association executives who seem to have little else to do but go around the country and talk about tariffs." If he doesn't, he should. For certainly it is the duty of trade associations to present their case when reciprocal-trade agreements are being formulated. New England associations have done just that. Our Rhode Island groups, directly affected, have spent time and money to collect and present facts and figures relating to these agreements. They would have been recreant to their plain duty had they neglected the task.

Instead of lecturing them for taking this active interest, Mr. Grady should have commended them. For no economic policy of the administration is more dependent on statistical truth for its justification than the reciprocal trade agreements program. Its very existence in the long run depends on commercial facts and figures that will sustain its basic principle. That is why Secretary Hull has marshalled so much data to support his pleadings. Such a program must of necessity stand constantly in the revealing light of factual information. Obviously, such truth cannot be drawn from thin air. It must come, steadily and completely, from both opponents and proponents.

The right of Rhode Island trade associations to present their case, whenever necessity arises, should not be challenged by Mr. Grady's unfortunate remark that "we are not going to yield to lobby pressure and organized campaigning." When the State Department thus reproaches industry for exercising a clear right, it is guilty of a narrow attitude that will in the end defeat its own purpose. We cannot help but feel that in making this thoughtless remark about trade associations, Mr. Grady yesterday injured the trade-agreements program in this State.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks the editorial to which I referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INDIANA LIMESTONE

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, Indiana limestone is the best building stone in the world. You will find Hoosier stone in many of the most imposing structures in Washington and elsewhere in the country. It lends itself readily to architectural treatment and combines the qualities of permanence and beauty. Indiana limestone competes with other materials strictly on its merits and its Nation-wide use is evidence of its quality.

In the past 7 years the Indiana limestone industry has had a slump in large-scale construction. It is one of the hardest hit industries in the United States today. Many of our stone workers are out of jobs. Counties in the limestone belt have great numbers on the relief rolls. The farmers and businessmen are in distress in these communities. By using Indiana limestone our Government will benefit because of tremendous savings and a better product. I contend that more Indiana limestone should be used in the construction of Federal buildings.

I have read something about the use of marble and the glories of ancient Greece and Rome. While this makes nice reading, I believe that we are interested more in the solid prosperity of America. Furthermore, as building material, Indiana limestone will compare with the best, ancient or modern. It is already embodied in the construction of the following beautiful buildings in Washington: Archives, Departments of Justice, Labor, Internal Revenue, Commerce, Post Office, Apex, and the Carnegie and Brookings Institution Buildings.

The Indiana limestone buildings typify the progress and modern soundness of America as well as its glory. They certainly deserve careful consideration at this time when we need jobs for Americans, as well as glory, and can have both of them. [Applause.]

THE BATA SHOE CO.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a series of three articles written by Mr. Thomas L. Stokes, which have appeared during the last 3 days in the Washington Daily News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Do they exceed the limit of matter allowed by the Committee on Printing?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think not; they are comparatively short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I brought to the attention of the House the effort of Mr. Jan Bata to attempt to bring in 100 persons from Europe as instructors which he claimed were necessary to operate the so-called Bata shoe plant at Belcamp, Md., and later that an attempt was made to bring in 500 more; 72 were admitted, but the Department of Labor found that 25 were all that were necessary to operate the plant, and the others, the Department of Labor ruled, were here illegally. Today I want to bring to the attention of the House 3 articles by Mr. Thomas L. Stokes in the Washington Daily News which describes the Belcamp shoeshop, how Mr. Bata plans to operate the plant, and describes the schools he is setting up for the children. His plan provides that the children shall go to school for a period of 3 years. Mr. Stokes says, in one of his articles:

> The census questions about which so much clamor has been raised are simple compared with those put to youngsters who want to enlist for 3 years under agreement between parents and the company in the so-called industrial and business institute of the Bata Shoe Co.

Members of Congress objected bitterly to the questions that were proposed to be asked by the administration in the census leaflet, but these questions do not compare with those asked of the parents of the children, and of the children themselves, who go to the Bata school. It looks as if the administration were copying Mr. Bata's idea.

In reading the Stokes articles you will see that Mr. Bata has a feudal industrialism. His plan is thoroughly un-American. He aims to control his employees as an overlord his slaves. He is returning to methods that the people of this country discarded years and years ago. It is sending children into slavery. The children are worked in the daytime and sent to school at night. So for 24 hours a day they are under the complete control of Mr. Bata and his associates.

I want to read into the RECORD some of the questions that are asked by Mr. Bata and his lieutenants.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want to compliment the gentlewoman for the fight she has made and her efforts to get these so-called skilled workers out of this country. I aided the gentlewoman as much as I could at the time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman has done a very great work in that respect.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentlewoman think she ought to also tell the House that while they go to work in the daytime and go to school at night they are going to be under the control of this man for 24 hours a day?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is true. I shall read some of the questions that are asked the applicants. Quoting from the articles by Mr. Stokes:

> The first subject on which the applicant is asked is what grade he received his last year in school and his conduct. Among other questions on education is, Were you pleased with your teachers?
> Among a mass of questions on physical development are inquiries about drinking and smoking. Jan A. Bata, head of the company, is a prohibitionist.
> Questions on mental character include inquiries as to whether the applicant considers himself calm, hot-tempered, carefree, oversensitive, whether he is nervous, whether he feels embarrassed when meeting new persons, whether he has any fears, what are his chief interests—nature, poetry, mystery, science, electricity, machines, cars, airplanes, radio, music, travel, animals, farming, religion, human beings—whether he has ever been before a juvenile judge.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member is interested in the camouflaged industrial method of this new monopolist in our midst. Quoting further from the articles of Mr. Stokes:

> Questions on life include whether the applicant lives on a farm, in town, or city, who reared him, what were his living conditions, how he spends his leisure time, what kinds of books and magazines he reads, how, if he has been employed before, he spent his money.
> Very detailed are the inquiries as to family, including whether parents are separated or divorced, whether they own any land or a home, whether they have any debts, the wages of father and of mother.
> The applicant is warned that any intentionally false statement will bring discharge from the company when discovered.

Mind you, these answers are requested of mere boys and girls.

This is the method of autocracy, not democracy. This is industrial despotism, not industrial freedom. This is the method of dictatorship, not that of democratic leadership. Mr. Bata's method is the way of Stalin and Hitler. An excerpt from Mr. Bata's paper Belcamp is as follows:

> A Bataman is the one whose family believes that work is the one thing that gives him a chance to fill life's void with something interesting and worth while.
> Life is sweet to honest, striving, learning workingmen, for their continual striving to better themselves makes them explore the world, which are then known to them alone.

Then it goes on to say:

> We do not want men who work the required hours, take their pay, and go home, to come another day, or stay home if there is no work to do. No; we need men who stick to their work as if they were glued to it, men who make a game of their achievements.
> We want real Yankees, who will not take a beating without straightening their backbones and saying, "Got licked, good, but wait to see tomorrow."
> We want heroes.

There is a Hitler philosophy in the way these so-called schools in the Bata plant are conducted. It certainly should not be permitted.

May I say also that the families are asked to do certain things when they send these children to the factory school, or when Mr. Bata condescends to take the children into the factory school. The parents or the guardians of the students shall agree that the students shall:

> A. Work the weekly normal number of hours in the plant.
> B. Take class work not to exceed 10 periods of 50 minutes each.
> C. Learn aviation.

So far as I know, nothing has been done to teach the children aviation. That seems to be sort of a bait to draw them to the school. Quoting again from Mr. Stokes:

> Then the parents or guardians shall agree furthermore that there shall be a 3-month trial period, at the end of which the final decision regarding the acceptance into the institute shall be reached. During the schooling period they shall not support their children or wards by any money or otherwise.

You can see the complete control that Mr. Bata has over these young persons who go into the school and his industrial plant. For 24 hours a day, as the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] stated, Mr. Bata controls their lives and all the reading matter that Mr. Bata can distribute to them. You can see what a hero Mr. Bata is held up to be. The children are told to follow his example. They are also told that they are being trained to go to the farthermost parts of the world; in other words, to spread the Bata system all over the world. This is another piece of juicy bait tendered to influence impressionable boys and girls into the Bata system.

Apparently the aim of Mr. Bata is to have a boot and shoe monopoly of the world. The Bata firm was organized to operate shoe factories in Holland, England, France, Netherland Indies, English Indies, Canada, Switzerland, Egypt, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and other countries. It is one of the most monopolistic things I know anything about or ever heard about. It is a dangerous procedure in our industrial life and constitutes a menace to the workers in this country.

The parents or the guardians of the prospective students finally shall agree that they shall not interfere with the educational methods of the school, but that they shall cooperate with the teachers and tutors and shall morally support the work of the teaching staff.

You can see what a tremendous control Mr. Bata has, not only over the children but over the entire family. It is a very far reaching and a very dangerous influence that he exerts. It is obvious that after the disguise of Mr. Bata's so-called training-school scheme of his "Industrial and Business Institute" is explored and removed that all there is left is the ordinary commercial factory with an attempt to gain longer hours of employment than is permitted by the wage-hour law, and to dominate and mold the young lives of hitherto free American workers.

The following are three complete articles by Mr. Stokes:

DISPUTE IS SPREADING OVER BATA SHOE PLANT

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

(Editor's note: A project for transplanting onto Maryland soil a famous foreign system of mass production has stirred up a controversy. Below, in the first of four dispatches, the background of the dispute is outlined.)

BALTIMORE, MD., March 11.—On a flat expanse of Maryland farm country at Belcamp, about 20 miles from this city, the Bata Shoe Co., founded and developed in former Czechoslovakia and now spread to many parts of the world, is building a self-contained industrial community in an attempt to gain a toehold for expansion of the Bata system in the United States.

This venture has become embroiled in controversies involving the Labor Department at Washington, its Immigration and Naturalization Bureau, and its Wage-Hour Division; also labor unions and shoe companies, which are protesting on the ground of competition and lowering of standards; and friends of labor, who are suspicious of paternalism.

These latter are skeptical particularly of the Bata work-and-school plan, under which boys and girls 16 to 18 years of age are signed up for 3 years of training, in agreements between company and parents, and live in company dormitories under close supervision.

MASSACHUSETTS OBJECTS

The fight over the project has spread to Congress. There its chief foe is Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS (R., Mass.), who bitterly attacked the Bata invasion on behalf of shoe workers in her State. She pointed out to the House that the Biggers unemployment census of 1937 showed approximately 34,000 idle boot-and-shoe workers in this country and 15,000 partly employed.

Chief political sponsor of the enterprise is Senator MILLARD F. TYDINGS (D., Md.), in whose home county of Harford the Bata Shoe Co. has located. The Senator's law partner, Robert H. Archer, is counsel for the company. The Senator has been active with the State and Labor Departments, since as far back as 1934, in clearing the way for establishment of the industrial community. Public announcement that it was to be set up in Maryland came only last April.

BUILDING ALREADY BEGUN

Already constructed are one factory building, a dormitory for the so-called Bata Industrial and Business Institute, a score of duplex houses for workers and families, and a home for the company's head, Jan A. Bata. A second factory building has been started.

Eventual plans of the company seem somewhat vague. A Labor Department group which inspected the project in November reported that 8 factory buildings altogether were planned. Frank J. Pelz, personnel manager, told the writer that 20 factory buildings were contemplated.

One report is that 10,000 persons eventually will be employed. Between 700 and 800 are working at Belcamp now.

Further developments in the company's relationship with the Government appear imminent.

Several months ago the Immigration Bureau's decision to permit the entry of 100 Czechoslovakian "instructors" to teach American workers the Bata methods of shoe manufacture was protested by both A. F. of L. and C. I. O. shoe workers' unions. The criticism forced an investigation at Belcamp by the Labor Department, which resulted in a scaling down of the original order to permit only 10 instructors, with subsequent revision to permit 15 other administrative and supervisory officials.

METHODS RESEMBLE UNITED STATES

It was discovered that methods of manufacture did not differ greatly from American methods. Senator TYDINGS was most active with State and Labor Department officials in putting through his original order for 100. He had been very active also, as demonstrated by numerous letters in the Labor Department files, in obtaining the admission of other Czechoslovakian workers from the home plant on one pretext or another and having their stays extended from time to time

Mr. Bata, an aggressive fellow with a way of getting things done, is now threatening some sort of legal action against the Immigration Bureau, headed by James L. Houghteling, to force restoration of the original order.

The Wage-Hour Division has been brought into the picture by charges filed by Leo Goodman, of the United Shoe Workers, a C. I. O. affiliate, that the Bata company has violated the Wage-Hour Act at Belcamp. In a complaint filed in November he alleged that the company, in deducting for services furnished the employees, has failed to supply such services at cost for minimum-wage employees, as required by law.

WAGE-HOUR REPORT DUE

The investigation by the Wage-Hour Division is near completion and a report is expected soon.

This is not the first time the Bata company has drawn the attention of the Wage-Hour Division. A few months ago the division filed suit against the company in connection with 65 employees in its retail stores in the Chicago area—the company has some 47 retail stores in this country—and the company, in a stipulation last December 19, admitted the complaint and made restitution of $7,000 in wages to the 65 employees.

In the reports made by the Labor Department officials who inspected the Belcamp project last November, it was explained that, while the company in its petition seeking admission of the 100 "instructors" had said that the best results could be obtained by employing young women and men locally and paying them comparatively high wages, actually the greater part of the new workers then were being paid the legal minimum of $12.60 a week.

Mr. Goodman charged that even the minimum is not being paid according to law.

CHILDREN INDENTURED IN MARYLAND BATA PLANT

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

(In the second of a series of articles about the Bata project for installing a European mass-production system in America, Mr. Stokes tells about the unusual school proposed for young workers.)

BALTIMORE, March 12.—The industrial colony being established at Belcamp, 20 miles from here, by the powerful and world-wide Bata Shoe Co., includes a remarkable training-school scheme for youngsters.

The so-called Bata Industrial and Business Institute, patterned after schools at the home plants in Czechoslovakia, is under the direction of Dr. Joseph Z. Schneider, past dean and full professor of the graduate school of commerce, Praha Institute of Technology, who was a visiting professor for a time at the University of Chicago.

Under the Bata system, as worked out here by Dr. Schneider, boys and girls between 16 and 18 are virtually indentured for 3 years to the company by agreement with their parents. They work at the plant during the day, go to school at night, live in dormitories, and are at all times under close supervision, which extends even to the disposition of their wages. Parental interference is prohibited.

UNDERGO TRIAL PERIOD

After a trial period of 3 months any student not found acceptable may be dismissed. Dr. Schneider said he expected to open the school in April with 50 or 60 students at the outset.

The school is an integral part of the Belcamp industrial colony, which represents an attempt by the Bata Co., crippled in former Czechoslovakia by the German occupation and control of its plants, to establish itself in the United States. For several years the company has maintained retail stores in this country, but this is its first American venture in production. Production is going forward at Belcamp in the one factory building already erected, where between 700 and 800 workers are employed. Most of the workers are high-school graduates from the surrounding agricultural region.

Seeking enlistments in the institute, Dr. Schneider has distributed a prospectus labeled "Bata key to success," along with questionnaires for prospective students to fill out. These consist of four and a half printed pages with far more detailed and intimate inquiries than those in the census which have caused criticism. Graduates in the 1938, 1937, and 1936 classes of Aberdeen High School, 4 miles away, received the prospectus.

WHAT IS DEMANDED

An excerpt from the prospectus illuminates the nature of the institute:

"The parents or the guardians of the student shall agree that the student shall—

"a. Work the normal weekly number of hours in the plant.

"b. Take classwork not to exceed 10 periods of 50 minutes each week.

"c. Learn aviation.

The parents or guardians shall agree furthermore that:

a. There shall be a 3-month trial period, at the end of which the final decision regarding the acceptance into the institute shall be reached.

b. During the schooling period they shall not support their children or wards by any money or otherwise.

c. They shall leave all the wages earned by their children or wards to be used by them under the guidance and supervision of the tutors, unless permitted otherwise by the director of the institute.

"The parents or the guardians finally shall agree that they shall not interfere with the educational methods of the school but that they shall cooperate with the teachers and tutors and shall morally support the work of the teaching staff.

"The parents or guardians also understand that their children or wards are being trained for positions not only in the United States of America but also in various foreign countries and shall therefore not interfere when their children or wards shall be transferred for duty and for further training to remote parts of the world."

The practical schooling of the students, according to the prospectus, "cover the whole manufacture of leather and rubber footwear," as well as theoretical instructions in office and administrative work, raw materials, technological processes and finished products, economics, management, salesmanship, mathematics, commercial geography, English and two other languages, foot anatomy, hygiene, and pathology."

Dr. Schneider said nothing would be produced for sale in the school. The students, he explained, will receive the minimum wage under the Wage-Hour Act, $12.60 a week, minus a 13-cent deduction for social security. They will have little coming back to them after various other deductions.

He estimated room rent at a dollar a week, board at $6 weekly, with $3 for tuition, recreation, etc., leaving the student $2.47. Students will be encouraged to save. In the schools in Czechoslovakia students were required to save and were paid 10 percent interest.

The objective is for the student to become, among other things, "cooperatively minded" and "well disciplined."

Aviation instruction in a shoe factory seems somewhat unusual.

Asked if this was just a "come-on" to enlist youngsters, Dr. Schneider said this was not true, and that aviation instruction would be given later when a field is developed and planes are purchased.

Jan A. Bata, head of the company, is an aviation enthusiast, it seems. On this point the prospectus says:

"Aviation is an integral part of the Bata education. Two years ago Dr. Bata flew around the world for business reasons in his Lockheed. Only two out of the seven people participating in this first commercial flight around the world were not pilots. Any one of the remaining five might have brought the airplane to safe landing in case of an emergency."

BATA PLANT DEMANDS "STUDENTS" BARE ALL

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the third of five dispatches)

BALTIMORE, MD., March 13.—The census questions about which so much clamor has been raised are simple compared with those put to youngsters who want to enlist for 3 years, under agreements between parents and company, in the "Industrial and Business Institute" of the Bata Shoe Co. at Belcamp, Md.

The inquiry into the private lives of prospective "students" and their families is but a foretaste of the close supervision maintained by the Bata system upon its workers, as demonstrated at the home plants of the corporation at Zlin, in what used to be Czechoslovakia.

Labor is aroused over the proposed establishment of such a system in the United States and looks askance at the "institute," to which boys and girls from 16 to 18 are to be admitted for a regimented sort of existence. They will work during the day, go to school at night, live in a company dormitory, and all under supervision which extends to disposition of their wages—the $12.60 minimum fixed by the Wage-Hour Act—most of which the company will get back to pay for room, board, tuition, athletic fees, and the like.

CHARGE LAW VIOLATION

Charges by the United Shoe Workers that the company has already violated the Wage-Hour Act are under investigation by the Wage-Hour Division, with a report expected soon.

The questionnaire sent to prospective student-workers in the "institute" covers six printed pages and gives a clue to the type of mind desired by the company. Dr. Joseph Z. Schneider, institute director, said he planned to begin operations next month with 50 or 60 students at the start.

The first subject on which the applicant is asked what grade he received his last year in school is "conduct." Among other questions on education is, "Were you pleased with your teachers?"

QUESTIONED ON DRINKING

Among a mass of questions on physical development are inquiries about drinking and smoking. Jan A. Bata, head of the company, is a prohibitionist.

Questions on "mental character" include inquiries as to whether the applicant considers himself calm, hot-tempered, carefree, oversensitive, whether he is nervous, whether he feels embarrassed when meeting new persons, whether he has any fears, what are his chief interests—nature, poetry, mystery, science, electricity, machines, cars, airplanes, radio, music, travel, animals, farming, religion, human beings—whether he has ever been before a juvenile judge.

Questions on life include whether the applicant lives on a farm, in town or city, who reared him, what were his living conditions, how he spends his leisure time, what kinds of books and magazines he reads, how, if he has been employed before, he spent his money.

MUST BARE HOME LIFE

Very detailed are the inquiries as to family, including whether parents are separated or divorced, whether they own any land or a home, whether they have any debts, the wages of father and of mother.

The applicant is warned that any "intentionally false statement" will bring discharge from the company when discovered.

Between 700 and 800 workers are now employed at the one factory—one of several projected—which has been completed. The Americans among them are mostly young unskilled workers, many of them high-school graduates, drawn from the farm community in which the company has located.

They are continually subjected, in the weekly newspaper run by the company, to what might be termed "company talk," including praise of its founder and his managers, success stories, continuous injunctions about the value of hard work.

Of the general manager the paper Belcamp said recently in a lengthy article:

"The favorite pastime of a village lad called John Hoza, who even in early youth was a leader, was to play an industrialist. Around 1900, while the other boys played 'cops and robbers,' the Zlin boys' gang, composed of many of the present executives of the Bata organization all over the world, spent every minute of its free time in building and running their imaginary factories.

"They planned the size, decided on the number of chimneys, and types of machinery, assigning the various positions to the members of the gang and deciding on the hiring and firing of the other imaginary employees."

The front page of the paper recently carried a long statement by Mr. Bata, of which some excerpts are:

"A Bata man is one who firmly believes that work is the one thing that gives him a chance to fill life's void with something interesting and worth while.

"LIFE IS SWEET

"Life is sweet to honest, striving, learning, working men, for their continual striving to better themselves makes them explore new worlds, which are then known to them alone.

"We do not want men who work the required hours, take their pay and go home, to come another day, or stay home if there is no work to do. No; we need men who stick to their work as if they were glued to it, men who make a game of their achievements.

"We want real Yankees, who will not take a beating without straightening their backbones and saying, 'Got licked good, but wait to see tomorrow.'

"We want heroes!"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a tax report by the District and also a letter from Commissioner Long, of Massachusetts, regarding the intangible tax.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God who art from everlasting to everlasting and with whom is no variableness, neither shadow that is cast by turning: We thank Thee for every good and perfect gift that cometh down from the Father of Lights, and especially for the kingdom that cannot be shaken, for the righteousness that endureth forever. Help us to realize that deep in the heart of the universe, among the imperishable treasures of life which time cannot alter, is the great joy of finding and recovering that which has been lost. Grant in this Passiontide, as we draw nearer and nearer to the Cross in contemplation, that we may find the joy in rediscovering the considerate and kindly things that overflow only from the Saviour's heart into our world's best thought and sentiment, to the upbuilding of our character and the better understanding of our fellow men. We ask it in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, March 13, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LAWS OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 2 (a) (11) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit copies of laws enacted by the National Assembly of the Philippine Islands. Included are laws of the First National Assembly, third session, January 24, 1938, to May 19, 1938; and of the Second National Assembly, first session, January 23, 1939, to May 18, 1939; first special session, August 15, 1939, to September 18, 1939; and second special session, September 25, 1939, to September 29, 1939.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 14, 1940.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Townsend Club No. 1, of Clinton, Iowa, praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 3255) to provide for national recovery by raising revenue and retiring citizens past 60 years of age from gainful employment and provide for the general welfare of all the people of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the enactment of House bill 7447, authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the proposed T tunnel as a means of communication and transportation between San Pedro, Wilmington, Terminal Island, and Long Beach, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the United States entering into foreign entanglements or participating in foreign wars, and praying that the armed forces of the Nation only protect America against invasion, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TYDINGS presented the petition of members of Local Union No. 12 of the American Flint Glass Workers' Union of North America, Cumberland, Md., praying for the imposition of higher tariff duties than those now existing on glassware, and also that the control of all tariff legislation be retained in the Congress, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOLT presented petitions of members of Local Union No. 539, of Wellsburg, and Local Union No. 557, of Morgantown, both of the American Flint Glass Workers' Union of North America in the State of West Virginia, praying for the imposition of higher tariff duties than those now existing on glassware, and also that the control of all tariff legislation be retained in the Congress, which were ordered to lie on the table.

RESOLUTION OF RHODE ISLAND GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON PRESIDENTIAL THIRD TERM

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and ask for its appropriate reference. It memorializes Congress against a third Presidential term.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I also have received a copy of the resolution and was about to present it. I think I ought to say a few words to enlighten my colleagues as to the significance and value of the resolution.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. May we have the resolution read? If it is going to be discussed, I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senate has given unanimous consent for the reading of a resolution submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which is as follows:

Resolution memorializing Congress to enact suitable legislation to prevent any President of the United States from seeking a third term

Whereas the New York Senate yesterday adopted a resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact suitable legislation to prevent any President of the United States from seeking a third term, which resolution embodies the following phraseology:

"Whereas on September 17, 1796, George Washington, first President of the United States, delivered his Farewell Address to the American people; and

"Whereas on that day the Father of our Country set down certain suggestions for the guidance of the American people; and

"Whereas by his refusal to seek election for the third time he established a tradition that to this day has remained unbroken; and

"Whereas in his Farewell Address President Washington said, 'Friends and citizens, the period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution that I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made'; and

"Whereas this tradition of a President of the United States of not seeking election for a third term forms the one remaining bulwark protecting the people of this Nation against the threat of the establishment of a dictatorship; and

"Whereas with the establishment of a dictatorship the minorities now accorded their rights under our Constitution will be swept aside and accorded the same treatment now given them in certain countries of Europe": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized to enact suitable legislation to prevent any President from seeking a third term; and the secretary of State is hereby authorized and directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, another copy of this resolution has been sent me for presentation here; and I was about to send it to the desk when my colleague presented his copy.

It seems to me that my colleagues should be enlightened in a few words as to the value of this resolution.

As they may know, Republicans are in control of both the senate and the house by large majorities, and also of the governorship, all of whom joined in supporting this resolution; but it does not appear in the resolution itself that only a minority of the members of the house and only a bare majority of the members of the senate joined in passing the resolution.

How the Congress is to carry out the purpose of the resolution is not indicated. As Senators noticed when it was read, it advocates the passage by the Congress of suitable legislation to prevent any President "from seeking a third term." Nothing is said about the people electing a President for a third term, about the Electoral College electing a President for a third term, or about the possibility of Congress making a President ineligible for a third term. We are simply asked to pass legislation to prevent a President from seeking a third term.

Furthermore, if we may go to the fundamentals involved, it seems to me that it might sometime in the course of history become a President's duty, in the words of the poet Tennyson—

To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution presented by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] read into the RECORD a resolution from the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island concerning a third term. In that resolution is quoted a statement from our first President, George Washington.

In order that the historical view of this subject may be complete, I now desire to read a statement by George Washington. I ask unanimous consent that my statement and what I read may follow immediately the resolution to which I refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I now read a part of a letter from George Washington to the Marquis de Lafayette, dated Mount Vernon, April 28, 1788, on the subject of a third term:

There are other points in which opinions would be more likely to vary. As, for instance, on the ineligibility of the same person for President, after he should have served a certain course of years. Guarded so effectually as the proposed Constitution is, in respect to the prevention of bribery and undue influence in the choice of President, I confess I differ widely myself from Mr. Jefferson and you as to the necessity of expediency of rotation in that appointment. The matter was fairly discussed in the Convention, and to my full conviction though I cannot have time or room to sum up the argument in this letter.

It will be remembered that Mr. Washington was the president of that Convention.

There cannot, in my judgment, be the least danger that the President will by any practicable intrigue ever be able to continue himself one moment in office, much less perpetuate himself in it, but in the last stage of corrupted morals and political depravity; and even then, there is as much danger that any other species of domination would prevail. Though, when a people shall have become incapable of governing themselves, and fit for a master, it is of little consequence from what quarter he comes. Under an extended view of this part of the subject I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the services of any man who, on some great emergency, shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public.

Mr. President, my only purpose in reading this quotation from General Washington's letter to General Lafayette, just after the Constitution had been agreed to, and I believe before it had been ratified by the necessary number of States, is in order that the historical record, which was partially covered in the resolution, may be complete.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to invite the Senator's attention to certain words used by General Washington. I refer particulary to the adverb "universally," and also to the words "on some great emergency."

Mr. McKELLAR. The former President used those words, and I read them to the Senate. I think the excerpt from the letter throws much light on General Washington's idea of a third term for the Presidency.

(Mr. ANDREWS introduced Senate bill 3589, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

AMENDMENT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill to amend the Social Security Act, and request that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. I also request that an explanatory statement of the bill, prepared by me, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3579) to extend the Federal old-age and survivors insurance benefits of the Social Security Act to certain employees of religious and charitable organizations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. WALSH is as follows:

The bill proposes to extend the Federal old-age and survivors insurance benefits of the Social Security Act to certain employees of religious and charitable organizations. If enacted into law, it will add over a million persons to those already embraced within the provisions of the existing law.

In 1935–36 representatives of the churches, colleges, and hospitals asked for and received exemption from the Social Security Act. Many of these same organizations, for the past few years, have been considering ways and means of having their employees included within the Social Security Act without interfering with the general provisions of the law which exempt religious, educational, and charitable institutions from taxation.

The bill is the result of these deliberations and, in effect, provides for the inclusion under old-age and survivors insurance provisions of the Social Security Act, and the corresponding taxing or contribution section of the Internal Revenue Code of all employees of religious, educational, and charitable institutions except ministers of religion and members of religious orders.

In view of the fact that legislation to include these groups has been recommended by the Social Security Board in its report to the President dated December 30, 1938, and by the advisory council on social security in its report dated December 10, 1938, the action of representatives of the churches, colleges, and hospitals makes the change certain.

This bill would safeguard the tax-exempt status of the religious and charitable agency paying the tax by requiring that all revenues collected from such tax-exempt agencies "shall be paid directly into the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund," and in this way the proposed amendment would, in reality, convert what otherwise would be a general tax into a true contribution to a trust fund, available only for the payment of old-age benefits, and not subject to appropriation by Congress for any other purpose.

The bill would result in extending the coverage of old-age and survivors insurance benefits to all lay employees of the tax-exempt charitable, religious, and educational agencies heretofore excluded. It would continue to exclude from old-age and survivors benefits all clergy, sisters, and brothers of religious orders attached to schools, colleges, hospitals, homes for the aged, and all other charitable institutions.

The proposed amendment would subject these lay employees and their employers to the payment of the taxes levied for the support of the old-age and survivors insurance benefits system which, at the present, are levied at the rate of 1 percent of wages received by the employee, and of wages paid by the employer and which, under the Social Security Act, may be increased gradually, but may never, without new legislation, exceed 3 percent of wages received and wages paid.

The religious, charitable, and educational institutions that have agreed to this proposal, approve of the legislation, and request favorable action, are the following: National Council Protestant Episcopal Church (speaking for itself and not the whole church), National Catholic Welfare Conferencce, Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, American Hospital Association, American Association of Social Workers, Community Chests and Councils, Inc., and National Recreation Association.

REGULATION OF INVESTMENT TRUSTS AND INVESTMENT COMPANIES

Mr. WAGNER. I ask consent to introduce a bill relative to investment trusts and investment advisers. I also request that an explanatory statement of the provisions of the bill be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3580) to provide for the registration and regulation of investment companies and investment advisers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. WAGNER was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INVESTMENT-TRUST LEGISLATION—EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

NATIONAL PUBLIC INTEREST IN INVESTMENT TRUSTS AND INVESTMENT COMPANIES

Investment trusts and investment companies constitute one of the important media for the investment of savings of the American public and an important factor in our national economy. At the present time these organizations have total assets of approximately $4,000,000,000. In addition, they control or exercise a significant influence in a great variety of industrial enterprises, public utilities, insurance companies, banks, etc., with aggregate resources of approximately $30,000,000,000.

During the past 10 years there have been approximately 4,500,000 holders of certificates or shares of investment trusts and investment companies located in every State. American investors have sustained losses exceeding $3,000,000,000 out of a total investment in such companies aggregating about $7,000,000,000. During the period between the early 1920's—when the investment companies first made their appearance in this country—and the present, approximately 1,300 investment enterprises of all types were created. However, only about 650 trusts and companies are still in existence, the remainder having disappeared either through mergers, receivership, dissolution, or bankruptcy. In addition, numerous companies controlled or influenced by investment companies went bankrupt or sustained substantial losses. A large portion of these losses is directly attributable to those managements which refused to recognize their fiduciary obligations to their shareholders and subordinated the interest of the investor to their own pecuniary advantage.

The problems with respect to investment trusts and investment companies are still acute, for new organizations of this type are still being formed in large numbers and are raising substantial funds. From the middle of 1933 up to the end of 1939 approximately $2,400,000,000 of securities of investment trusts and companies have been registered with the Commission. Although not all of these securities have been distributed, approximately $400,000,000 of investment-company securities were sold during 1936 and 1937 alone, or approximately one-sixth of all nonrefunding corporate issues sold during those years. During the last few years, sales campaigns have been vigorously conducted and investment-trust certificates are being sold upon the installment plan to individuals in the lowest economic and income strata of our population—individuals who are particularly susceptible to devious high-pressure selling methods and who have been subject to unconscionable penalties and forfeitures in all too many instances.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION INVESTIGATIONS

The abuses and deficiencies of investment trusts and companies which occasioned these losses to the American public are not academic, and not merely attributable to the financial and economic ethics which prevailed during the 1920's. Some of the most flagrant abuses and grossest violations of fiduciary duty to investors were perpetrated during the very time that the Securities and Exchange Commission was conducting its comprehensive study of investment trusts and investment companies pursuant to section 30 of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. That study conclusively demonstrates that, unless these organizations are subject to supervision and regulation, the interest of many of almost 2,000,000 American investors in these institutions will be substantially threatened.

GENERAL PURPOSES OF THE LEGISLATION

This bill provides for the registration and regulation of investment trusts and investment companies and for the registration of investment counselors and other investment advisory services. The underlying purpose of the legislation is not merely to insure to investors a full and fair disclosure of the nature and activities of the investment trusts and investment companies in which they are interested, but to eliminate and prevent those deficiencies and abuses in these organizations which have contributed to the tremendous losses sustained by their security holders.

INVESTMENT TRUSTS NOW LARGELY UNREGULATED

Investment trusts and investment companies, like banks, insurance companies, and similar financial institutions, represent large pools of liquid funds of the public entrusted to individuals for management and investment. Yet, unlike these other financial institutions, investment trusts and investment companies, although their field of activity is unlimited, have been subject to virtually no regulation and supervision by any governmental agency—Federal or State. This absence of regulation is one of the fundamental causes of the abuses which have been altogether too frequent.

FINANCIAL ABUSES

Because of this absence of safeguards, promoters and managers of investment companies have been able to determine every aspect of their affairs in an atmosphere of self-dealing and conflicting interests devoid of arms-length bargaining. Independent scrutiny, in behalf of public stockholders, of the transactions and activities of promoters and controlling groups in the organization and operation of investment companies has been and is virtually nonexistent. Too often, the organization of investment trusts and companies was motivated, not by a desire of their sponsors to engage in the business of furnishing investment management to the small investor but rather to accumulate large pools of wealth which would provide a variety of sources of profit and emoluments to their sponsors and controlling persons.

Only a small amount of capital is required to form investment trusts and companies. As a consequence, these organizations are still experiencing an unsound mushroom growth, and various individuals, regardless of their background, have been able to promote or acquire control of these organizations, with their large pools of liquid assets, with a minimum of investment. In many instances control of these institutions has been made impregnable by devices such as management voting stock; voting trusts; the common-law or business-trust form of organization in which security holders have no vote; long-term management contracts, which also assured substantial compensation, irrespective of the company's performance; option warrants to purchase the company's stock, which have the potentiality of substantially diluting the value of the public stockholder's interests; and, finally, domination of the proxy machinery for the solicitation of authority to vote the shares held by public stockholders.

In many instances the pecuniary interest of the promoters, distributors, and managers have dominated almost every phase of the organization and operation of investment companies to the detriment of investors. Capital structures, which are often confusing and incomprehensible to investors, have been created with the ulterior motive of vesting in the controlling groups complete control of the public stockholders' funds and a disproportionate share of the companies' profits. The capitalization of investment companies was in many instances determined solely by the amount of securities the public would absorb. As a consequence, unsound capital structures have been created—structures which fostered and perpetuated sharp conflicts of interests between the holders of senior securities and junior securities. These conflicts have often been resolved to the detriment of the public senior security holders and to the advantage of the common stock held by insiders. The holders of junior securities have retained control of the funds, although in essence the assets belonged to senior security holders, and have transferred, for substantial payments for their stocks without asset value, control of these funds without the consent or knowledge of senior security holders. Many senior securities had no protective feature, or inadequate features, which were circumvented and nullified by the controlling common-stock holders, and the public investors were powerless to prevent unfair and injurious practices. These companies with senior securities have been, in essence, margin accounts—margin accounts not subject to further margin calls—for trading in common stocks for the benefit of the inside common-stock holders. Unwarranted speculative activities have resulted.

In addition, these capital structures with more than one class of security have accentuated the problem of payment of dividends in investment companies; for the controlling common-stock holders have caused the payment of dividends and other distributions on their common stock to the pecuniary injury of the senior security holders. Capital gains have been drained off by the common-stock holders in periods of rising prices, and dividends paid, although the senior securities had inadequate asset coverage.

Investment trusts and investment companies have suffered many abuses which are peculiar to that type of organization. Investment companies are permitted to be organized with the broadest powers, and in essence, constitute blind pools of public funds. As a result, sponsors, promoters, and controlling groups in many instances have directed the investment of the public's funds in a variety of activities without the consent of the stockholders and irrespective of the announced investment policies which induced the public to invest in the enterprise. In addition, the assets of investment trusts and investment companies consist of cash or marketable securities readily reducible to cash, which could be used to acquire any type of security, property, or business. As a consequence, officers, directors, managers, and other insiders have often unloaded valueless or dubious securities and other property on investment companies at extravagant prices; have borrowed the funds of their investment companies; and have caused such companies to make loans to enterprises in which these insiders were interested. Substantial amounts of these loans have never been repaid. Investment companies in many instances have been exploited by investment banker sponsors and managers to enhance their banking and brokerage business. The investment companies were caused to participate in underwritings; to stabilize the market in securities underwritten by such managing groups; and to purchase substantial blocks of stocks in industrial companies, railroads, banks, and insurance companies in order to expand the banking and brokerage business and build up the financial empires of these insiders.

To augment and intensify all of these opportunities for control and personal profits at the expense of public stockholders, insiders have often fostered excessive pyramiding of investment companies into complicated corporate systems. Funds, securities, and other property were shifted by the dominant persons among the various investment companies in the system and their controlled industrial and other enterprises, in order to promote their own personal pecuniary interests, to create misleading values and fictitious profits for the purpose of deceiving stockholders, and to centralize and perpetuate their control. In many instances, the pyramiding of investment companies involved a complete renunciation of the policies the stockholders had been led to believe their companies would pursue; management costs have been inequitably allocated among the various pyramided companies, and expenses have needlessly been duplicated.

Wholesale trafficking in, and bartering of control of the management of investment companies without the knowledge or consent of the investor has also been a frequent abuse in the history of investment companies. Stockholders have suffered large losses as a result of undisclosed overnight transfers of control of their funds to new interests who have either been incompetent or dishonest. Under existing conditions, investors are powerless to protect themselves against the consequences of such shifts in control.

Managements have also used their control of the applicable corporate and statutory machinery to subject stockholders to inequitable readjustments of the rights, privileges, preferences, and values of their securities, by judicial reorganizations, recapitalization plans, mergers, consolidations, dissolutions, and sales of the corporate assets to other companies. Existing remedies for the protection of stockholders against inequitable plans of readjustment are inadequate, cumbersome, and impractical. The financial resources of the average stockholder are usually insufficient to meet the burden of complicated and long-drawn-out judicial and other proceedings which may be necessary to oppose successfully unfair management-prepared plans.

Another fundamental abuse has been that many promoters and managers of investment companies have a greater interest in the profits which they can realize from the distribution of investment-company securities than in compensation for the avowed function of furnishing expert, disinterested investment service to investors. As a consequence, management may be subordinated to distribution. Unsound investment trusts and companies may be organized in an effort to create securities or merchandise with sales appeal; and the investments of the companies may be made, not on basis of their soundness, but on the basis of their effect on sales of the companies' shares. Selling charges are often fixed to yield a maximum of fees to distributors and frequently include many hidden fees exacted from the purchasing public. The profits to be derived in the merchandising of investment-company securities has also prompted the rapid formation of investment trusts and companies by the same sponsors in order to switch investors from old companies into new companies, each switch being accompanied by exaction of a new selling load from the security holders.

In the case of those investment trusts and companies which continuously sell their shares to the public, practices have often been countenanced which have resulted in substantial dilution of the investors' equity in the fund. Such dilutions have taken place as recently as last autumn. The small investor, purchasing investment-trust shares or contracts on the installment-payment plan, has often been subjected to excessive sales loads and onerous penalties and forfeitures.

Implementing the perpetuation of all these abuses is the management's domination of the accounting practices and the scope and content of the financial reports transmitted to the stockholders. The absence of uniform accounting principles has facilitated the transmission to stockholders of annual reports which are often misleading and incomplete.

This is not a complete catalog of the deficiencies and abuses which have existed in the investment-company industry. Of course, these abuses do not exist in equal degree in all classes of investment companies or in companies within each classification. Some abuses are peculiar to certain types of companies only. In addition, some managements have taken steps to eradicate some of the defects and malpractices prevailing in the industry. However, considering the investment-company industry as a whole, fundamental deficiencies and abuses actually or potentially exist in all classes of investment companies and, in the absence of legislative regulation, will continue or recur. The problem of the protection of the investor and the national economy is too vital to permit of haphazard voluntary solutions.

Investment trusts and investment companies have furnished but comparatively little capital to industry. For the most part these organizations have invested their funds in securities which have been outstanding for some time. On the other hand, investment trusts and investment companies could be capable of performing important functions in the national economy and of becoming one of the important institutions in this country for the investment of savings along with banks and insurance companies. As media for investment in securities, particularly equity securities, investment companies may be able to offer more diversification and more competent management than the ordinary individual himself can provide if the major present temptations to management, unrestrained by effective compulsory standards of fair conduct, are removed. Certain types of investment companies could be particularly useful to the national economy in supplying the needs of new industrial enterprises through equity financing and loans, thereby making available to these enterprises sources of capital funds which would otherwise be beyond their reach. Finally, investment companies, if made into real representatives of the participating investors and not of other interests, could become more effective advocates of the great body of investors in our industrial system than the now inarticulate small stockholder.

INVESTMENT COUNSEL AND ADVISERS

The activities of investment counsel and other investment advisory persons in many respects offer the same opportunity for abuse of trust reposed in them by investors as exists in the case of managements of investment companies. The extent of their influence is only partially indicated by the fact that the portion of these advisers studied by the Securities and Exchange Commission managed or gave advice with respect to over $4,000,000,000 of funds. The bill does not attempt to deal comprehensively with the problem of investment advisers but is intended only to eliminate the more obvious basic abuses relating to the type of individual who may register as an investment adviser, profit-sharing compensation, unloadings and perpetration of frauds upon clients, and assignment of clients' contracts.

SUMMARY OF THE BILL

The bill contains two titles. Title I relates to investment trusts and investment companies of all types. Title II relates to investment counsel and other investment advisory services. The bill deals with abuses and deficiencies in the organization, sales of the securities, and operation of investment companies. In general, the theory of the bill is to eliminate wherever possible such abuses by direct prohibition of their continuance. Only in the comparatively few cases where the problems are complex and technical is a regulatory power vested in the Commission to correct malpractices by rules, regulations, or orders promulgated in accordance with precise standards prescribed in the bill. The following résumé is not a complete description of all the provisions of the bill nor of the abuses which the bill is designed to remedy.

INVESTMENT COMPANIES

Definitions, exemptions, and classifications of companies: Investment companies are substantially defined as issuers holding themselves out as engaging primarily in the business of investing, reinvesting, and trading in securities, or issuers which own or propose to acquire securities (other than Government securities and securities of noninvestment company subsidiaries) having a value exceeding 40 percent of their total assets (other than Government securities and cash items). The bill does not cover companies which are not investment companies. It therefore excludes companies primarily engaged, directly or through subsidiaries, in the management and operation of a noninvestment business or businesses. It also specifically excludes brokers, underwriters, banks, insurance companies, holding companies subject to the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, and certain other types of companies. The bill makes provision for the exemption of employees' investment companies upon such conditions as may be prescribed by the Commission (secs. 3, 6).

Investment companies as so defined are subdivided into various types and classes according to corporate structure and investment policies, with the power in the Commission to make further subclassifications (secs. 4, 5).

Registration, disclosure of investment policies, and size: As a condition to the use of the mails and the facilities and instrumentalities of interstate commerce, every investment company is required to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission and to keep current the information contained in its registration statement. The registration statement must clearly describe the investment policy of the company. Provision is made for the simplification of the registration procedure by permitting the filing of copies of registration statements already filed under the acts now administered by the Commission (secs. 7, 8). No fundamental shift in the company's investment policy may be made without the vote of the holders of a majority of the company's voting securities (sec. 13).

To prevent the indiscriminate formation of investment companies, no investment company organized hereafter may make a public offering of its securities unless it has a net worth of at least $100,000 prior to such offering. To eliminate impediments to the efficient supervision of investments, to protect securities markets, and to prevent excessive concentration of wealth and control over industry, $150,000,000 is the maximum amount of assets which may be supervised by one management investment company (sec. 14).

Registration of management, depositors, and distributors: The bill provides for a simple registration with the Commission of individuals serving as officers, directors, investment advisers, depositors, principal underwriters, and distributors of the securities of investment trusts and companies. Registration can be denied or revoked only after a hearing and only upon the ground of conviction of a crime; an injunction by a court in connection with a security transaction; a violation of any of the provisions of this bill; or misrepresentation of material facts in the registration statement (sec. 9).

Capital structures, devices for, and transfers of control: Provision is made to eliminate in the future the evils of complex capital structures; to apportion voting power equitably among the security holders of existing companies, and to prevent unfair dilution of stockholders' interest in the company. The bill provides hereafter that investment companies may issue only common stock having equal voting rights with every outstanding share of the company's stock; and that the Commission shall, on application of security holders, and may on its own motion, after 2 years from the effective date of the bill, take steps to effect an equitable redistribution of voting rights and privileges among the security holders. The common law preemptive right of stockholders to purchase additional shares issued by their companies is restored (sec. 18). The sale of voting trust certificates is made unlawful, and rules and regulations may be formulated with respect to the solicitation of proxies (sec. 20). The bill does not contain any provision requiring the elimination from capital structure of senior securities outstanding at the present time.

In order to prevent the circumvention of the stockholders' fundamental right to elect directors—a circumvention frequently accomplished by wholesale resignations of directors and their replacement by insiders, without the knowledge of stockholders—the bill provides that directors may be replaced without a stockholders' vote only to the extent of one-third of their number (sec. 16).

To safeguard against the complete delegation of the duties of officers and directors, and against long-term and oppressive-management contracts, such contracts may run for a period of not exceeding 2 years, if approved by the company's stockholders, and may be renewed on a year-to-year basis, subject to the disapproval of stockholders. Management contracts must state precisely all compensation to be paid to the managers, may not provide for profit-sharing schemes of compensation, and may not be assigned (sec. 15).

Distribution and repurchases of investment-company securities: To prevent the rapid and unsound formation of investment companies by promoters interested primarily in "merchandising" securities and in "switching" investors from old to new companies, and to eliminate conflicting interests, the bill prohibits the promoters of one investment company, within any 5-year period, from promoting and then participating in the management or securities distributions of the new investment companies. The Commission is empowered to exempt companies and individuals from this and other closely related provisions on the basis of certain prescribed standards (sec. 11). As a further deterrent to switching operations, contracts to distribute the securities of open-end investment companies may not be long-term agreements and may not be assigned (sec. 15).

While publicly offered securities of investment companies must be registered under the Securities Act of 1933, provision is made to eliminate duplication in the material filed under that act and the present bill (sec. 24). The Commission is directed to adopt rules and regulations to protect investors against dilution of their equity caused by pricing abuses in the distribution and redemption of the companies' securities (secs. 22, 23). To prevent grosly excesisve sales loads on securities of open-end companies and of unit investment trusts, the Commission, after a hearing and after giving weight to various factors prescribed in the bill, is empowered to order the cessation or modification of such charges (sec. 22).

To prevent discriminatory repurchases of their own securities by investment companies whose security holders do not have the right to require redemption, the bill authorizes the Commission to promulgate rules, regulations, and orders to prevent such discrimination (sec. 23).

Limitation on speculative and other activities: Investment companies may not trade on margin or participate in joint trading accounts in portfolio securities. The Commission is authorized to prevent the short sale of portfolio securities by rules and regulations. Some types of investment companies may engage in underwriting activities, if consistent with their declared financial and investment policies, while other types may engage in such activities only to a lmited extent (sec. 12).

While loans by investment companies to natural persons are prohibited, loans to corporations may be made under certain specified conditions. Generally, investment companies are prohibited from borrowing, except for temporary purposes in an amount not exceeding 5 percent of the value of the company's total assets (sec. 21).

Elimination of conflicting interests: The bill requires that a majority of the board of directors of every registered investment company be persons having no common outside affiliation and independent of those receiving brokerage, management, or underwriting compensation. Certain other specific limitations upon the outside affiliations of persons who occupy important positions in the conduct of the investment company's business are also imposed. Each of such provisions is directed to a specific and dangerous conflict of duty or interest (sec. 10).

Prohibitions against transactions by insiders with the investment companies: The bill prohibits "self-dealing" between insiders and the investment companies—transactions with the company in which its officers, directors, managers, etc., or their affiliated companies or firms have a personal pecuniary interest. These prohibitions are concerned primarily with sales and purchases of securities and other property to or from the investment company, the obtaining of loans from the company and joint participations with the company in underwritings and other financial ventures. Gross misconduct or abuse of trust by directors, officers, managers, investment advisers, principal underwriters, and distributors is also made unlawful (sec. 17). To prevent the use of the funds of investment companies to aid affiliated underwriters in their investment banking business, investment companies may not purchase securities underwritten by such affiliated persons until more than 1 year after the public distribution of such securities (sec. 10).

Transactions among pyramided and affiliated companies: Future pyramiding of investment companies is made unlawful by a provision forbidding the purchase by investment companies of the securities of other investment companies, except in connection with reorganization plans approved by the Commission (secs. 12, 25). The bill does not require the simplification of existing systems of investment companies.

Purchases and sales of securities between companies in the same investment company system are subjected to the scrutiny of the Securities and Exchange Commission in order to insure their fairness and their consistency with the investment policies of the companies involved and the purposes of the bill (sec. 17). The Commission is authorized by rules, regulations, or order to require that a company in an investment company system supplying management services to the constituent companies render such service at cost, equitably allocated among the various companies (sec. 15).

Cross-ownership and circular ownership of voting securities between and among investment and other companies is prohibited (sec. 20). Cross-ownership and circular ownership have had the effect in the past of giving a deceptive appearance of enhanced valuation of the assets of the investment companies concerned, attributable solely to the mirroring in each company of increased values of its own cross or circularly held securities.

Voluntary and involuntary reorganization: In order to prevent unfair plans of voluntary and involuntary reorganization, recapitalization and dissolution, the bill provides that such plans may be disapproved by the Commission if it finds, after a hearing, that they are not fair and equitable to all classes of security holders affected (sec. 25).

Accounting practices: The Commission is authorized to prescribe uniform accounting and auditing methods and the scope of such audits; to require investment companies to file with it and to transmit to its security holders annual or other periodic and special reports; and to examine the books of investment companies. Independent public accountants for investment companies must be elected by the stockholders. Principal accounting officers including controllers of such companies, who participate in the preparation of financial statements filed with the Commission, must be elected by the stockholders or appointed by the directors (secs. 30, 31, 32).

Dividends: Investment companies are prohibited from paying dividends derived from sources other than their net income from interest and dividends ("ordinary" income), unless expressly authorized to do so by their charters or by vote of their security holders. Investment companies with more than one class of securities outstanding may not pay dividends, unless the securities senior to the security on which the dividend is to be paid are protected by a prescribed asset coverage (sec. 19).

Fixed trusts and certificates sold on the installment plan: To prevent the "orphaning" of fixed trusts and periodic payment plans, the bill provides that only banks and trust companies may act as trustees; requires the trust indenture to contain provisions enabling the trustee to be remunerated out of the trust funds; and prohibits the trustee or depositor from resigning except under prescribed conditions. The Commission is empowered, when any such trust has in fact become an "orphan," to bring proceedings in an appropriate Federal district court for the distribution of its assets to its security holders (secs. 26, 27).

To prevent the perpetration of frauds upon investors in the lowest income levels who may purchase investment certificates upon the installment plan, provision is made against excessive sales loads and excessive penalties and forfeitures for lapses and defaults (sec. 27).

Face-amount certificate companies: Companies which sell this type of investment contract are required to have a minimum paid-in capitalization of $250,000 and must maintain reserves in an amount sufficient to meet the maturity value of their certificates on their due dates. Such reserves must be invested in securities of a character similar to those usually required for the investment of life-insurance-company reserves, and the Commission may require such investments to be deposited with corporate trustees. To eliminate excessive penalties and forfeitures, provision is made with respect to cash surrender values (sec. 28). The Bankruptcy Act is amended to provide that deposits of securities and property made with State authorities for the benefit of future certificate holders shall be void as against the trustees in bankruptcy of such companies. It is also provided that any such trustee in bankruptcy shall be appointed by the court after giving the Commission an opportunity to be heard (sec. 29).

Other provisions: Settlements of claims against investment companies and their officers and directors for breaches of official duty and settlements of class suits by security holders must be approved by a court. The Commission is empowered to submit advisory reports to the courts with reference to such settlements (sec. 33).

The remaining sections of the title follow the pattern already established in the three acts now being administered by the Commission. These sections relate to definitions; the general powers of the Commission with respect to the issuance of rules and regulations; the administration and enforcement of the title; the right to judicial review of orders of the Commission; liability for misleading statements; and penalties for violation of the provisions of the title.

INVESTMENT ADVISERS

Registration, revocation, and exemptions: Title II of the bill deals with investment advisory services—individuals or organizations engaged in the business of furnishing for a consideration investment advice with respect to the purchase or sale of securities. Banks, attorneys, accountants, engineers, etc., who give investment advice only as an incident of their primary activities are excluded from the provisions of this title (title I, sec. 45 (16)). Investment advisers are required to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission and to disclose pertinent information as to their organization, nature, and character of their personnel, and methods of operation. The Commission is empowered, after a hearing, to deny or revoke the registration of any investment adviser on grounds identical with those provided for the denial or revocation of registration of officers, directors, etc., of investment companies (sec. 204).

Conflicts of interest and unlawful activities: The bill provides that it shall be unlawful for investment advisers to employ fraudulent devices in administering the funds of clients or to engage in any transaction which would operate as fraud on the clients. An investment adviser acting as principal in selling any security to a client is required to disclose to the client his personal interest in the transaction (sec. 206). The bill also prohibits compensation to investment advisers on a profit-sharing basis (sec. 205).

CONTINUANCE OF PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill providing $300,000,000 for the continuance of the public-works program. The bill authorizes loans to public bodies and nonprofit organizations for public works and makes an appropriation therefor. It provides a self-financing and self-perpetuating revolving fund which ultimately will cost the Federal Government nothing.

The cessation of Federal assistance in the form of loans to State and local bodies in the prosecution of a public-works program will bring serious economic consequences and add to the Nation's already critical problem of unemployment—unemployment of men and money.

Last September the Public Works Administration returned some 5,000 applications of public bodies for assistance in public works because of the failure of Congress to provide for the continuation of this important undertaking.

These 5,000 applications represented a great backlog of useful, sound public undertakings. If anything, the need for this work is greater today than it was when the applications were returned last fall. The bill I am introducing today will take up where the Public Works Act of 1938 left off.

From one end of the country to the other there is pressing need not only for employment but for the public structures American communities planned to erect under P. W. A. My bill will go a long way toward filling that need.

The bill I am proposing, in brief, continues the Public Works Administration, giving it a $300,000,000 revolving fund for this purpose. And every penny of that $300,000,000 will be returned to the Treasury.

My bill goes beyond the scope of the bill introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] in that the projects to be financed are not limited to hospitals, water works, and sewerage systems. Just as in the 1938 act, loans are to be made to public bodies, loans may also be made to nonprofit organizations to finance hospitals, health centers, clinics, colleges, schools, recreational facilities, or facilities for handling and storage of farm products, if such projects are devoted to public use.

Every loan must mature within the useful life of the project for which made, but not to exceed 50 years.

The bill requires that all workmen, laborers, and mechanics employed in the construction of any project shall be paid the prevailing wage for the corresponding classes of workmen employed on projects of a similar character in the same locality. No workman shall be compelled to work a greater number of hours per week than the applicable maximum established by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, or be compensated at a rate less than the applicable minimum rate established by that act.

The bill provides that obligations purchased thereunder, when sold by the United States, shall be guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Government. A guaranty fund for the payment of any demands which might be made under such guaranty is to be provided initially from the sales of securities now held in the P. W. A. portfolio. The interest rate is to be fixed by the Commissioner of Public Works so as to maintain the guaranty fund in a sufficient amount and to reimburse the Treasury for the interest it pays on the money placed in the revolving fund.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3589) to authorize loans to public bodies and nonprofit organizations for public works, and making an appropriation therefor, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. WILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. BROWN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MEAD submitted an amendment proposing to adjust the compensation of the messenger at special gallery door, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8913, the legislative appropriation bill, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $185,000 for hospital facilities for the Creek Nation, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 6, line 14, after "$250,000" and before "Provided", insert the following clause: "For the detection, prevention, and suppression of fires on lands within grazing districts, including the maintenance of patrols, the employment of field personnel, and purchase of necessary equipment, $130,000."

SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF NATURAL GAS AND PETROLEUM

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 245), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is hereby authorized to take testimony, investigate, and report to the Senate (a) whether any person, partnership, or corporation has violated, or is violating, the antitrust laws by acting in a manner which created a monopoly or tends to create a monopoly for the control of the production, transportation, sale, and distribution of natural gas and petroleum, and (b) whether the antitrust laws have been fully, adequately, and impartially enforced to enable consumers and potential consumers to obtain supplies of natural gas and petroleum on a competitive basis.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth Congress, to employ such assistance, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ADDRESS BY REAR ADMIRAL C. H. WOODWARD REFORE EASTERN SAFETY CONFERENCE

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Rear Admiral Clark H. Woodward, United States Navy, commandant of the third naval district, at the sixteenth annual eastern safety conference held at Newark, N. J., February 15, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTRACT FROM REPORT BY NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER TO CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE

[Mr. THOMAS of Utah asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a portion of the annual report of Nicholas Murray Butler, director of the division of intercourse and education, to the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, which appears in the Appendix.]

BERMUDA AND THE BRITISH WAR DEBT

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Lynn A. E. Gale entitled "If Bermuda Had Been American, Not British, Soil," which appears in the Appendix.]

RESOLUTIONS OF HOLLYWOOD CENTRAL YOUNG DEMOCRATS

[Mr. PEPPER (by request) asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by the president of the Hollywood Central Young Democrats, of Hollywood, Calif., together with resolutions adopted by that organization, which appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] had the floor and expressed a desire to continue his address today. In fact, he obtained unanimous consent to do so.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Yesterday a colloquy occurred between the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] upon the subject of some prosecutions taking place in the State of New Jersey, and the question was raised whether or not the prosecutions were under the Hatch Act. I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a newspaper article appearing in the Atlantic City Press under date of March 13. The heading is "Judy Clears McGrath—Dix's Fate Undecided at Midnight." At the end of the article it is stated that the prosecutions were not under the Hatch Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

[From the Atlantic City Press of March 13, 1940]

JURY CLEARS MCGRATH, DIX'S FATE UNDECIDED AT MIDNIGHT

Thomas McGrath, former Pleasantville W. P. A. supervisor, was exonerated on two indictments charging him with extortion and receiving political funds from W. P. A. workers by a jury in United States district court at Camden last night.

George Dix, his codefendant, was also found not guilty on the extortion indictment.

When the jury returned at 10:30 p. m., after 10 hours of deliberation, it brought in a verdict in the second indictment finding Dix guilty of receiving political funds but finding him not guilty of soliciting the money.

Judge Biggs told the jurors that they must find the defendant either guilty or not guilty of both soliciting and receiving the money from the W. P. A. workers. He said the two acts could not be separated in the verdict.

RETIRE AT MIDNIGHT

The jury again retired and at midnight they had reached no new verdict in the Dix case.

If he is convicted under this act, passed in 1883, he faces a maximum term of 5 years in prison and $5,000 fine on each count.

Twice during the afternoon the jury returned for instructions. On the first occasion they asked Judge Biggs if the charges came under the Hatch Act. They were told they did not.

On the second trip back to the bench, the jury asked if soliciting and receiving funds were the same and were told that the two acts were equally unlawful.

PLEADS FOR DIX

George Naame, counsel for Dix, in summing up the case for the jury, said that all eight W. P. A. workers who testified for the Government were a part of the Democratic organization in Pleasantville and had made volunteer contributions to their party through Dix.

"If Dix is guilty of receiving political contributions from Federal workers, then far greater Federal officials are guilty of far greater crimes," Naame said.

"POLITICAL ENEMIES

"You have the right to infer that these men were political enemies of Dix and that this was their way of getting even. Out of the 50 or more skilled workers who received exemptions and higher pay, only these few testified against these two men," Naame continued.

Robert McAllister, counsel for McGrath, pointed out to the jury that none of the men had testified to giving any money to his client.

But William F. Smith, assistant United States attorney, declared that it was not the Democratic Party on trial, but the two defendants, who, he said, "had been taking bread and butter out of the mouths of the W. P. A. workers.

"Do you think that these W. P. A. workers went to Dix every pay day and out of $65 received for 2 weeks, gave him $10 voluntarily?" Smith asked.

SAYS CLUB GOT MONEY

Smith said that he realized there were defects in the case against McGrath, but he declared that even if he aided and abetted Dix on the witness stand, he was equally guilty.

Dix, in taking the stand in his own defense, as the trial was resumed in the morning, declared that he had turned all the money which he collected over to the treasurer of the Pleasantville Democratic Club and said that it had been given to him voluntarily by the W. P. A. workers. He said he was suspended from the W. P. A. on October 20, 1939, and denied that he had any agreement with McGrath to force the payment by the workers.

Under cross-examination by Smith, Dix admitted that he held no office in the Mainland political club and denied that he used any of the money himself.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The information just divulged by the Senator from New Jersey is not quite complete in itself. This morning I also received information of the prosecution referred to. On yesterday I merely read into the RECORD what the newspaper said. The prosecutions were for offenses committed long before the passage of the act which was enacted last summer.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a day or two ago a friend of mine from New York told me a story which seems to me to illustrate pretty well what might be said about State sovereignty in this day and time. He said there was in his State a certain gentleman who was very fond of the game of poker. One evening, as he had done several times before, he had his friends in for a game. They enjoyed themselves very much that evening, so much so that when 12 o'clock arrived, the agreed time for quitting, the host suggested to his friends that they continue the game. One of his friends said, "Well, what about your wife? May she not perhaps object to our staying later?" The host said, "Oh, don't you worry about that. I will take care of that, fellows. We are having a good time. Let's just play right on. When it comes to my own household, fellows, I am a Julius Caesar." The game was resumed; and about that time the door opened, and the wife arrived. She said, "Good evening, gentlemen," and they rose and spoke. She said, "Gentlemen, in the dining room you will find food and drink. I want you to go in and partake of it as you will, and I want you to enjoy yourselves and stay just as long as you will stay." Then she turned and said, "But as for Julius Caesar, here, he is going to bed." [Laughter.]

State sovereignty will be about as secure as this gentleman's domestic sovereignty, it seems to me, if this bill is passed as proposed by the able Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator ought to have finished the story. Did Julius go to bed, as a matter of fact, or did he not?

Mr. PEPPER. The deduction of the able Senator from Nebraska was completely justified by the fact. Julius Caesar immediately retired. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, in justice to those of us who have opposed this bill, I want to say that it is our understanding of the bill, first, that it is not a clean-politics bill. It is not a bill to prevent corrupt practices in political campaigns.

It is not a bill to prevent excessive interference in political campaigns by moneyed interests of one sort or another; it is not a bill to prevent corporate enterprise or any other influence from reaching across State lines to interfere unjustly in any State campaign or election. It is not a bill for a civil-service system in the administrative agencies of this Government. It is not a bill which sets up a merit system for personnel in the agencies of the Federal Government, or in the agencies of State governments which receive Federal contributions. It is not a bill which tends to create a more competent staff of administrative officials. It strikes at no abuse which has been brought to the attention of the American Congress, because it deals with State activities, with State employees, in regard to State matters, and, so far as that subject is concerned, I know of no investigation, I know of no protest or clamor which comes from the people themselves in the several States demanding the passage of legislation of this character.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will come to my office I shall be glad to turn my files over to him, which include communications from every State of the Union.

Mr. PEPPER. I should be glad to know the nature of the communications and their number, to see whether they were representative of the several States of the Union. At least so far as has been disclosed on this floor, the initiative for this legislation comes from the able Senator from New Mexico, and perhaps others who have had unhappy experiences in their States, or anticipate that they might have unfortunate experiences, and it does not come from the masses of the people of America themselves. Therefore, we protest against the proposed legislation, because it is not designed to circumscribe the activities of Federal officials with respect to Federal affairs. It is not confined to curtailing coercion upon even State employees by State officials. It circumscribes the activities of the individual State employees in respect to matters in which they only may have a personal interest.

I would imagine, if I had heard just the early part of this debate, and perhaps had casually only read the bill, that it was designed to prevent the growing up of great State machines, of one sort or another, which might have some unwholesome influence in political life. If that were the only object of the bill, it would stop with the provision that State officials, if they are partially financed by Federal funds, may not coerce their employees and may not use their official power to interfere with an election. If that were the object of the bill, that would be a sufficient prohibition to reach the abuse at which it was aimed. But the able Senator from New Mexico stated on the floor of the Senate yesterday that if the language my amendment proposes to strike out, namely, "No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns," were stricken out, perhaps he would not vote for the bill.

So his point of emphasis is not the breaking down of State machines, it is not the curbing of coercion on the part of State officials against their employees, it is not intended to restrain State officials from interfering with local elections; it is to circumscribe the activities of individual men and women in their own States, in dealing with their own local affairs on their own initiative. They do not have to act in concert; they do not have to act in an organized way which might constitute a menace, which might constitute interference. They may go in either one of their several directions, and they will violate this law whether their political activity is on their own initiative or that of some relative in the family, or because of their political convictions or what not. I say that goes too far to serve the legitimate purposes of this kind of legislation, and that in carrying it too far the able Senator is going to defeat the noble purposes which lie behind this legislation.

I might give a recent example of how that principle is going to work out as to another agency of the Government. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has risen into the highest esteem which perhaps any agency of Government enjoys among the people of this country. Everyone was in favor of its activities; Congress appropriated liberally for it; we all lauded its efforts. Then what happened? It crept further and further and further in its zeal, in its interference with local affairs, until finally, not the Senator from Florida but the Interstate Commerce Committee of the United States Senate, in the last few days reported a resolution for an investigation of that agency, after the subject was pointed to by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and after a resolution had been offered by the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN].

This indicates that when we go too far we get an unfavorable reaction. We do not desire to curb the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. We want it to be an efficient, effective functioning agency to protect the people of America. But just as soon as it loses its sense of discretion, just as soon as it throws off reasonable restraint, just as soon as it gives way to excessive zeal there begins a reaction, and we find the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives calling Mr. Hoover before it and interrogating him about his activities, with a view to diminishing his appropriation if they found him going beyond what they thought were reasonable activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Involved in the pending bill is the danger of the Federal Government, if the language to which I have referred remains in the bill, attempting to police every man and woman out of about 2,800,000 who work for the Several States of this country. It is an impossible task administratively. It will merely mean that an army of snoopers will be all through the State organizations; that employees will be encouraged to report on one another, and concoct some kind of a story just before election. Perhaps one will say, "I heard Miss Smith, the lady who got a raise when I did not, say that she was going to vote for Mr. So-and-So." And they will be bringing it to the attention of the Attorney General, and asking him to send out an investigator to find out whether Miss Smith said, "Tonight I am getting up a little party at my house to forward the candidacy of Mr. So-and-So," or whether she said tonight she was merely going to have a little party at her house, and she only said she was in favor of Mr. So-and-So.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator speaks of going too far. Have we not a perfect illustration of that kind of thing in the prohibition amendment to the Constitution, and the Volstead Act? Certainly no legislation was ever put on the statute books to carry out a higher purpose or a nobler motive than the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. Yet they went too far. Public sentiment was not for the amendment or for the act; and what happened? There was so much violation of law, so much disregard of law, so much disregard of the American Constitution itself, that we had to repeal the amendment, and then, of course, repeal the act.

The great trouble, when we go too far, is that we not only invite violations of the act we pass, but we breed and create disrespect for all law and all constituted authority of government. In the particular instance the Senator is so well discussing and clearly pointing out, we go beyond public sentiment, we go beyond what the people themselves believe is right and justified, and we get this kind of reaction, reaction not only against the law we pass, but against all government and all constituted authority.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator from Alabama, and I agree a hundred percent with every word he has said. There never was an effort made to do such a thing which did not come from a generous and a noble and a wholesome impulse. But some of the most severe criticisms which have been directed against any part of the New Deal program have come from those who have conscientiously thought that perhaps we went a little further than the facts and circumstances imperatively justified or required. If the able Senator from New Mexico is to have the great legislation which he has already put upon the statute books remain upon the statute books, if it is to be permanent American policy, he would better be satisfied with reasonable success.

I said this bill was not a civil-service bill. The Senator from New Mexico knows that there is pending in a committee of the Senate a bill which has passed the House of Representatives, sponsored by Representative RAMSPECK, of Georgia, providing broad extension of the civil service in this country. That presents a square-cut issue: Do you believe in civil service, or do you not? Do you believe in the merit system for the selection of personnel, or do you not? But the able Senator from New Mexico is not giving us a civil-service system, a merit system; he is not saying, "Let us amalgamate this bill with the Ramspeck bill." He is not saying, "Let us take a committee and hash this thing over and put into this very legislation, perhaps, a corrupt practice bill, a civil-service bill, and a bill to improve the conduct of personnel and restrict pernicious political activity."

I believe that if this bill had been limited to pernicious political activities, as was contemplated in the Miller amendment, there would not have been any substantial controversy about its passage, but to say that the Federal Government shall go into a county in Alabama, or Florida, or Nebraska, and ferret out a stenographer, ferret out a janitor, ferret out a doorkeeper, ferret out a file clerk, ferret out a State highway engineer, a man working on the road with a pick and shovel, a man running a grading machine, a girl who is perhaps running a machine such as a comptometer and shall police the political activities of every one of those men and women in respect to local affairs, is the most preposterous proposal I have ever heard suggested since I have been in the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to inquire exactly what the Senator's amendment is. As I understand, it is an amendment dealing with certain language of section 12.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct. I wish the Senate to know exactly the purpose of my amendment. I propose by my amendment to strike out the following language in lines 21 and 22, on page 4, in section 12:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

My amendment does not affect the language which appears previous to the language which I would delete, as follows:

> No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

I do not by my amendment impair that language. It deals with the pernicious political activity which the Senator from New Mexico wants to strike at, as I understand, but I do want to take out the curb which he proposes upon the activity which is engaged in by the individual employee upon his or her own initiative.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the words that are proposed to be stricken from section 12 of the measure are simply:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. STEWART. In the print which appears on our desks this morning, which is a print ordered to be made of the measure, together with the amendments adopted to date, the amendment which the Senator has offered would appear in lines 23 and 24.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, that is not the official bill. That print was provided simply for the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to ask the Senator another question concerning his amendment. What effect would it have on the original Hatch Act?

Mr. PEPPER. It would not affect the original Hatch Act in any way whatsoever.

Mr. STEWART. While I am on my feet I may ask the Senator another question. In the reprinted copy of the bill which lies on our desks this morning, which is the original bill together with the amendments which have so far been adopted, on page 7, lines 21 and 22, it is provided that when any employee has violated the act, and within the period of 18 months been reemployed, a sum twice the amount of the annual salary of such employee may be withheld by the Government from its loans or grants to a State. With respect to that amount, which is referred to as twice the amount of the annual salary of such employee, is it the purpose of that provision, or could such a construction be placed on it, that the employee himself shall lose his salary?

Mr. PEPPER. No; Mr. President, I assume the fair interpretation would be that the amount is to be withheld from the State or from the agency affected, and not to be taken from the individual.

Mr. STEWART. I assume that to be correct, but I was wondering whether the amount which is to be fixed at twice the salary of the employee would affect the individual's salary or be deducted from his salary.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it would not affect his salary except, of course, that by his conviction he would lose his job, and therefore, of course, lose his salary.

Mr. STEWART. Let me ask the Senator one more question and then I am through. Section 12 provides that if an employee violates the provisions of this measure he cannot be employed for a period of 18 months, and it imposes the penalty to which I just referred. The Senator yesterday afternoon in his argument said that the original Hatch Act, in section 9, subsection (b) thereof, provides that a United States Government employee violating the act cannot be reemployed at any time within 18 months, or after 18 months, or at any time in his lifetime.

Mr. PEPPER. He cannot be reemployed in that job under the Federal Government; that is correct. That appears in subsection (b) of section 9.

Mr. STEWART. The act reads:

> No part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

He could be employed otherwise in another capacity by the United States Government.

Mr. PEPPER. But the Senator can well imagine what chance he would have for reemployment if he first had been discharged for violation of one of the provisions of the law. That would certainly be placed on his record; so it would be a black mark against him, and he certainly would not stand much chance of reemployment.

Mr. President, that concludes what I wanted to say about the bill. The able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] yesterday placed in the RECORD tables published in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which indicated that over a billion dollars a year is given by the Federal Government in aid to the several States, and Senators will be astonished when they discover how many ramifications there will be to this bill if enacted. In other words, it is almost an assurance that the major part of all these State and local employees will in one way or another be affected by the provisions of the bill which I am trying to strike out. I submit to the able and statesmanlike Senator from New Mexico that it is wiser, it is better, it is safer, it is more just to leave the original Hatch Act as it now stands on the statute books, and retain the pernicious political activities provision of the bill—and it would still remain in this bill if my amendment should be adopted—but cut out the ultimate extension of the measure to the local activities of employees of the several States in dealing with local matters only.

In justification of the opposition of some of us who generally favor the extension of Federal power, I thought it was appropriate to say that the reasons suggested indicate why we are not in favor of this provision of the bill.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Shipstead
Austin	George	Lucas	Smathers
Bankhead	Gerry	McCarran	Smith
Barbour	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Barkley	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Bilbo	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Green	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Guffey	Miller	Townsend
Burke	Gurney	Minton	Tydings
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Vandenberg

Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pepper	White
Connally	Holman	Reed	Wiley
Danaher	Holt	Reynolds
Davis	Hughes	Russell
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand, the vote is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 21, after the word "thereof" and the period, it is proposed to strike out the following language: "No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

RAILROADS IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what purpose does the Senator from Maryland rise?

Mr. TYDINGS. The vote has not yet been started, and I understand no Senator has the floor. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in the last session of Congress—that is, the session which adjourned in 1939—the Senate passed Senate bill 1785, dealing with railroads in Alaska. The bill went to the House, and the House, instead of acting on the Senate bill, passed a similar House bill. The House bill has a slight variation from the Senate bill, which does not change the philosophy of the bill but somewhat restricts the source of the money. There is practically no difference between the two bills. I know of no objection to the bill. We have been urged to pass the bill at an early date. As the measure passed both Houses in almost idential form, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be taken up and passed at this time, so that it may be disposed of. The work should be begun as promptly as possible.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, in the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee——

Mr. TYDINGS. This bill has nothing to do with interstate commerce. It involves the use of some busses in the public parks to augment the railroad system. So far as I know, it has not the slightest relation to interstate commerce. The Department has been urging the passage of the bill for a long time, and I have been awaiting an opportunity to ask for its consideration. The bill is a very mild local measure for Alaska.

Mr. REED. I accept the statement of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 4868) to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved March 12, 1914 (38 Stat. 305), as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:
> "That in order to provide for the adequate housing, feeding, and transportation of the visiting public and residents of Mount McKinley National Park in Alaska, there is authorized to be appropriated out of the general funds of the Treasury a sum not to exceed the sum of $30,000; and the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate lodges, and other structures and appurtenances incident thereto; to purchase, upon such terms as he may deem proper, the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. that are operated and used in said park under contract authorization by the Department of the Interior, and the equities of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. in the business developed and conducted in connection therewith; to purchase or otherwise acquire motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and all necessary fixtures and equipment, and to operate, repair, recondition, and maintain the same in order to carry out the purpose of this act, notwithstanding the restrictions imposed by law with regard to the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles; and to operate or sell the equipment and facilities herein authorized, directly or by contract or contracts with any individual, company, firm, or corporation, under such schedule of rates, terms, and conditions, as he may deem proper."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. That, of course, presupposes that the pending business is temporarily laid aside for the consideration of this bill, and that we automatically return to the consideration of the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would so rule.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill, H. R. 4868, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the amendment reported by the Committee. On this question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably detained on important official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If the Senator from New Hampshire were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from Illinois were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I am informed that if the Senator from California were present, he would vote "nay," and that if the Senator from Utah were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. If present, the Senator from North Dakota would vote "nay," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on departmental business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea," and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am advised, however, that he would vote as I intend to vote and that he has a special pair on this question. I am therefore at liberty to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—28

Adams	Caraway	Hayden	McKellar
Andrews	Connally	Herring	Minton

So Mr. PEPPER's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. DANAHER, and Mr. THOMAS of Utah addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate voted on an amendment which I proposed limiting contributions in campaigns to $1,000. It voted the amendment down. It is possible there may be some Members of the Senate who believe that excessive contributions constitute a pernicious political practice but feel that $1,000 is too small a limitation. I now offer an amendment exactly the same as the one voted on yesterday, except the limitation is $5,000 to any one contributor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. (a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee or political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate or political party nominee for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity, and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(c) Presidential electors and the President of the United States for the purpose of this act are declared to be elective officers.

(d) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person, directly or indirectly, in excess of $5,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

(e) Any person who directly or indirectly contributes more than $5,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election in violation of the provisions of this section is guilty of pernicious political activity and on conviction shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not exceeding 5 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not care to make any further remarks on the principle involved in this amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained on important public business. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I have been informed that I can transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], which I do, and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE and Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are absent on departmental business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is unavoidably detained.

I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I announce that on this question the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If the Senator from New Hampshire were present, he would vote "nay," and I am informed the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If the Senator from California were present, he would vote "nay," and I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. If the Senator from North Dakota were present, he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. BANKHEAD's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. BROWN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Alabama to reconsider the amendment just adopted. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senators from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY and Mr. MILLER], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE and Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are absent on departmental business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is unavoidably detained.

I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "nay," and the Senator from Utah would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. If present, the Senator from North Dakota would vote "nay," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. BANKHEAD's motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, since the Chair has ruled that an addition to the committee amendment is now in order, as was ruled in the case of the Bankhead amendment, I ask that the amendment which I offer and send to the desk be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

(a) Hereafter no person shall be appointed to any position or employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or in any agency or department thereof, if, during the 2-year period immediately preceding such appointment or employment, such person has taken an active part in political management or in a political campaign for the purpose of affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession.

(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to persons appointed to the Cabinet or to persons appointed to the office of Ambassador or other public minister.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the theory of the Hatch Act and also the Hatch bill which is now involved is the theory which puts restraints upon the officeholder. My amendment would put the same restraints which are upon officeholders also upon potential officeholders. In other words, as the Hatch Act and the Hatch bill deal with actuals, my amendment deals with potentials.

The bill now before the Senate has been described by its protagonists and by newspapers supporting it as a "pure politics bill." The opponents maintain that a more accurate description might be "the purely politics bill," or "the purely Republican politics bill."

The noble purpose of the bill in theory may in practice become strictly partisan. This is demonstrated by the unanimous support given the measure by the minority Members of this body despite the fact that their party held control of Federal affairs for many years and never even attempted to put a sweeping enactment of this kind on the statute books. In fact, down through the years, the desire of the Republican Party for clean politics has been mostly conspicuous by its absence.

Of course, every boy who reads the history of the political parties in America has long ago quite glibly termed "the Republican Party, a party of expediency," one always willing to change its stand in regard to anything in order to accomplish its purposes. It is therefore even marked down in the textbooks as a "party of expediency." On the other hand, the Democratic Party has stood as a party of principle. It has faced defeat, terrific defeat, but because its feet were well grounded upon principle, never once in the history of the country has it come to the point of being completely shattered. In 1932 the Republican Party was almost completely shattered. In 1936 it received another stinging blow. Judging from the splendid way in which the unanimous vote of the Republican Members of this body has been cast to sustain the Hatch amendment in favor of pure politics, one cannot help believing that as a result of these two stinging defeats a reformation has set in, and that the party today actually stands sincerely in favor of clean politics, as it boasts.

Mr. President, I grant them all of that. I could grant them even more, and in order that they may sustain their position before the country I am offering this amendment, so that they can sincerely vote for clean politics even when it applies to a Republican. That, in a nutshell, is the reason for the amendment.

We are all cognizant of the fact that every effort made in this body to restrict or to control the use of vast sums of money from private sources to swing elections has been stubbornly fought by Republican leadership. The last vote shows that I am probably mistaken in the deduction which I made a moment or two ago, because unanimously again we find them voting against the restriction of big donations, even though every Member of this body realizes that there is no greater evil and no greater danger to the American system of free elections. When the Republican leaders have yielded on the question of controlling the money power in primaries and elections, they have done so stubbornly and grudgingly.

So it should be realized at the outset that this legislation is concerned with a comparatively minor part of the broad question of clean elections, while the major evil is left untouched and unchecked. On several occasions the Senate has found it necessary to bar duly elected Members from taking their seats here because of the corrupt and scandalous use of money in elections. This has happened on two occasions in comparatively recent times, and in each case the offender was a Republican. And it is interesting to note that on each occasion the bulk of his party members stood loyally by and tried to have him seated, despite the taint on his election credentials.

With this in mind, it is easy to understand why we question the zeal of the minority party leaders in their unanimous support of the pending legislation. Their course of action lends color and substance to the belief that they are not interested in clean government so much as they are in the patent fact that, if enacted, this legislation will give them a strong partisan advantage in the coming Presidential election.

I realize the temper of this body, and I realize the fact that many Senators are supporting the pending amendment to the Hatch Act from the highest of motives. We who are doing this sincerely believe that its enactment will tend to rub out grave abuses in the elective system. With those holding this purpose I have no quarrel.

Yet I wish to point out that in its present form the proposed legislation will work a grave hardship on the party in power and confer a corresponding advantage on the minority party. For that reason I have offered an amendment to correct that situation, which reads as follows:

SEC. —. (a) Hereafter no person shall be appointed to any position or employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or in any agency or department thereof, if, during the 2-year period immediately preceding such appointment or employment, such person has taken an active part in political management or in a political campaign for the purpose of affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession.

(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to persons appointed to the Cabinet or to persons appointed to the office of Ambassador, public minister, or consul.

The intent of the original Hatch Act and the pending amendment was to bar subordinate employees who might be receiving all or part of their income from Federal sources from participating in Federal elections or engaging in political activities of any kind. I think this should be the law. I have supported the act up to the present time, and I will, of course, vote for the amendment to the act. There is no disputing the fact that persons in power have natural advantages, and those advantages must be restrained if they are improperly used.

I had the opportunity of witnessing the second great "Ja" election in Germany, the election of 1934, which was almost unanimous in sustaining the action of the German leader. The party in power had complete control of all the activities of government. There was not a railway engine, there was not a streetcar, there was not a post-office truck which did not carry a banner, "Vote 'Ja' in this election." Every instrument of government was used to bring about the almost unanimous result.

When the Senator from New Mexico realized that American democracy might be destroyed whenever the zealots in power attempted to coerce or to use their power in an improper manner he was on the right track, and he should be sustained by every Member of this body, and I believe he will be sustained on the final vote when it is taken.

The two-party system must be maintained at all hazards or democracy will cease to exist. It is because of my respect for the two-party system, it is because of my respect for the Republicans on the other side who also have respect for the two-party system, that I realize that when it comes to this amendment they are going to be fair. They should be fair, or they will stand forever in the position of having to face the charge which has already been made, that instead of this being a "pure-politics bill," it is a "purely Republican-politics" bill. By their votes you shall know them, Mr. President, and I am looking forward to the vote which the Senators on the other side will cast in this particular.

Members of Congress and policy-making officials of the Government are exempt from its provisions, although it may be questioned, as has already been said so many times, whether they are not in a position to wield a more unhealthy influence upon elections than some mere department clerk or stenographer who has relatively little influence and no way of imposing his beliefs and opinions upon others.

The theoretical purpose of the act is to prevent those holding Government positions from perpetuating themselves in office by their own activities. The difficulty is that, like so many other experiments noble in purpose, it is too sweeping in its provisions and actually embodies a degree of injustice which should never be tolerated.

In the first place, it gives the impression that a stigma might be attached to the young man or the young woman who secures Government employment. The bill actually prohibits pernicious activities, such as the use of official position for political purposes. In practice it may go far beyond that, and there, Mr. President, is its striking danger. If, for example, men take advantage when there is no restriction, will such men be curbed by a mere restriction when the restriction is entirely one-sided?

The act as it will stand when amended may be administered unwisely and it may therefore forbid even the most innocent kind of participation in political organization. Everyone knows that advice which is given about political activity is generally taken in stronger degree than it is given. Young officeholders are barred from giving public expression to their belief, or from taking part in political clubs, even if they confine their activity to a time outside their office hours. No one wants to interfere with such innocent activity, yet a faulty administration may prohibit it.

I imagine that every Member of the Senate on occasion has appeared before a gathering of young folks and earnestly and sincerely besought them to take an active part in public life. It is universally recognized that the wide participation of able and honest young people in politics is one of the healthiest things that can happen in a democracy. But most of the young people in this country are not financially independent. They are not in a position to carry on their interest in public affairs as a polite and interesting avocation.

We advise them to participate in public affairs and yet when they take that advice, we pass legislation which, if improperly administered, in effect may take away some of their most precious rights as citizens. The cure may be too sweeping for the alleged evil which it seeks to correct. The persons affected by the pending legislation are not in the same category as civil-service employees. They are not given the protection of the civil-service law; they are not assured of continued employment in the event of a change of administration. Their tenure of office is dependent upon the success of the party to which they belong, a fact which every fair-minded person recognizes.

Every Member of the Senate has been in politics for the greater part of a lifetime. Many Senators started by holding minor positions in the Government service, positions that now come under the ban of the Hatch Act. There was nothing to prevent them from devoting their time and enthusiasm to political activities, and no one would assert that they are unworthy of membership in this body because they took advantage of such an opportunity.

I am at a loss to know how we are going to develop a class of responsible and capable people, with the necessary knowledge and experience of government, if we propose to discourage young people from entering public life. And despite whatever protests may be made, that is exactly what this legislation may do if administered in an ill way. Still legislation is necessary to correct abuses and, therefore, one finds himself wondering where the degree of restraint should be placed. The author of the bill has been very wise, and those who have sustained him with their votes have been very wise, to limit the provisions of the bill to activities on the part of certain definitely described persons and to certain definite evils. Those who have voted against amendments which would broaden the provisions of the measure to make it comparable to an ordinary corrupt-practices act fail to realize that to accomplish a little now and a little some other time is the way in which to bring about great reforms in this land. Therefore I believe, as I said Saturday, that those who have voted against amendments directed against truly greater pernicious political activities than those proscribed in the law have been inconsistent in their votes.

However, I should like to return to my proposition that the original act and the pending bill will give a tremendous partisan advantage to the minority party, who constitute the outs. Every practical person knows the amount of drudgery and routine work connected with a national election. The task of carrying a campaign to every voting citizen in the land as it should be done in a democracy is not a simple matter. There is small reward for the labor involved and the task never could be accomplished without the tireless support of thousands of loyal workers in the ranks. The party in power has natural advantages, and if we are to be fair, those advantages should be restrained.

The pending legislation, however, forbids a person from participating in any manner if he happens to hold even the most inconsequential Federal position. But, I ask again, why put the penalty merely upon one side? I repeat that in its administration it may do more harm than good if it is allowed to remain one-sided in its nature. There is no limitation at all on those who engage in campaign activities precisely because they wish to obtain a Federal job.

Mr. President, I dislike very much to repeat, and I trust in my remarks of today I have not repeated anything I said Saturday, but I cannot refrain from calling attention to President Grover Cleveland's inaugural address, when the beginning of political reform was in the mind of all our people and when Cleveland actually was elected because he supported the idea of reform. Cleveland realized and understood that pernicious political activity could be indulged in on both sides, and in his inaugural address he condemned quite as much the dishonest and pernicious and wicked activity on the part of those hungry for jobs as on the part of those trying to keep their jobs.

I may suggest a simple illustration. If we curb the activities of a United States district attorney in attempting to protect himself in his job, should we not put some kind of restraining influence upon the person who is trying to get his job? The restraint under this amendment is a simple one. It is merely a cooling-off process. It really says that the person who is a would-be officeholder shall wait 2 years if he has taken part in pernicious political activity before he may be appointed to the office in question. Under the bill, an officeholder is barred from activity on the theory that he might do something which would help him retain his position, while the individual on the outside, who has no other motive than the desire to get an office, may participate to his heart's desire.

Mr. President, unless we make the legislation double-barreled, unless we restrict the potential as well as the actual, an exceedingly interesting conflict may arise. For example, since today the National Government is in Democratic control, and we are making our argument entirely on the basis of good government, and not on the basis of politics; since the administrators of the various acts that call for cooperative action on the part of the State and the Nation are all of Democratic persuasion; since, therefore, the money which reaches the officeholder in theory comes through Democratic channels, what will happen in a State where Democratic officeholders, who were Democratic in the beginning, have been able to keep their jobs, when a Republican administration comes in, and the Federal Government and an honest State government, attempting to emulate the ideas of civil service and to prevent the evils of the spoils system, leave those persons in their jobs? Suppose the Governor, who is responsible for the actions of his subordinates, and his subordinates are in conflict with the party in power. There is a confusion there that can be removed only by making the restrictions applying to civil-service employees apply also to those having non-civil-service status. Make the act apply to Democrats and Republicans alike. Make it apply to actual and potential employees alike.

I have offered this amendment in an attempt to correct this manifest injustice. If the Congress intends to limit the political activities of one class of voters, it should, in all fairness, extend the same limitations to all classes. The amendment specifically states that an individual who has participated in election activities is barred for 2 years from appointment to the executive branch of the Government, or any of the departments or agencies. The amendment, of course, exempts the Cabinet and the diplomatic corps.

This amendment is in keeping with the spirit of the Hatch Act. Obviously, if we intend, by legislation, to purify the motives of those who play a part in public life, we should be consistent and apply the same test to all on an equal basis.

Mr. President, in the States which have corrupt-practice acts, the laws which govern corrupt practices restrain the activities of individuals, not the activities of Democrats or the activities of Republicans. Can we not make this act one which will actually restrain the activities of individuals instead of restraining the activities of a political party? It is obviously unfair to impose restrictions on one group and withhold them from another.

Unless my amendment is included, there is no question that the pending legislation will work a heavy injustice on the majority party. It will be hindered and handicapped while the minority party will be free to use the full corps of prospective officeholders as an integral part of its campaign machinery. Spokesmen for the opposition party have made no secret of their intention to throw out the bulk of the present non-civil-service employees in the event of their return to power. In fact, they have made this one of their outstanding campaign boasts. They have been unable to make use of the phrase "turn the rascals out" because corruption has not been a characteristic trait of the present administration. Likewise, the phrase has too many unhappy connotations for good Republican usage. But they have heralded to the world their intention to turn out the "dreamers and the visionaries," a broad term which they use to cover all those who believe that modern problems are worth some time and attention.

My amendment, then, is really a test of good faith. It is designed to reveal whether we propose to legislate against all those who take part in politics with the hope of securing employment, or only those who happen to belong to one political party. It is expected that thousands of eager hopefuls will be ranging the countryside this summer and fall pleading the cause of the minority party, and incidentally keeping a weather eye cocked for a good juicy plum for themselves. They will be indulging in politics up to the hilt, and engaging in all kinds of activities which are forbidden to present officeholders under the terms of the Hatch bill. The distinction between these two classes is too small for the normal eye and much too small for a moral eye. If the political rights of one group are to be circumscribed, then surely the same ban should apply to the other group.

I have an instinctive aversion to the restriction of political liberties, no matter under what patriotic guise it may be cloaked. No objection may be raised to the desire of those who wish to curb pernicious activities of the kind which every thoughtful citizen deplores. The practice of officeholders using their official position to influence elections is universally condemned. But the pending legislation may go far beyond any such purpose; and there is no doubt in my mind that it imposes curbs and limitations that may arise at some future time to plague Members of the Congress. We are all aware of the fact that serious proposals have been advanced in many States to take the franchise away from those unfortunates who are dependent on relief funds or W. P. A. jobs for their subsistence. Perhaps it is more than a coincidence that the arguments advanced in favor of such legislation are precisely those used in support of the pending legislation. It is a dangerous tendency, and I have no wish to give it open or even tacit support. This we might do unless we make the legislation fair and cause it to apply to the "outs" as well as the "ins."

In any event, the pending legislation as it stands is one-sided. If we are to do the job, let us be honest and go the whole way. Any Senator who honestly believes in the principle of the Hatch bill should be ready and willing to support the amendment which I have proposed. The office seeker certainly should not be given an advantage over the officeholder. What is fair for one is fair for the other.

As the law now stands, there is no ban on the right or the advantage taken by one who is out to speak or write or engage in any form of activity he sees fit, even though it be understood that he may have a large stake in the outcome of the election. The humble officeholder, however, is barred from any real political activity. If it is too much to expect that they should be made equal before the law, at least we might be able to correct a part of the injustice by putting the officeholder and the office seeker on the same footing. That is what my amendment proposes to do.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator please withhold the quorum call?

Mr. President, I listened with interest, as I always do, to the remarks of the able junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. If I caught his amendment aright, it would render any person ineligible to appointment to office in any position in any executive branch of the Federal Government, or in any agency or department thereof, if during the 2-year period immediately preceding such appointment or employment such person had taken an active part in political management or in a political campaign.

Mr. President, subsection (b) of the amendment of the able Senator exempts persons appointed to the Cabinet or persons appointed to the office of ambassador or other public minister. I do not perceive why the amendment should make any distinction. I do not see why we should render a person ineligible to one office but not to another. The amendment is retroactive. It is not ex post facto, in the sense of the law, but it is retroactive; and, strange as it may seem, retroactive laws are not unconstitutional as such.

Mr. President, I move to strike out subsection (b) of the amendment of the able Senator, so that if the amendment should be adopted and become law it would apply to persons who seek to become Cabinet members or heads of departments. It would also apply to persons who seek the office of ambassador or other public minister.

Mr. President, some of the largest contributions that have been made to political campaign chests have been made by men who sought—and sometimes were appointed to—the office of ambassador or other public minister. Until lately it was almost impossible for a citizen to aspire to the honor of serving his country as ambassador unless, forsooth, he had a large fortune and had contributed no small part of that fortune to the campaign chest of the successful party.

Mr. President, I do not perceive any reason why the law should not apply to members of the Cabinet if it is to apply to other aspirants to office. Unless one makes a careful study of the powers which attend the office of a Cabinet minister, it is impossible to imagine or believe that it has such tremendous power. Yet under the amendment of the able Senator we are exempting from the provisions of this section, in haec verba, persons who may aspire to the Cabinet or to the office of ambassador or other public minister.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I wonder if the Senator has been thoughtful about the fact that the amendment which I suggested is an amendment to the Hatch Act and also an amendment to the Hatch bill, and that under the Hatch Act the President, of course, is exempt? Therefore, the amendment should be consistent with the act itself.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator knows how little use I have for any action which is apologized for or argued for upon the mere ground of consistency, because I believe consistency to be public enemy No. 1. [Laughter.]

I am arguing the amendment of the able Senator from its own four corners. When I say "able" I do not use that word as a mere gesture in replying to the remarks of the junior Senator from Utah. I am sincere when I say "able." He is, in my judgment, one of the philosophers of the Senate as well as one of its scholars, and he must excuse me if I address myself to his amendment as he has presented it.

I am not interested, so far as this speech is concerned, with what the other provisions of the Hatch Act may be or what the other provisions of the amendments to what is known as the Hatch bill may be. I am arguing simply as to this particular amendment.

In the first place, Mr. President, in the past 7 years we in the Senate and in all other places in America have been under tremendous excitement. We have reasoned from nonexistent premises, and we have reached such conclusion as is always reached by reasoning from nonexistent premises. We have—and I am as much to blame for this as is any other individual Senator—passed law after law without even a gesture toward syntax or accuracy in using words. That has caused great trouble to the courts. We can save the courts much trouble and save citizens much trouble if we define words or use words with the connotation of their actual meaning.

For example, consider the word "active." If this bill becomes a law, it will probably go to the courts when somebody is accused of an active interest in politics. Very well; consult any dictionary. "Active" is an antonym of and the opposite of dormant or quiescent or extinct. "Active" means quick in physical movement, not dormant, not quiescent, not extinct.

The word "perniciously" does not appear before the adjective "active" in the able Senator's amendment. If the Senator had written it "perniciously active part," he would have thrown more light on the meaning, but still the courts would be driven to explore the definition of "perniciously."

Pernicious has—and if I am in error the able Senator will correct me—a Latin root, probably the word "nex," "necis," death, destruction, and with the prefix "per"—through—meaning through or leading to ruin, to death; so that a pernicious action would be one that would cause death or some malign or malignant influence or result.

Pernicious is legitimate locution. It has been used correctly, in my judgment, by the author of the legislation. But there is quite a difference between being "perniciously active in politics" and "active in politics."

I move to strike out the word "an" and insert the words "a perniciously", in line 6 before the adjective "active"; I think this would strengthen his amendment.

Mr. President, this bill, if it becomes law, is going to be a subject of a great deal of dispute among our fellow citizens and in the courts. I believe it would popularize the measure in the Senate and in the other branch of Congress if we struck from the amendment of the able Senator that provision which exempts persons appointed to positions in the Cabinet. In fact, Mr. President, one of the most active men in politics I ever knew—and I do not say that he took an improper activity—was appointed Attorney General some years ago in a previous administration. I know of instances, in my own party as well as in other political parties, of men who were perniciously active in politics being appointed to Cabinet positions. I know of instances of men who made enormously large contributions to their party's campaign chests being appointed ambassadors and foreign ministers, though in the most remote excursion of the imagination they would never have been considered for appointment had they not made enormous contributions or been thus perniciously active in politics.

Now we are treading on, I do not say dangerous ground, but we are treading on ground concerning which many people, as good as Senators are—and we are pretty good, or we think we are—doubt the wisdom.

I am a supporter of this Hatch bill; I voted for the Hatch bill which became a law, I am supporting the pending bill, and I think the able Senator from New Mexico, with a persistency, calmness, and a courage that well becomes any man, has driven forward in presenting and advocating his bill.

This bill will fail if it shall be loaded down with many more amendments such as subsection (b) of the amendment of the able Senator from Utah.

Therefore, Mr. President, at the proper time I shall move to strike from the amendment of the able Senator, section (b), so that if it shall become law a man will not be qualified or eligible for a Cabinet position or for the position of ambassador or other public minister if he comes within the purview of the law.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly I yield to the able Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has based his entire argument, I judge, from some of the facts he has adduced, on the assumption that a contribution of money to a political campaign fund of the appointing official is prohibited by this section.

I wish to say to the Senator that, under the statements of law the Senator from New Mexico has repeatedly made here, contribution of funds by a gentleman who wanted to be ambassador, we will say, to Belgium or Russia, or any other place, would not make him ineligible for appointment under the provisions of the Thomas amendment. I think the Senator should modify his proposal, in line 7, by adding language to this effect, so that the sentence would read:

> Such person has taken an active part in political management or in a political campaign or made any contribution to a fund for the purpose of affecting the election or nomination of any candidate—

And so forth. Unless that language shall be inserted a man could make a contribution in any amount within the limits the Senate has established this morning and not be subject to the prohibition of the amendment at all.

Mr. ASHURST. All that the able Senator from Michigan has said is true. I probably violated a rule of argument when I went off on an unreturning parabola and began to discuss campaign contributions. I should have confined myself to the question of activity.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the Senator think we ought to include campaign contributions, and does the able Senator recommend that to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ASHURST. I was going to say I had another amendment or two in mind, and the point the able Senator mentioned was in my mind, but I thought it best to offer the amendments one at a time. However, I am grateful to the able Senator from Michigan for his suggestion.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Did I correctly understand the able Senator to say that he did not think, under the Bankhead amendment, ambassadors would be precluded from being appointed? I understood the Senator from Arizona to say—I may be in error—that under the Bankhead amendment some ambassadors who have been, perhaps, contributing to campaign funds in sums of $35,000, $50,000, $75,000, and up to $100,000, because they could contribute now only $5,000, would probably become ineligible.

Mr. ASHURST. No; let me say to the able Senator I did not say that.

Mr. LUCAS. I so understood, and I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. No apology is necessary.

Mr. LUCAS. But that is the practical effect. If the money question is responsible for the appointment of ambassadors, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama providing that an individual may contribute not more than $5,000, I take it, will eliminate many ambassadors if they are appointed solely because they have made large campaign contributions.

Mr. ASHURST. The statement and the question of the able Senator from Illinois are pungent and proper, but it so happens that, so far as I remember—and I have a pleasant habit of not remembering what I say, because I am thus caused no trouble thereafter—but I do not recall that I said it. If the Senator will pardon me, I did say that it is within the knowledge of every man that for many years there have been appointed as ambassadors and other public ministers men who have made large contributions to their party campaign fund, and who, by even the most remote excursion of the imagination, would not have been considered for an appointment had it not been for their campaign contributions. That is about what I said.

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad the Senator repeats it, because we now understand one another perfectly.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I should like to speak to that amendment, if I may.

The argument which has been made in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona is, of course, an argument against the Hatch Act as it stands, not an argument against this amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Why, and in what manner, does the Senator conceive that what I have said was an argument against the Hatch Act? I am not arguing against the Hatch Act. The Senator from Utah has not offered the Hatch Act as an amendment. He has offered an amendment, and I am moving to amend the Senator's amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, it is easy to explain. The Hatch Act exempts the President, the Vice President, and certain others. The wording of this amendment is the same as that of the Hatch Act, of course; and the purpose of my amendment is to put under equal bans the actual officeholder and the potential officeholder.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a very worthy thing, but—will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should like to explain this matter for half a second. But if, for instance, we are going to say that the actual officeholder shall be allowed to do certain things which the potential officeholder may not do, then, of course, the whole logic of all I have been saying in favor of my amendment goes completely out of the window, because I have tried to make the point that the Hatch Act, in its practice, operates against parties and not against individuals——

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. And that if we do not put upon the office seeker a restriction like that which we put upon the officeholder, there is no equality at all in the act, and the act becomes merely the type of thing which controls the action of the party in power. I made that whole point because of the unanimous way in which all representatives of the party out of power have been voting against the amendments that are now being offered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on that point?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BROWN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that section 2 of the bill, which is the prohibition against the use of official authority, applies to members of the Cabinet and to the heads of the executive departments, and I think the amendment of the Senator from Arizona is perfectly logical in line with that idea.

These men on the outside cannot have any official authority. All they can exercise is their general personal influence. The Senator is not trying to prohibit them from the use of their official authority, because they have not any official authority. They are out of office. They are not in office. The Senator is prohibiting the use of their personal, individual influence, not as officers but as persons.

So it seems to me that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arizona is perfectly logical, certainly with respect to section 2, which prohibits the use by a Cabinet officer or an ambassador of his official authority to affect an election.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, as I said before, the amendment of the able Senator from Utah is retroactive in its nature. It is not unconstitutional because of its retroactive feature. In other words, a retroactive law is not unconstitutional simply because it is retroactive. If it be an ex post facto law, it is unconstitutional; but in enacting laws which are retroactive, very great pains and much care should be employed. Do the other parts of the present bill have any retroactive features? Is there a 2-year retroactive feature to any other part of the pending bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, surely the time element must come into any retroactive measure. It must be retroactive from some particular time. This bill, when it goes into force, cannot apply to the campaign of 1938. It will, of course, apply to the campaign of 1940.

Mr. ASHURST. True; quite so.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That merely means that the prospective officeholder, the would-be officeholder, the would-be appointee, must cool his feet for 2 years, and restrain himself to that extent; that is all. If he understands that he must do that, that will correct his pernicious political activity.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I have one question which, with his kind permission, I will address to him, and also to the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]:

Does the provision for a 2-year retroactivity apply in any other part of the bill, or is this the first time that this provision has been used in an amendment? Is there any 2-year retroactivity in the so-called Hatch bill which we are now discussing?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think not, because the Hatch bill as it stands is a prohibition against a particular class of persons. They must be officeholders. If they resign, the prohibition is not there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I say, I do not wish to smother the able Senator from Utah with compliments. He does not need them. We are going to have trouble with this bill in the courts. One judge is going to say that "active" means "quick." Another judge is going to say that "active" means "busy." Another judge is going to say that "active" means "physically quick." For years now—and I again bear my share of the blame, and as much more of the blame as any other Senator feels irksome to him—we have passed law after law without a gesture toward syntax. In many of the bills we have passed during the past 10 or 12 years we have reasoned from nonexistent premises and arrived at the usual conclusion which comes from reasoning from nonexistent premises.

Since this may be a penal statute, I suggest to the able Senator from Utah—and I look upon him as a man at whose feet I could sit and learn much—that he amend his own amendment on line 6 by saying "a perniciously active part." We know what "pernicious" is. That would strengthen the Senator's amendment. Then the amendment I have offered, to strike off section (b), could be added.

Mr. President, nobility does not reside with kings or courts. Nobility does not reside with Cabinet officers. Nobility resides with the individual. The Congress is generous toward members of the Cabinet, and it should be generous. Congress affords to Cabinet members any amount of clerical help which Cabinet members need, and we do right thereby. We should be justly subjected to a terrific flail of criticism if we were to pass an appropriation affording, forsooth, to each one of ourselves an automobile and a chauffeur at Government expense. No Senator would think of such a thing; yet we do supply automobiles to Cabinet members, and I have voted for it, and I am going to continue to do so. We allow them without let or hindrance to talk upon the radio at public expense. We allow them to frank out, as we should allow them to do, millions upon millions of pieces of literature at Government expense. I have voted for all that, and I bear my share of the blame if any there be. But now, Mr. President, are we to say to the boy in the purlieus of the city, to the boy on the farm in Kansas, to the cowboy on the ranch in Arizona, to the fruit gatherer or the manganese miner in your State, Mr. President [Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair], "You may not be appointed to any office if within the past 2 years you have taken an active part—not 'a perniciously active part,' but 'an active part'—in politics. You must wait 2 years before that ban is removed. Elevate your sight, raise your ambition to Cabinet member, or the head of some other department, and you will not be ineligible." It does not seem fair; and I ask for a vote on my amendment to strike off section (b).

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am going to vote with the Senator; but under section (a) would not a great number of very high-class appointments which have been made in the past have been prevented? In other words, under this amendment a man who runs for Congress and is defeated could not be appointed to a Federal position.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Or, in the case of a Senator who in political combat gets lame in one leg, and becomes a "lame duck," no provision could be made for his retirement in comfort. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me it is a very radical amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is familiar as no other Senator in this body with the political history of the United States, and I am sure he will bear me out in saying that the political history of the United States has been studded and jeweled by examples such as those to which I have just called attention.

Mr. ASHURST. That is very true. If I may be pardoned for a breach of modesty for a moment, we might look to Arizona for some light on this subject. A Federal official in Arizona is by custom ineligible to be a delegate to a national convention. Never has there been a Senator from Arizona, never has there been a Representative from that State, who would presume to be a candidate for the office of delegate to a Democratic National Convention. The people say, "You will bear your burden if you do your full duty as a Senator or Representative." A marshal, a district attorney, a judge, a collector of customs, a collector of revenue, by custom will leave the question of delegate to a Democratic National Convention to persons who do not hold Federal office.

Again I say, I hope the able Senator from Utah, because I believe he wants to strengthen the Hatch bill, will strike out on line 6 the indefinite article "an," and insert "a" and the words "perniciously active." There will be no great difficulty on the part of the courts in defining the phrase "perniciously active." There is a vast difference between "activity" in politics and "pernicious activity" in politics. I believe it was none other than Grover Cleveland who first used the phrase "pernicious activity." Grover Cleveland never opposed any person being active in politics, but he did wisely and patriotically inveigh against pernicious activity on the part of any postmaster, if I remember correctly.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, since the wording of this amendment is made consistent, of course, with the act as it now stands, and since the act as it now stands does use the adjective "pernicious," there can be no objection at all to the amendment of the Senator in regard to inserting in its proper place the adjective "pernicious"; that is, on line 6, as I take it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I ask him to strike out the indefinite article "an" on line 6 and insert "a," and the other adjective "perniciously," so that it will read "taking a perniciously active part," and so forth.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. As to the other part of the amendment, the striking out of subdivision (b), I think I should say a word about that.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Under the amendment which the Senator has accepted the second subdivision would exempt members of the Cabinet or Ambassadors who have been guilty of pernicious political activity.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield, I regret that the able Senator from Colorado was not present when I made what, out of charity to myself, I will call a strong argument. Whenever I am aruging a matter, and I see the able Senator from Colorado listening, I feel encouraged and emboldened if and when I see him by some facial expression indicating approval, and I am rather taken aback when I see that he does not indicate approval. I value his judgment highly.

Mr. ADAMS. I approve the Senator's amendment to strike out the second subdivision.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator came into the Chamber I had moved to strike out subdivision (b)——

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to me that the amendment which has just been accepted makes it absolutely imperative to accept the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Absolutely; in my judgment; but, even if the able Senator from Utah had not amended his own amendment, as he had the right to do—and I think he strengthened it—I nevertheless would press my amendment to strike out subdivision (b), because, forsooth I just do not have the face, I have not the nerve to go out into the country and say to a certain class of citizens, "You took an active part in politics in this country, and you therefore cannot apply for office for 2 years, unless you apply for appointment as Cabinet member or Ambassador or other public Minister.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona permit an interruption?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. If subdivision (b) had been stricken out, the Senator would have brought about a state of affairs which would have prohibited the appointment, for instance, of Mr. Justice Murphy to the Supreme Court, or of Mr. Murphy as Attorney General of the United States, because he was active in politics within 2 years before the appointment. I am sure the Senator does not want to go that far.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no; and I do not see the application of the remark of the able Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Murphy was appointed to the Cabinet.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, the Senator means if this bill had been the law?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would have established a system which would have made impossible the utilization by the Federal Government of men of outstanding ability in cases of that kind.

Mr. ASHURST. Quite so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Notwithstanding that, I am somewhat in sympathy with the Senator's amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think I should repeat the reasons for the placing of subdivision (b) in the amendment. This amendment has to do only with prospective appointees; it does not have to do with officeholders. The Hatch law as it stands, and the amendment proposed to the Hatch law, with which we are dealing, have to do with actual officeholders and not with prospective officeholders. The amendment was written to be consistent with the Hatch Act. Of course, I realize that I accomplish all the purposes of the amendment without subdivision (b), but if the amendment is to be a proper amendment to the Hatch Act as it stands—and we went to a good deal of trouble to see that it would be a proper amendment to the Hatch Act as it stands, and it is in harmony with the act—subdivision (b) seems necessary. But I have no objection if the Senate wishes to strike out subdivision (b).

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just a word on the amendment itself. I realize and appreciate how faithfully the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has supported those of us who have been sponsoring the pending legislation. I should like very much to be able to agree to any amendment which the Senator from Utah would offer, because I would know that the mere fact that he offered it and sponsored the amendment was evidence, at least sufficient to me, to know that it was offered and sponsored in good faith and to strengthen the bill. I am sure that that is the purpose the Senator from Utah has in mind.

I cannot agree, however, that the amendment should be adopted. I appreciate full well the problem the Senator is seeking to approach and understand the fine reasons which are behind the offering of the amendment. But I think that for practical purposes and considerations the amendment goes so far as that it would be almost certain to defeat the bill we are now discussing if it were adopted. But I wish to repeat that I am certain the Senator from Utah has no such purpose in mind, and if he thought it would have such a result he would withdraw the amendment. I believe and I hope, Mr. President, that this particular amendment will be defeated.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask the Senator from New Mexico a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My understanding is that the amendment has been amended so as to insert the word "pernicious."

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from Arizona has assured us that that is a word which the courts understand and which they have defined.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say to the able Senator from Washington that the courts would have some difficulty in defining what is meant by "active" in politics, but they would have less difficulty in defining what was "perniciously active." I think that is what I stated. The courts would have far less difficulty in defining what is "perniciously active." I do not think I said, and I doubt, that they have actually defined "pernicious activity." That phrase has been defined by department heads and was defined by a President many years ago, but I do not recall for the moment any Federal court defining the phrase "pernicious activity."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Would not the ordinary citizen on the street have more difficulty in defining "pernicious activity" than "activity"?

Mr. ASHURST. That might be true, but do we wish to prohibit activity? That is a serious question. I think we should prohibit pernicious activity. As I stated before, the word "pernicious" is known to everyone in the Senate. We know from what stock, from what root, it is derived. We know it means "ruinous, malignant, bad." It is really a synonym for "bad." I do not think we would have any difficulty with the phrase "perniciously active," but we might have considerable difficulty if we just leave it "active."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Would not the Senator agree that to the average citizen on the street the word "pernicious" is much more difficult of definition than the word "active"?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true; but when one says "Mr. Jones has pernicious anemia," we know it means anemia that is pernicious; something that is bad. I think those who are familiar with the sources of the English language will generally concede that when we use the phrase "pernicious activity" it means an activity which in good morals is a bad activity.

The word "pernicious" is defined as "having the quality of injuring or killing; destructive; fatal; ruinous; very mischievous," as "pernicious to health."

Pernicious activity in politics would be an activity that was bad for health and morals, bad for the health of the country, bad as opposed to good.

I still insist, with due deference to the able Senator from Washington, that if this amendment is to become law "perniciously" should appear before the word "active," because I do not want to vote to prohibit activity.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator will agree, will he not, that if, as a result of the passage of the pending Hatch bill, we destroy the right of a State to operate and to carry on its governmental functions—and the word "pernicious" means something that is persistent and continuous unto death—the new Hatch bill should be called pernicious, because it would result in the death of our system of American government?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in pungent and ironical statements I am not in the same class with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of what the able Senator has just said, does he not believe that the word "pernicious," as well as the word "active," should be defined by the United States Senate, rather than passing that definition on to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Illinois was called out of the Chamber when I dealt with that point a moment ago. I have attempted to give a definition of the word "active." The word "active" is opposed to "dormant." The word "active" might mean quick physical power. The squirrel is active. He jumps from bough to bough. The squirrel is active—is alert—as opposed to sleep, dormant, and quiescent.

I say that the use of the word "active" alone in the bill is not sufficient and might lead to confusion. But when we say "engaged in pernicious political activity," the Senator from Illinois, who is one of the learned lawyers in this body, if he were on the bench, would not have great difficulty, if the evidence were before him, in determining whether or not a particular action were one of pernicious activity or simply activity. To post a letter is activity; it might not be pernicious activity.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that the Senate of the United States ought to place some standard or safeguard around that language by defining the term "pernicious political activity," rather than to say that we do not understand what is meant by "pernicious political activity," but we are willing to let the Civil Service Commission say to every community in the United States what is pernicious political activity?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I had no idea of getting into this debate, but I love the sound of my own voice so well that I am emboldened to go on. Let me say to the able Senator from Illinois, whose learning is too profound, who is too astute a lawyer, too experienced to fail to know that we cannot define fraud; we cannot define fraud because she assumes—or perhaps I should use the masculine——

Mr. TYDINGS. She is the mistress of too many situations.

Mr. ASHURST. As the Senator from Maryland says, she is the mistress of too many situations. Fraud appears in so many guises and disguises; it appears in so many multifarious forms—it has the heads of Cerberus and the eyes of Argus—that long ago in our jurisprudence and in English and American law we gave up any attempt to define fraud.

If the able Senator from Illinois were on the bench he would be able to say that one act was pernicious activity, but another was not. But when we attempt to define pernicious activity in a penal statute—and under the rule "the expression of one is the exclusion of the other"—we would have thousands of instances that might be pernicious but would not come within the purview of the law.

For that reason I doubt the wisdom of attempting to give an all-embracing definition of pernicious activity.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have discussed the question of whether we should define "pernicious political activity," I call attention to the language of section 15, as follows:

SEC. 15. The United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to promulgate, as soon as practicable, rules or regulations defining, for the purposes of this act, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns."

In view of what the Senator has just said about the word "pernicious," and that we are unable to define it—if we cannot define "pernicious political activity," I ask the able Senator, how can the Civil Service Commission or a United States Senator define it as related to political campaigns? Is it not as difficult for one as for the other to attempt to make a definition?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's frankness compels me to answer in the affirmative; yes.

Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly the point I am going to raise in a few moments on a motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I am bound to say, although I shall probably vote against the motion to recommit, that in frankness and candor I do see some force in the Senator's observation.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator for agreeing with me, because it is worth while to find that the Senator finds some force in any argument I put forth.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have never heard the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] make other than a strong argument. In fact, he never arises unless he has something of force to say.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield to the able Senator from Wyoming. I wish to read an article from the Washington Star, and then I am through.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I merely wanted to refer for a moment to the word "perniciously"——

Mr. ASHURST. Perniciously active.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The present Hatch Act and various other Federal statutes declare certain actions in reference to elections to be unlawful.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. And if this measure is passed, it will also declare certain acts to be unlawful. Why would it not simplify the amendment if, instead of saying "perniciously active", we say "unlawfully active"?

Mr. ASHURST. With due deference to the able Senator's remark, I believe that it would be better for this particular bill to use the phrase "perniciously active" than "unlawfully active", because there are acts that are pernicious which might not be unlawful.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read an article headed "Hoover and Politicians."

This is from the Washington Star of 2 or 3 days ago, and was written by Mr. Frederic William Wile:

Undoubtedly J. Edgar Hoover's consistent refusal to permit political interference in the Federal Bureau of Investigation has something to do with the current drive to investigate him and his efficient outfit. Senator ASHURST (Democrat), of Arizona, chairman of the all-powerful Senate Judiciary Committee, can bear witness about F. B. I.'s—

That is the Federal Bureau of Investigation—

politics ban. Senator ASHURST once sought to have a young constituent appointed a G-man. The candidate took the required examination and failed to make the grade. He was flunked a second time. Then the Senator went to bat for him, only to be told by Mr Hoover there was positively nothing doing as long as the aspiring Arizonan—couldn't rise to required F. B. I. standards. Mr. ASHURST heads the Senate committee which, in a way, holds Mr. Hoover's fortunes in the palm of its hand.

That is the applicant [laughter]—

Mr. President, while that is a correct article, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary does not hold Mr. J. Edgar Hoover's fortunes in its hands, nor does it hold any other person's fortunes in its hands. The F. B. I., under Mr. Hoover's supervision, is an almost nearly perfect example of an agency of the Government indulging in no activity of any sort in politics. There is always an irritation against the reformer. If he would reform himself and all things that come within the periphery of his influence, he would do a great work.

Reform is like a boil. A reform is for "the other fellow" and not for me. Learned physicians many years ago held an argument—one of them delivered an exegesis upon the question of where a boil should appear on the human body, but it was finally conclusively demonstrated that the proper place for a boil to appear on the human body is on the back of the neck of "the other fellow." [Laughter.]

So, Mr. President, I am not making any apology for reform. Progress and reform must keep pace with the dramatic march of events in the United States. I am proud that the able Senator from New Mexico has not been driven from his post by the words we have all uttered—and I have uttered some of them about reformers. There has been much good work done by the reformers which has been nullified in some instances, probably by the courts, in some instances by public opinion, because, Mr. President, in some cases we go too far and attempt too much at one time.

I have not said that the Hatch bill goes too far. I say, though, in amendments which would exempt Cabinet members and persons aspiring to be ambassadors or other public ministers we must not make any distinction. We must not go faster than society can go; we cannot pass a law, Mr. President, of any force and effect that goes further or faster than the most witless man in the country can go. That is a remarkable statement. We cannot successfully impose a law upon a great Nation which law is in advance of the most witless man in your country.

Mr. President, I have no desire to compare people to cattle, but my life on the ranches in early years in Arizona taught me a vast deal which has been helpful to me, even in such an august place as the Senate. You remember, Mr. President, the cowboy song Get Along, Little Dogies. What a wealth of common sense and philosophy is contained in that song. You never heard the cowboys sing "Get along, you longhorns," or "Get along, you stout and fat ones." The cowboy knew that the longhorns and the stout, fat ones would reach grass and water without any trouble, but he knew that his herd could progress and proceed only as fast as the slowest, weakest members of his herd could go and the dogies were the poor and the weak and the slow.

His day's advance with his herd of cattle was measured by the distance his slowest and weakest ones could go. So it is with reforms, Mr. President. Unfortunate and discouraging as it may seem at times, you must not get too far in advance of the main herd. You should go only as fast as the slowest of the herd can go. When we advance and say that we are going to make a young man or young woman ineligible for a certain political office, but do not impose that restriction upon him when he applies for a Cabinet position, we are going faster than the herd is going, and we shall not get there with the herd. We shall not accomplish much.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has referred to the cattle country jargon about the dogies. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] comes from that section.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a very interesting conversation is going on, but I cannot hear it.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator feel that this legislation is directed altogether at the dogies, and that we have not the big fat cattle in with them at all? Some of us have been trying for a week or 10 days to get the big fat cattle in. So far as we can make out, the bill is directed only at the dogies.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] limiting campaign contributions to a thousand dollars. I voted for the amendment limiting contributions to $5,000. I think the bill has thereby been improved. I think if we adopt my amendment to the amendment of the able Senator from Utah, the bill will be further improved.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator always embellishes whatever he discusses, and enlightens his audience. I have been especially interested in his theory of the speed of the cattle. Under his theory he assumes, of course, that the dogie is willing to move; that he goes forward, at whatever speed he can.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; he is a part of the herd.

Mr. BARKLEY. But he does not turn around and run the other direction? [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Who is the dogie?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator were driving a herd and were as alert with the lariat as he is with words, he would catch all the dogies that went the other way.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I had no idea that my simple amendment would turn Senators to ancient history, philosophy, and the proverbs, and to experiences on the cattle range. However, I shall keep in harmony with the atmosphere which has been created for us and merely call attention to the fact that in writing the amendment we attempted to go along with the herd. That is, we had before us an actual act. In that act were actual words. I realize that judges of the various courts interpret those words in different ways. Therefore, in writing the amendment we were careful to use only words which had been given a definite meaning by practice, regulation, and decision. Therefore, I did not object in the least to the Senator's amendment putting in the word "perniciously," because the word "pernicious" is part of the title of the act itself and is used in the act to define the kind of political activity which is supposed to be prevented. However, when we come down to the body of the act, the act gets away from the use of these various adjectives, and, with the heading "pernicious" understood in section 4, for example, the words "or any political activity" are left there, realizing that the definition for that sort of activity has already been made. Therefore I accepted the first amendment of the Senator from Arizona. I was glad to accept it. If the Senator from Arizona realizes and understands that the amendment is intended to be in harmony with the act itself, that Cabinet officers and the President are already exempted from the provisions of the act, and that therefore the amendment should exempt prospective Cabinet officers and prospective Presidents; and if the Senator realizes that that was the only purpose for the insertion of subsection (b), I have not the least objection to accepting his second suggestion, and will modify my amendment by eliminating subsection (b).

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that relieves me of the necessity for further argument. I know the able Senator from Utah is acting in good faith. He does not need any words from me or from any source to be assured that his motive and object are to strengthen the Hatch Act. I know that. We all know it; so it seems unnecessary to comment.

Mr. President, may we have read the amendment in its present form, so that we may know how it reads at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Utah, as modified, will be stated.

SEC. —. (a) Hereafter no person shall be appointed to any position or employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or in any agency or department thereof, if, during the 2-year period immediately preceding such appointment or employment, such person has taken a perniciously active part in political management or in a political campaign for the purpose of affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], as modified.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief observation about the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Utah, as modified by the suggestions of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], brings us up against the question of the whole philosophy of the Hatch Act.

The philosophy of the present Hatch Act is that it is wrong for political employees to participate in politics because of the fact that their participation would not be because they believed in the political candidate whom they were supporting, but because they feared that if they did not participate they might lose their jobs. If that is a logical position, then it seems to me to be equally logical that we must accept the amendment of the Senator from Utah, because if it is wrong to participate because one is afraid of losing his job, it is equally wrong to participate because of the hope of obtaining a job. The Senator from Arizona wants to make a different rule, and the Senator from Utah has accepted the amendment, for those who are participating because of a hope, than for those who are participating because of a fear. Those who participate because of a fear cannot participate at all, but those who participate because of a hope will have to participate perniciously; they must do something malignant. It seems to me that it is clearly illogical to attach to the amendment of the Senator from Utah the amendment of the Senator from Arizona, because if the fundamental philosophy of the Hatch Act is correct that people should participate in political campaigns and elections only when they believe in a cause and in the virtue of the candidate for whom they are working, then it is as wrong to participate merely because one hopes to get a job as it is to participate just because he is afraid he will lose a job he already has.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. HILL. What the Senator is stating is that if the amendment of the Senator from Utah should be adopted, as amended by the Senator from Arizona, the amendment of the Senator from Arizona would make the Hatch Act inconsistent in its different parts. Is that correct?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will yield to me for a moment, I thought I said that I regarded consistency as "public enemy No. 1." The able Senator from Utah pointed that out, but that, of course, did not frighten me from my position. The fact that one provision might be inconsistent with another would not have any weight in considering the matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me further?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Knowing the Senator's eloquent defense at all times of inconsistency, I was sure the Senator, as the great apostle of inconsistency, would take the position he has taken, the difference being that the great and distinguished Senator from Arizona is always eminently frank in his inconsistency, whereas must of us rather—what shall I say?—sidestep, dodge, or fail "to come up to scratch," and plead guilty to the charge.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the able Senator from Washington will pardon me, let me say that I have been the subject of considerable raillery and good-natured fun for a long time regarding my attitude on the question of consistency. I am willing that others should have fun even at my expense; but let me say that most of the truly great leaders of the United States have been inconsistent. One of the most inconsistent of our Presidents was Theodore Roosevelt, and he was successful because of his inconsistency. President Franklin Roosevelt has been inconsistent; President Woodrow Wilson was inconsistent. I would not care to serve here if an iron bed, a procrustean bed of fixity and consistency was laid out for me to which I would have to conform at all times, and if, forsooth, I was too short for the bed I must be stretched and drawn out to the required length; and too long for it, that my head or my feet would have to be lopped off to fit such iron bed.

Mr. President, I suppose every man who comes to the Senate, in his heart, resolves to follow the bright light of consistency. It is a noble dream; but whoever comes to the Senate, and does that, will serve one term only and render no service, because the currents of public opinion, the currents of duty change and conflict, and the varying phases in which public issues confront him make it utterly fantastical for any man to lay down a rule of consistency by which he will be guided. Of course, I mean a political rule. It goes without saying that every man should provide for himself a decent, fair rule of conduct, and when I refer to inconsistency I do not mean that anyone should be dishonest or insincere in his advocacy of measures or his opposition to them.

Mr. President, in a very few days there may be a resolution before the Senate regarding a Presidential third term. As I recall, all of us on the Democratic side were opposed to a Presidential third term in 1927 and 1928. Of course, we may all be inconsistent when that resolution comes before the Senate, if it shall come before the Senate again, and may not be for it. Even if I was for it on a previous occasion, it would not trouble me. I might make no change in my previous attitude or I might do the rare thing of remaining consistent about it or I might be inconsistent. At least I am free to do just as I choose and to do it without embarrassment.

Mr. President, too long have epithets, too long have phrases in American public life guided, controlled, influenced, and frightened men. One of the reasons the Senate is a great body is that one cannot frighten the Senate by an epithet, one cannot frighten the Senate by a motto, one cannot frighten the Senate by a phrase. Many men of eminence and worth in the United States have been torn down by phrases and many an unworthy man has been elevated to great place by phrases. Logic, worth, character, intellect, courage, patriotism, honesty, devotion to public service—not epithets or phrases—should influence public affairs. What makes the Senate a body to which any citizen may aspire and be proud of the opportunity of serving is that we do what we think is right, and we do it whether or not others think it inconsistent. As the late beloved Senator Borah said, during his long service in the Senate he never worried himself about consistency. Consistency is a nice word. It rolls in the mouth like a lollypop. I ask Senators to look at their records and see if they have been consistent. If they have been consistent they have been extremely inactive, and have not rendered full duty to their States, for a problem comes up today in one phase and the same problem comes up tomorrow in another phase. I hope the time will come when men will not be abashed to be called inconsistent.

Mr. President, I came to the Senate a rip-snorting low-tariff man. For 18 years over the country I split the ears of groundlings and fulminated the sky and earth with arguments for a low tariff. But, 20 years ago, having "seen the light"—having toured Europe and other parts of the world and given the matter deep thought, I became a high-protective-tariff advocate. I am for a high tariff, and, in my judgment, the ills, woes, troubles, trials, and tribulations in this country would soon disappear if we had a high protective tariff. I think the Republicans have been recreant to their trust——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield in a moment. They have been recreant to their own principles in failing on every proper occasion to urge a high, protective tariff on imports that come into the United States. Now I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Senator not consider the Smoot-Hawley bill a high-tariff measure?

Mr. ASHURST. I voted against it because the rates were too low. I stood on this floor for 8 hours trying to raise the rate on manganese and various other items, and every Democrat but two voted with me to raise the tariff rate on manganese. It is very nice to say we wish our children to go to day school and Sunday school and church and dress well and to wish that the laboring man shall have grapefruit and avocados at breafast and some of the good things of life, but we cannot have those things in America unless we have a protective tariff, because with our high standards of living we cannot compete with the outside world; and Senators know it. Prosperity will come again to the United States when we have a protective tariff, and when we take from Fort Knox about $10,000,000,000 of the gold now buried in the earth there and coin it into double eagles for circulation among the people.

I see before me at least one Member of the Senate who may be nominated for President of the United States.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I think I have the floor; and if the Senator from Arizona is going to limit it to one, I am not going to yield further.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, the Senator from Ohio is not now present. I wish to say to the able Senator from Michigan that if he becomes President, and if he sends to the Congress a message urging a high tariff, I will vote for it. If he sends a request or a message for a bill to coin about $10,000,000,000 of the gold now buried in the earth at Fort Knox into double eagles for circulation among the people and the payment of the debt of the United States, I will vote for such a bill. If he does this he will thereby demonstrate that he is worthy to be President. He has already demonstrated that he is worthy to be considered for the Presidency. [Laughter.] I am not committing myself to him, because I am for the Democratic nominee, whoever he may be. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor. I am trespassing on the time of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator from Arizona a question in the time of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Michigan. If I may make an observation before I yield, I am very delighted to yield to somebody on the other side. This is the first time a Republican has opened his mouth since this debate started. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. This is the first time there has been any justification for it. [Laughter.]

I simply want to thank my distinguished friend from Arizona for his observations, and particularly for his sound economic views; and I want to add that, as I understand his discussion of consistency, he takes the position that while consistency is a jewel, too much jewelry is vulgar. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Right, Mr. President. With all my supposed familiarity with the English language, I could not have said that. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, one other word—and it is for Democrats. You are going out pretty soon into a campaign. You have had possession of the Federal Government for 7 years, and not a single Democrat has presumed to introduce a bill to repeal the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. How are you going to make votes by denouncing high tariffs when after 7 years, with a majority in each House, you have not made even a gesture looking toward repealing the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, because if you did so you would get a reaction that would cause the Republicans to carry every doubtful precinct in the United States?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, have we not done that in an unconstitutional way when we have adopted these foreign-trade treaties?

Mr. ASHURST. My answer is yes. The Senator refers to the trade treaties?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to talk about that subject for a moment. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I think of all the men in America—next to the President and the Vice President of the United States—who have favorably impressed not only their own country but the world as men of a high type of ability, patriotism, and judgment, Secretary Hull's name comes to mind. I have for him an affection that is fraternal. It partakes of the affection I have for a brother. I regard him as one of the most high-minded, learned men who ever held the office of Secretary of State; and it is no small matter for me to disagree with the able Secretary of State respecting his trade agreements. I do not lightly disagree with his policy on that subject, because he profoundly believes in it, as he believes in everything he advocates; and it is a personal affliction to me to be required to announce that I cannot support treaties or trade agreements made upon the ipsi dixit of one man. Treaties and trade agreements should be ratified by the United States Senate, as the Constitution provides.

My constituents have asked me the question as to what will be my attitude on these trade-agreement treaties, and I have thus spared myself the necessity of writing several thousand letters by announcing here my attitude on that subject.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Perhaps I should apologize to the Senator from Washington for inviting this enlightening and eloquent, though somewhat extended, interruption of his speech. As I heard the tribute to inconsistency from the distinguished Senator from Arizona, I could not fail to remember the observation of Abraham Lincoln that it was an awfully dumb man who did not have more sense today than he had yesterday.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator allow me to thank the scholarly and able Senator from Alabama for that reference? I needed something like that in my own repertory. [Laughter.] I will add that to my repertory when I am advocating inconsistency.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I did not anticipate starting this particular discussion, although in reference to it I should like to say that I think we have made great progress in inconsistency, even for the Senator from Arizona. He has repeatedly boasted that he did not believe in consistency; that it was all right for him one day to repudiate what he did the day before, or at 4 o'clock to repudiate what he did at 3 o'clock. So far as I know, however, this is the first time he has advocated being inconsistent with himself at the same time, and putting into a bill an amendment which is totally inconsistent with the bill itself. [Laughter.]

I really rose for the purpose of trying to get into an argument with the Senator from New Mexico upon what seems to me to be a fundamental question which is raised by the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and that is, what difference is there between its being wrong for one to participate in political activity because of fear of losing the job he already has, and its being wrong for one to participate in political activity because of the hope of a job he expects to get? If the whole Hatch bill is right, why is not the Thomas amendment to it right?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not desire to engage in an argument with the Senator from Washington or any other Senator just now. I am quite anxious to vote. There is, however, a vast difference in the two situations. One man is not on the public pay roll. Another is drawing a salary paid from public funds, and devoting his time—as too often is the case, all of his time that he should be devoting to official duties—to the active work of politics.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him another question there?

Mr. HATCH. No; I am not going to get into any discussion with the Senator. I want to avoid all the discussion I possibly can, in the hope that we may vote on this amendment, and the next amendment, and the next amendment, and the next one, whatever number may be offered, and finally, today or tomorrow at some time, vote on the bill itself. That is my only desire at the moment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely want to point out what seems to me a bit too-inclusive definition on the part of the Senator from Washington in assuming that every man who before an election seeks to carry forward certain principles is necessarily hopeful of securing an office. The Senator knows that that is not true. The vast majority of men who take an active part in politics do so because of what they regard as the welfare of their country, frequently because of affection for a man whose candidacy they approve, and not in the hope of getting an office. So when the Senator simply makes two groups—those who have offices and those who hope for offices—I think his definition is too inclusive.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I do not make that classification at all. There is nothing in the Thomas amendment which would stop a man who wanted to work for the Senator from Colorado for reelection because he believed in the Senator from Colorado from working for him; but, under the Thomas amendment, if the reason why a man wanted to work for the Senator from Colorado was that he thought the Senator might be able to get him a job, then he would be stopped from working for the Senator from Colorado, because he would know that he could not get a job within 2 years.

I do not classify everybody who has not been appointed to a job as working in politics for the purpose of getting a job. Certainly a goodly percentage, and, I hope, the great majority of them, do not have such a motive. Therefore the observation of the Senator from Colorado does not meet the argument I have made.

I desire, however, to revert to the answer of the Senator from New Mexico. If the Senator from New Mexico is correct in his answer to me, then his bill should provide that between 8 o'clock in the morning and 5 o'clock in the afternoon those holding political office should not take part in political activities. The prohibition should not extend on into the night and during the hours during which the man is not paid by the Government.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I am glad the Senator from Washington has directed attention to that thought, because it is constantly stated by the Senator from New Mexico and his chief supporting newspaper, the Washington News, that this bill is directed at those persons only while they are working at their political jobs. Nowhere is the bill directed at them while they are working on the job.

The News starts out an editorial of March 9 as follows:

THE SENATE AMOK

The greatest deliberative body on earth has blown its top. And all over a legislative issue of whether public servants should devote their full time to public service or be at the call of party bosses.

That is not the issue. That is not the issue presented by the Hatch bill at all, and certainly the brilliant editorial writer of the Washington News knew that it was not; for this bill not only condemns a fellow who plays politics while he is on the job but it will not even let him use his own time when he is off the job, when the day's work is done, and he is around the fireside with his wife and children, and the neighbors come in to sit down with him. He would not dare, in his own home, with his neighbors gathered around his fireside, to talk to his neighbors in the interest of the man who put him in his job, or the party that gave him his job. If he did, he would be engaged in political activity.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to say to the Senator from Indiana what it is in my mind to say, but I do want to say that the statement he has just made has been repeatedly denied not only by myself but by all the decisions which have been rendered in interpretation of this or similar measures. The act he so eloquently describes does not constitute political activity.

Mr. MINTON. Just what is the Senator talking about?

Mr. HATCH. The man discussing matters at home.

Mr. MINTON. Why, of course, that is denounced by this bill.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, it is not.

Mr. MINTON. If a man gathers around his fireside with his wife and children, and neighbors come in, and they become involved in a political argument, of course, he is bound to walk away from them. This is what the Civil Service Commission itself says about that. The Senator is going to apply the civil-service regulations to these persons under the bill. The Civil Service Commission, interpreting political activity, says:

> An employee may participate in discussion where no political issue is involved or make an address on any moral or ethical subject.

They can sit around and talk about the Bible, they can sit around and talk about the coming of the Judgment Day, they can talk about prohibition, perhaps, or topics of that kind; but do not let them get into a political argument, because the Civil Service Commission, which is going to interpret and apply the proposed law, has said that "when two or more parties or factions become engaged in a contest for rival or antagonistic measures or policies of governmental control or regulation a political issue is created." Whenever that situation is found, and people begin arguing about politics, one having a job on the Federal pay roll must "clear out." The Senator from New Mexico wants to put those on the State pay roll in the same muzzled class. I say that the Senator from New Mexico has stated repeatedly, as he stated a moment ago, and as his chief supporting newspaper, the News, has said, that this bill is directed at employees while they are on the job, so as to keep people who have political jobs on the job, doing their duty all the time. That is not what the bill is for. If the Senator will limit it to that I will support it. If he will include a provision making it apply from 8 o'clock in the morning until quitting time in the evening, I will support it. But the Senator from New Mexico will not do that. He wants to provide for the period after a man goes home from his work in the evening, and prescribe that at that time also he must cut out any political activity. I repeat, a man cannot in his own home, with his neighbors gathered around him, engage in a political discussion without violating the Hatch Act.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly, regardless of what the civil-service rules are, if this bill is passed as it is now written, under section 15 of the act the Civil Service Commission will have a right to define as political activity what the Senator is now discussing. Certainly there is no restraint, under the bill, as to what the Civil Service Commission may say is or is not political activity, notwithstanding they may have certain rules and regulations at present governing the matter; but now they are to widen out all over the United States of America in a new field, and in a strange field for them, if I may say so, and there is nothing in the bill, any section of it, especially section 15, which I have been discussing throughout the debate from the time it started until now, which denies the Civil Service Commission full power and authority to say what is and what is not political activity. Certainly, if, as the Senator from Indiana says, an individual were sitting by his own fireside discussing something with his neighbors, and a political question arose, for instance, as to whether or not John Jones should or should not be elected, if the individual who fell into the designated class were in his own home and took part in the discussion, I submit that the Civil Service Commission would have a right to say, under the rules and regulations, that that was political activity.

Mr. MINTON. The observations of the Senator from Illinois are, in my judgment, absolutely correct; the Civil Service Commission could make a definition which would include what I have described, a little friendly gathering, as a political activity condemned under the proposed act.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HILL. What difference could there be in principle, in effect, in practice, between a man in his own house, say, at a meeting with his own neighbors, perhaps a meeting of a little neighborhood P. T. A., talking about the election of a school-board member, perhaps the adoption of a school tax, or something of that kind, and his doing the same talking in the school house, perhaps on the corner? There could be no difference, could there?

Mr. MINTON. There could not be any, and if such a provision were enforced, it would have to be enforced in one instance as in another.

Mr. HILL. When we boil it down, the whole measure does not go to the practices or the activities which every Member of the Senate and everyone in the country wants to end. It applies to the individual. It is too much like a doctor killing the patient merely to get rid of the disease.

Mr. MINTON. Yes; or like burning down the barn to get rid of the rats.

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. MINTON. All the time we hear talk about keeping the Federal money which we are appropriating for a Federal purpose from going into the pockets of people to be used for political purposes. If the Senator from New Mexico will draw his bill on that principle, I will support it. But what business has the Federal Government, merely because it pays a man's salary, to say to that man, "You shall not do thus and so after you are off the job"?

Let me say to the Senator from New Mexico that if he will write a bill which will attempt to prevent the playing of politics by the employee while he is on the job—and his work is what the man is being paid for, and that is why the Federal Government takes the money out of its coffers for a man's service, we will say, from 8 o'clock in the morning till 5 o'clock in the afternoon—if the Senator from New Mexico, with the aid of the Washington News, will write a measure which will say to the workers, "You shall take no part in politics from the time you go to work in the morning until your day's work is done, for which time you are paid by the State or Federal Government," I will join him in trying to have a bill of that kind passed, because I think the Federal Government and State governments are entitled to a good day's work for a good day's pay. But the Senator from New Mexico would provide, under the guise, mind you, of controlling Federal money, of seeing that the man who gets Federal money uses that money for a Federal purpose, that the Federal Government may come in and say, "No; we not only claim the right to tell you what you shall do during 8 or 9 hours a day when you work, and for which we pay you, but we claim the right to say that when you go home at night, and are on your own time, you shall not take part in any political activity whatsoever, no matter how vital you may think it may be to you, your home, or your community."

Mr. President, that is what we are objecting to. All this talk about trying to control Federal funds is beside the mark, I submit, because the proponents of the legislation do not stop there. They do not attempt to limit the application of the law to the expenditure of Federal funds; they do not attempt to limit it to the expenditure of State funds; but they try to follow the fellow long after the Government's money has quit jingling in his pocket for his day's work. They want to control his action and his activity when he gets home at night and when he is not out on the job.

The Senator from Illinois, who has manifested a keen and penetrating interest in some of the shortcomings of the pending bill, has pointed out what I think is a fatal defect in the bill, what I think is an unconstitutional provision in the bill, the provision which would permit the Civil Service Commission to write the penalties, to define the offenses under the bill, and not to fill in the details, as Chief Justice Marshall said in a case may be done by an administrative body. They would not attempt to fill in the details; they would put in the whole thing under the delegated power we would give them here. I say that cannot be done under the Constitution, and I understand that is what the Senator from Illinois says cannot be done.

Let me point out to the Senator from Illinois that the Civil Service Commission itself has admitted that it cannot define "political activity." I will read to the Senator from Illinois, who was not in the Chamber yesterday, what I read into the RECORD from a publication of the Civil Service Commission itself. I read for the benefit of the Senator from Illinois from a publication issued by the United States Civil Service Commission entitled "Political Activities and Political Assessments of Federal Officeholders and Employees." Paragraph 2, on page 2, starts out with this statement:

> It is impossible to give a complete list of the particular activities in which an employee may not engage.

That is from the Civil Service Commission, which is to be charged not with filling in the details but defining the offense. It says itself that it cannot define it. I submit that we certainly should not delegate to them something which they admit they cannot do, and that is what the proposed act is attempting to do.

Mr. President, I want the Senate to keep before it at all times when the Senator from New Mexico is talking about controlling Federal funds and State funds in order to see that the Government gets its money's worth, that that is not what the bill is trying to accomplish at all. If it were, I would join the Senator, and everyone on this side who has been with me in this fight, I think, would do likewise; we would want to control the expenditure of money only while the fellow was on the job. No one would object to that. But unfortunately the bill goes much further, and it is to the part of it which goes further that we are strenuously objecting, because we think it unnecessarily sacrifices the American right of every free citizen of this country to be for whatever he wants to support, in his own time, when he does it voluntarily, and the mere fact that he holds a State or Federal job should not disqualify him from exercising that American right.

Mr. LEE and Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, Congress has approved a number of reservoirs to be constructed in Oklahoma, but the only two dams which offer any immediate probability of generating electricity——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HATCH. I sought the floor in my own right, and I thought I was recognized, and I desire to address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma was first on the floor, and made a request that he be recognized to speak next. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. HATCH. I do not want the Senator to yield. In view of the remarks made by the Senator from Indiana, I thought it was appropriate that the Senator from New Mexico should be recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ascertain whether we can get a vote on the pending amendment right away and to offer a suggestion to limit debate on the pending amendment to 15 minutes. Would that interfere with the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I desire to speak for only 15 minutes. I do not wish to delay the vote on the amendment, but, Mr. President, the troops are marching in Oklahoma.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that. If the suggestion I made would interfere with the Senator, I shall not make the request while he is on his feet, but it seems to me we ought to reach a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. LEE. I hope we can do so. However, the Grand River Dam might be shut down for a week in Oklahoma before we could dispose of the pending bill, and I wish to speak to that subject at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

GRAND RIVER DAM, OKLA., AND RED RIVER DAM, TEX.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, Congress has approved a number of reservoirs to be constructed in Oklahoma, but the only two dams which offer any immediate probability of generating electricity are the only ones which have been opposed by the Governor of Oklahoma.

One of these is the Denison-Durant Dam, being constructed on Red River between Denison, Tex., and Durant, Okla. On March 11, 1940, there appeared a United Press article in the Washington Post which said in part:

> Gov. Leon Phillips today made public a letter to Secretary of War Woodring demanding the Government halt work on the $54,000,000 Red River Dam or proceed "at your peril."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this article printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LEE. Then, Mr. President, there is another dam being constructed in northeastern Oklahoma, known as the Grand River Dam. This dam, like the one which is being constructed on Red River near Denison, Tex., would also generate electricity. On March 11 there appeared in the Oklahoma City Times the following headlines:

> Phillips talks dynamite use to halt dam.

In this article the Governor is quoted as not being adverse to "blasting" the Grand River Dam.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this article printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. LEE. Then again on March 13, there appeared an article in the Washington Daily News under the headlines:

> Oklahoma readies troops in dam row.

On the same day there was a headline in the Washington Post which read as follows:

> Militia to halt completion of United States dam.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering what was meant by the rather emphatic language used in the first of the last two headlines referred to by the Senator. What kind of a row was that?

Mr. LEE. I am reading only the headline. The Senator can put the emphasis wherever he chooses on the last word in the headline.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these two articles be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibits C and D.)

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, bear in mind that Congress has authorized several dams to be constructed in Oklahoma, but only these two dams have been singled out for military opposition by Governor Phillips, and bear in mind further that these are the only two dams which offer any immediate probability of generating electricity.

Mr. President, I regret very much that our Governor has seen fit to take this action, because it results only in a loss to the people of Oklahoma. I ask the question: Who loses by this action? The people, of course; that is, the farmers, home owners, and industries of Oklahoma. I ask the further question: Who gains by wrecking these two power dams? The utilities gain. How much do they gain? Well, according to the comparison between the T. V. A. rates and Oklahoma rates as made by the Federal Power Commission, the people of Oklahoma in 1937 paid $11,770,600 more for electricity than they would have paid for the same electricity under the T. V. A. rates.

Mr. President, the odd thing about the Grand River Dam controversy is that an Oklahoma Governor has called out Oklahoma troops to stop work on an Oklahoma project. The Grand River Dam is being built under authority of the Oklahoma State Legislature. That legislature established a Grand River Dam Authority and the dam is entirely an Oklahoma project.

The Federal Government has made loans to the Authority, and has made a grant of almost $9,000,000. Even though the Federal Government has loaned the Authority money, and has made a grant of nearly $9,000,000, Governor Phillips is now contending that the Federal Government should pay the State $850,000 to pay for highways inundated by this reservoir, in spite of the fact that the former highway commission made an agreement with the Grand River Dam Authority that if the Federal Government would construct a bridge across a certain stream the highway department would build the approaches to the bridge.

Mr. Clark Foreman, of the P. W. A., informs me that, although it was exceptional, yet the P. W. A. agreed to have the bridge constructed across this stream.

Governor Phillips now takes the position that he is not bound by the agreement because it was verbal and because it was made by a previous highway commission. Therefore he is now threatening to stop construction of the project until the Federal Government pays more money for the construction of these highways.

The engineers inform me that the spring rains will begin at least by April 1, and that unless this dam is completed by then, great damage will result to the construction. Then they inform me that unless the spring rains are impounded, the dam will be useless from the standpoint of producing electricity for at least another year. I say it is regrettable that our Governor has not resorted to the courts as the State authority and Federal Government have suggested, to settle this dispute instead of resorting to military force.

I wish to make it plain that in my opinion the members of the Grand River Dam Authority have shown good faith and seem interested only in doing a good job.

Mr. President, the immediate controversy is not the first trouble which the Governor has caused for these two projects. Therefore, in order that the background of this situation might be available, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks a United Press article under date of December 11, 1939, written by Mr. Ernest M. Hill, United Press staff correspondent, under the heading "State and Local Politics."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY.—The under-fire resignation of R. V. L. Wright as general manager of the $20,000,000 Grand River Dam project gave Gov. Leon C. Phillips another victory in his long series of brushes with the national administration.

Although Phillips was not out in front in demanding Wright's resignation from the $15,000-a-year job, the Governor was a frequent critic of Wright. The board members who asked Wright to resign were appointed by the Governor. Some observers believe that Phillips has been overly anxious to set himself up in opposition to the national administration, sometimes with too little justification.

He has been a critic of the Grand River Dam project, has attempted to stop construction of the $54,000,000 Red River Dam project, was opposed to giving the State wage-hour set-up an appropriation, was cool to creating a State low-cost housing administration to spend Federal funds, and has taken frequent cracks at United States Senator JOSH LEE and the national administration.

Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes has been accredited with sponsoring Wright for the Grand River Dam job, and Federal officials sought to keep him as manager. Phillips' board, however, had the right to fire him and fought the resignation move through successfully.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in this fight there has been an effort to cloud the issue by making the charges of politics and patronage, but this is only a smoke screen intended to hide the real issue, which is whether or not the people shall have cheap electricity.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as part of my remarks, an article appearing in the Durant Daily Democrat, written by Mr. R. M. McClintock, who for 18 years was a Capitol correspondent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

PHILLIPS' POWER RECORD AIRED BY CAPITOL REPORTER

(By R. M. McClintock)

"I am known to be a public power man, and the utilities are strong in Oklahoma."

That explanation, given by Manager R. V. L. Wright, of the Grand River power authority, just previous to his removal by the G. R. D. A. board appointed by Governor Phillips, seems borne out in full by an examination of the fight made against the board since Phillips' election.

And the respective stake of the Oklahoma utilities, and the consumers of the State, in the control of rates, was pointed out by Senator JOSH LEE at the public hearing given in Washington to Phillips' effort to block construction of the Red River dam. Said LEE:

"These figures (electric utility rate comparisons made by the Federal Power Commission) show that the total revenue paid by the people of Oklahoma to the utilities for electricity in 1937 amounted to $25,374,800.

"The same number of kilowatt-hours figured at the Tennessee Valley Authority rates amounts to $13,604,200, and the difference between the T. V. A. cost and the present cost to the people of Oklahoma is $11,770,600. In other words, according to the T. V. A. prices of electricity, the people of Oklahoma were overcharged $11,770,600 in 1937."

CHRONOLOGY GIVEN

Incidentally, this sum is a trifle more than the total State school fund appropriation for the current year. It would be sufficient to wipe out, with some to spare, the prospective State general fund deficit.

The bare chronological record bears out the Lee intimation that Governor Phillips was determined to protect private utility rates by preventing effective public power competition.

February 6: Phillips criticizes employment by G. R. D. A. of "nonresidents." (Manager Wright came from California.)

March 29: Phillips confers with northeastern Oklahoma legislators. Promises to reappoint four of nine G. R. D. A. members. Charges old board failed to make land purchases, gave salaried jobs to several members.

April 5: House passes Phillips bill for five-man board. The five would be named by him and could be removed by the mere filing of charges. Under the original G. R. D. A. Act of 1935 the board consisted of nine men, three each appointed by the Governor, attorney general, and commissioner of labor, removable only after filing of charges and a public hearing.

May 4: Secretary Ickes says he favors further Federal aid, but under a plan similar to Bonneville system, under which consumers would be guaranteed savings in electricity costs.

May 10: Senator LEE favors $10,000,000 additional additional appropriation for Markham and Gibson Dams but says: "I shall insist that it be written into the law that the control of the sale of electricity from these projects cannot pass to the Governor of the State through his control of the members of the board by appointment. The whole purpose of constructing projects such as these is to give the people the benefit of cheap electricity, but if a Governor who is friendly to the utilities could control the sale of this electricity through his power to appoint the members of the board, then the whole purpose of such a program could be nullified."

October 11: Phillips demands G. R. D. A. pay $870,000 for highways to be inundated by the Pensacola Dam. G. R. D. A. holds amount exorbitant—later agrees to pay.

October 31: Wright negotiates with Public Service Co. for purchase of G. R. D. A. power. Denies Phillips' claim that G. R. D. A. won't produce enough power even for Tulsa. Says Tulsa peak is 37,000 kilowatts, Pensacola peak 60,000. Calls attention to third alternative for disposition of G. R. D. A. power: "Sale of part of the power to existing utilities under the agreement that the utilities pass along the benefits of cheap electricity to consumers."

November 7: Wright's resignation demanded by board.

November 9: Wright in Washington says in discussing reason for demand for resignation: "I am known to be a public power man, and the utility interests are strong in Oklahoma."

December 16: P. W. A. says manager should be one whose past record would convince the public of his qualifications and his attitude toward the use of public power for the benefit of the people of Oklahoma.

December 20: G. R. D. A. again elects McNaughton. P. W. A. says: "Any further consideration of him is, to our mind, futile, and serves only to delay final selection of a satisfactory general manager. We strongly urge the board to proceed at once to select someone qualified for the job."

Meantime, if lack of P. W. A. funds delays completion of Pensacola Dam past the spring rains, not enough water will be impounded to permit of generation of power this year, and consumers would have to wait longer for cheap power. Beneficiaries of delay would be private utilities.

WORK ON DAM AT YOUR PERIL, PHILLIPS TELLS UNITED STATES

OKLAHOMA CITY, March 8.—Gov. Leon Phillips tonight made public a letter to Secretary of War Woodring demanding the Government halt work on the $54,000,000 Red River Dam or proceed at your peril.

Phillips said the State would protect its rights with all means at its command.

PHILLIPS TALKS DYNAMITE USE TO HALT DAM—GRAND RIVER PROJECT THREATENED UNLESS UNITED STATES PAYS FOR ROADS

Governor Phillips declared Monday he would not be adverse to blasting Grand River Dam to prevent flooding in his fight for Federal money to replace inundated highways under the lake.

Asked to explain what he meant by closing the dam, he said, "I mean closing that hole so that we would have to dynamite it to let the water through."

PLANS TO CLOSE DAM READY

Thus, a show-down in the squabble between Phillips and the Public Works Administration over highway damages in the dam area loomed nearer.

In Vinita, W. R. Holway, chief engineer on the project, announced that plans are ready to close the last section of the dam and begin inundation soon after April 1.

DOESN'T WANT TO USE FORCE

Phillips declared he will take action to prevent the closure if the Public Works Administration does not meet his demands for $800,000 to cover the cost of replacing roads and bridges.

"I'm watching it," said the Governor.

"The thing that will start the backing up of water is what we've got to prevent. I may be able to stop it with a phone call to the Grand River Dam Authority. I don't want to use force (the militia) if I can avoid it."

The road controversy is at a stalemate. John Carmody, power director for the Public Works Administration in Washington, insists that the State waive further claims in consideration for a $350,000 bridge built across the Grand River by the Public Works Administration about 2 years ago. His suggestion that the question be settled by litigation was scorned by Phillips.

OKLAHOMA READIES TROOPS IN DAM ROW

DISNEY, OKLA., March 13.—The Oklahoma National Guard is mobilizing today to stop construction on the $20,000,000 Grand River Dam and hydroelectric project being built in northeast Oklahoma with Federal funds.

Governor Leon Phillips, a Democrat, antinew dealer, and foe of public power projects, was preparing a proclamation of martial law for the project area. The troops are mobilizing at Muskogee, 50 miles away, ready to march to the dam when the proclamation is issued.

Governor Phillips' action is part of his fight with the Public Works Administration over the amount to be paid the State for the flooding of three highways and two bridges, caused by the dam and its reservoir.

Governor Phillips wants the P. W. A. to pay $850,000. The P. W. A. claims it had an agreement with Governor Phillips' predecessor, Governor E. W. Marland, to pay $350,000. Governor Phillips maintains the agreement was verbal if there was actually one, and is, therefore, void.

ALMOST COMPLETED

Officials of the Grand River Dam Authority, an agency created by the State which is in charge of the project, indicated there would be no resistance—that work would cease.

The project is almost completed. The dam had been scheduled to take its first water April 1. The Authority's engineer said that if the dam is left open after April 1, when the flood season begins, the unfinished foundations might be damaged seriously.

In Washington, Acting Public Works Administrator E. W. Clark pointed out that the project was being constructed under State, not Federal, authority. If Governor Phillips wanted to start a "civil war" in Oklahoma, he said, "it was just too bad."

Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody recalled that 10 days ago he urged Governor Phillips to take his claim to the courts.

"The only marching troops I know anything about are marching in Europe and Asia," he said. "Even there, civilized people are trying to reach an armistice. Here, we are at peace and here we have courts."

P. W. A. GRANTED $9,000,000

The dam authority was established in 1935. It sold $11,000,000 in bonds to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Public Works Administration granted $9,000,000. The bonds were to be retired through the sale of hydro generated electricity to private utilities serving the area. Private utilities did not oppose the project.

Governor Phillips said the dam would never earn $11,000,000. He called it a white elephant.

"They couldn't sell that much electricity in those three counties up there in 50 years," he said.

AGAINST EVERYTHING

Charles Schwoerke, critic of Governor Phillips' policies, charged he had "gotten to the point where he is against anything originating in Washington. He has been friendly to all the utilities and, I believe, fears that the competition of a hydroelectric plant will force down power rates in Oklahoma."

The project gave employment to 3,000 men when work was at its peak. The dam is 150 feet high and is 6,500 feet long. When it is closed 52,000 acres will be flooded.

RED RIVER DAM NEXT

Next in line for martial law, Governor Phillips said, is the $53,000,000 Red River Dam, a Federal power and flood-control project on the Oklahoma-Texas border. It is in the initial stages of construction on the Texas side only, but Governor Phillips threatened to send the National Guard over "as soon as they stop puttering around on the Texas side and set foot on Oklahoma soil."

He has asked the United States Supreme Court for an injunction to block construction of that dam. The project, he said, was clearly a violation of States' rights, since Oklahoma had not approved it.

Governor Phillips campaigned for the governorship on a New Deal platform but soon after his election he split with the policies of the Roosevelt administration.

[From the Washington Post of March 13, 1940]

MILITIA TO HALT COMPLETION OF UNITED STATES DAM—OKLAHOMA GOVERNOR TO ISSUE MARTIAL LAW DECREE AT $20,000,000 PROJECT

OKLAHOMA CITY, March 12.—Gov. Leon G. Phillips said he would declare martial law tomorrow at the $20,000,000 Grand River Dam in northeastern Oklahoma and send troops to prevent its final completion.

Phillips decided he had reached a stalemate with the Public Works Administration, with whom he has been pressing a demand of the State highway department for $850,000.

The sum represents the State's claim for damages the vast lake would do to roads and bridges in the four counties it would invade.

The National Guard men will establish their rule only over the arch where the last bit of concrete would be poured to enable closing the gates and impounding water.

Phillips said he had heard from private sources that final work on the arch was under way.

The red-headed Governor said he did not know how many guardsmen would be dispatched, nor what time they would move in.

The Governor's announcement followed a telephone conversation with Ray McNaughton, chairman of the board of directors of the Grand River Dam Authority.

He said McNaughton told him he was unable to obtain satisfactory assurances from Washington that the money would be put up for the benefit of Oklahoma if the State won its claim.

The controversy over completion of the mile-long dam, which would impound 52,000 acres of water to operate as a hydroelectric project, came to a swift climax this week after months of negotiation.

Few Oklahomans would be surprised if Phillips should take similar action at the $50,000,000 Denison flood-control, hydroelectric project on Red River, if it became necessary to enforce his claims for damage to State property.

Acting Public Works Administrator E. W. Clark said last night the $20,000,000 hydroelectric dam on the Grand River, near Vinita, Okla., is being constructed under authority of the State legislature, not the Federal Government, and if Governor Phillips wants to start a civil war in his State, "it is just too bad."

Advised that Phillips had ordered out the National Guard to block construction, Clark said:

"Doesn't the Governor know that the project is being built under authority of the State legislature, with only a loan and grant by the Federal Government?"

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. LEE. I was about to yield the floor, but if the Senator from Alabama wishes to ask me a question, I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. HILL. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HATCH. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Oklahoma has well stated that the only issue raised in Oklahoma is in respect to two dams where hydroelectric power is generated. In other words, as I understand, no question is raised as to the dams which are being constructed in connection with which no hydroelectric power is to be generated. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. Of course, since the Senator is familiar with the record, he knows that it was perfectly satisfactory through the years for the Government to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars, and millions of dollars, in the construction of dams, so long as those dams did not generate any hydroelectric power. It was only when we started constructing dams generating hydroelectric power that we were met with tremendous opposition, and every means possible was used to prevent the construction of such dams.

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Oklahoma has well said that, after all, this is simply a fight to get cheap electricity for the people of Oklahoma. We are all familiar with the long, devoted, and valiant fight waged by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to bring about the development of the Tennessee Valley and the Tennessee River. We know how, after disappointments and defeats, and after being confronted by seemingly insurmountable obstacles, he won that fight, and great dams have been built on the Tennessee River. The cities of Bessemer and Tarrant City, adjoining the city of Birmingham, in the Birmingham area, a few miles from that city, applied for loans from the W. P. A. in order that they might build their own municipal distribution plants. They also asked the T. V. A. to sell them power. The T. V. A. agreed to sell the power. The P. W. A. agreed to make the loans in order that the distribution plant might be built. Then what happened? These cities were thwarted in every step by the Birmingham Electric Power Co. and the Alabama Power Co., which furnished the power to the Birmingham Electric Power Co., and five different suits were brought in the courts in an effort to keep those cities from constructing their own distribution plants and from enjoying the benefit of the cheap T. V. A. power. The cities won their fight. They are now getting T. V. A. power.

What has been the result? Not only are the two cities of Bessemer and Tarrant City getting the power today at cheap T. V. A. rates, but as the result of T. V. A. power coming into the Birmingham area, the great city of Birmingham and all the other cities in that area have had their power rates reduced by the Birmingham Electric Power Co. and by the Alabama Power Co. to a point practically the same as the T. V. A. rates.

The fact of the matter is that when the T. V. A. power was turned on at Bessemer, Ala., the Birmingham Electric Power Co. carried a big advertisement telling about how it had reduced rates, and proclaiming that since 1933, when Congress passed the T. V. A. Act, and when the power program with reference to P. W. A. loans was enacted, the Birmingham Electric Power Co. had reduced electric rates in the Birmingham area not once, twice, or three times, but seven different times. I hope the people of Oklahoma will profit by the experience of the people of Bessemer and of Tarrant City and that they will fight this thing to the last, because, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has so well said, it is a battle to obtain cheap electric rates for them.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator; and I thank the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 16, 17, and 18, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named in such amendment, insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by such amendment, and on page 51 of the bill, commencing with the colon (:) in line 14, strike out the remainder of the line and line 15 and line 16 to and including the word "to"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$9,975,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have before me an editorial which I clipped this afternoon from the columns of the Washington Daily News entitled "This Is Where We Came In." I should like to have the editorial printed in the RECORD at this juncture, together with an article which I likewise clipped this afternoon from the columns of the same newspaper, the Washington Daily News, entitled "Plain Economics."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News]

THIS IS WHERE WE CAME IN

The filibustering debate on the Hatch bill has reached a point where opposition Senators are offering the same amendments over and over, using different language, and making the same speeches over and over, without using different language.

All this new Hatch bill does is to give to State employees who are paid with United States funds the same protection which the existing Hatch Act already gives Federal employees—protection against coercion of their ballots or shakedowns for campaign funds. Also it applies to United States paid State employees the same rules that Federal employees are required to observe against taking active part in political management or political campaigns. All persons affected by the present Hatch law or by this new measure will be free to vote as they please, speak as they please, and keep the money they earn—or give it away if they please. These simple facts about the legislation continue to stand out despite all the far-fetched misrepresentations that have been uttered and reuttered.

The President of the United States wants this new bill passed. A majority of the Senate is eager to vote its passage. And our guess is that a preponderance of rank-and-file citizens think it is high time to call the roll.

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

CHICAGO, March 14.—While Democratic politicians in Congress try to beat the Hatch bill to end the corruption of Government employees, an ugly scandal grows and darkens around the corpse of a wretched man here in Illinois who was the manager of the kind of slush fund that bill tries to kill.

Politicians, contractors, grafters, and various virtuous citizens are trembling lest the secrets of a "little black book" in which the dead F. Lynden Smith recorded the intake and outgo of the corruption fund of the State Democratic organization should become public. Smith is dead and police are trying to find out whether he killed himself or was bumped off.

There is nothing new about political leaders and bosses forcing Government employees to contribute to their war chests. But until recently it was always looked upon as disreputable. Political reformers denounced it, tried to find ways to end it.

F. Lynden Smith, who apparently has just killed himself in Illinois, was the guardian of the money bag of the State Democratic 2-percent slush fund. He was an aide of Governor Horner.

Governor Horner is supposed to be a man of great probity and social vision. In Chicago the Kelly-Nash machine is just an old-time political racket, getting its funds from racketeers, liquor, bookie, and girl joints. But the Horner machine was supposed to be touched with the great white light of civic virtue. To fight the battle of the pee-pul, to save the forgotten man, and drive back the Kelly-Nash hordes in Chicago, the State machine had its 2-percent clubs—every person on the State pay roll is supposed to kick in 2 percent out of every dollar of pay for the Horner war chest. And Lynden Smith was the custodian and comptroller general of this fund.

But, of course, if it is all right to make a poor clerk hand over 2 cents out of every dollar of pay, why is it not equally all right to make every contractor and coal dealer hand over a percentage on every dollar of profit he makes? And so the machine was compelling everybody to kick in—the coal men 10 cents on every ton they sold, the contractors on some other basis. And the fund ran into the hundreds of thousands. There was always a huge war chest. And Smith held it.

But a chunk of money like that, gathered that way, inevitably corrupts the minds of the men who control it. And so the men around Governor Horner began to fight over its custody. Smith lost that fight. The battle got noisy and stimulated investigations. Smith had a black book full of names. The air was full of scandal. And then last week Smith was found in a bathtub dead, after having attempted to stab himself a few minutes before.

But now what of the 2-percent clubs? Well, paint them any color you wish, call them anything you like, gild them as you will, they are corrupt by every standard. They are corrupt when they are run by Tammany Hall or some crooked leader in Kansas City or Louisiana, and they are corrupt when they are run by some virtuous politician under the pretense of saving the pee-pul.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when I rose a few moments ago I wanted to speak briefly in reply to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], but I hardly think I shall take the time to reply just now.

With reference to the Washington Daily News, I wish to say that I have greatly appreciated the very fine support which has been given to this particular measure, not only by the Scripps-Howard newspapers throughout the country but by practically the entire press of the country.

I will say to the Senator from Indiana that yesterday I noticed that when one or two editorials appeared in scattering newspapers in opposition to the pending bill, the opponents of the measure made great haste to insert those editorials in the RECORD. I have not done so with the various clippings which have come to me from newspapers all over the country, because I did not want to encumber the RECORD. Likewise, I thought it would serve no useful purpose. However, I do appreciate the support of the press of the country for this measure, and also for the measure which we passed last year.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana portrayed a very pitiful picture of a man gathering his little family about him at his fireside, and his neighbors coming in, and the man not being able to discuss or even mention politics.

I appreciate fair argument and fair debate; and I am perfectly willing at any time to meet any of the real imperfections of the bill, if there be imperfections—and I am sure there are—and to argue and debate real issues with the Senator from Indiana or anyone else. However, I grow just a little weary of the extreme, unwarranted, and altogether unfounded statements which have been continually made throughout the course of this debate as to the effect of the bill. It has been constantly referred to as a measure to deprive the people of the right of free speech. The same thing was said of the measure which we passed last year.

I am quite sure Senators read the law and know what it contains. I am just as jealous of the rights of the citizens of this country as is any other Senator, and I am just as zealous as is any other Member of this body in the protection of the rights of citizens, according to my lights and my judgment. Being zealous, I wrote into the original law this provision; and I ask Senators to listen to what the law says, and not to extreme, unwarranted interpretations:

> All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

That language was written into the law, Mr. President.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. No; I do not care to yield.

Mr. BROWN. Not just now, or not at all?

Mr. HATCH. I do not care to yield just now.

The language to which I refer differs from the rule of the Civil Service Commission in this respect: The rule of the Civil Service Commission says they may express their opinions privately. I did not like the word "privately." It did not sound good to me as an American citizen, and the word "privately" was stricken out. The law stands today just as I have read it.

In the original bill which I introduced at this session the same words were included, as I intended them to be. Later, and for the first time after the bill reached the floor of the Senate, I observed that in the redraft of the committee amendment those words had been omitted. I have been waiting day after day for some hard-swinging Senators, hitting right and left, to pick that up and accuse me of some dire, mysterious, and deep-seated plot against the liberties of the citizens of this country because those words were omitted. It had been my intention all the time to do what I shall now do, Mr. President.

I ask unanimous consent to insert, on page 4, line 22, following the word "campaigns" and the period, the identical language which appeared in the bill as I introduced it, and which appears in the original act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, what page is that?

Mr. HATCH. Page 4, following the word "campaigns" and the period, in line 22. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted the words:

> All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I merely mention that matter, Mr. President, to show that we have been careful and zealous in protecting the rights of citizens.

I do not wish to drag out the discussion longer. As I said yesterday, everything that can be said on the bill probably has been said not once but a dozen times. We are going over the same arguments, back and forth. I want to vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the word "subjects" include candidates?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the inanimate term "subjects" include candidates?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The word "subjects" covers only inanimate things, does it not?

Mr. HATCH. No; it has never been so construed. It means what it says, that the personal liberties of citizens are not restricted; and nobody wants to restrict them.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. No; I do not think I shall yield any further. I wish to finish what I have to say.

As I previously stated, I hope we may defeat the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], much as I appreciate his fine support. I know the high principle and motive behind his amendment. Nevertheless, I hope it may be defeated, and I hope we may now proceed to vote on this and other amendments as rapidly as possible until the bill is finished.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The right to express political opinions has been defined by the Civil Service Commission to mean the private expression of such opinions.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; the word "privately" is in the rule of the Civil Service Commission. It is not in the law.

Mr. MINTON. The Civil Service Commission has defined the right to express political opinions as the right to do so privately.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, that is because the word "privately" is included in the rule of the Civil Service Commission. The word "privately" is written into the rule. That is the word which I dropped out. I did it deliberately, intentionally, and I want it to remain out. As to what it means, I refer the Senator from Indiana to the message of the President of the United States in approving the Hatch Act, in which he discussed this very subject, and said that the act does not infringe upon the liberties of the citizens.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me say to the Senator that we are now on the side of the question on which I agree with him; and I ask this question on that side.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the Senator will remain on this side.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I take the position that we should not change the present Hatch law, passed last year. We have not had an election since Congress passed it and the President signed it, and I do not think we should change it now.

I wish to ask this question about the Senator's last argument: What is the distinction between taking an active part in political campaigns and the right to express opinions on all political subjects? Take the case of the man who is going around in a precinct. He expresses his opinion. Just where does the line of distinction fall? If he expresses his opinion under one set of circumstances, it comes within the second sentence; and if he expresses his opinion under another set of circumstances, it comes within the first sentence. I should like to have the Senator explain just where the line of distinction lies.

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate the Senator's question. As I said, I do not want to take the time further to discuss this measure. The President has already pointed out in his message one distinction, which I think is a very sound distinction. It certainly would not include the case mentioned by the Senator from Indiana. Such a thing would be perfectly legitimate. However, taking the stump and making speeches in behalf of a candidate or a party would be undue political activity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], as modified.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I have asked for a yea-and-nay vote; but before we vote I should like to say a few words.

The amendment which I have offered is simplicity itself. It merely does one single thing; it puts upon the person who is working politically to gain an office exactly the same restrictions that it puts upon the person who is theoretically working to retain his office. In other words, the logic of the amendment is that what is good for one party is good for two parties. A further bit of logic is that if the theory of the Hatch bill is proper, and employees of the Federal Government should be restricted in their activities, then those who are seeking to become employees of the Federal Government should at least not immediately become the beneficiaries of their acts.

The Hatch Act as it is, and as it will become when amended would be, without my amendment, an act against the party and not against individuals. It is so that the act may be against the actions of individuals, and not against actions of individuals in a particular party, that the amendment is offered.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Andrews	Frazier	Lucas	Shipstead
Austin	George	McCarran	Smathers
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Bankhead	Gibson	McNary	Stewart
Barbour	Gillette	Maloney	Taft

Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Davis	La Follette	Schwartz
Donahey	Lee	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that on this question the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "nay" and I am informed that the Senator from Utah would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay" and I am advised that the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER. I have a pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I am advised, however, that he would vote as I intend to, and I am, therefore, at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague [Mr. TRUMAN] is detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is unavoidably detained. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is attending a committee meeting and is, therefore, unable to be present.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—18

Bankhead	Glass	Minton	Smathers
Brown	Guffey	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Herring	Pepper	Thomas, Utah
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Donahey	La Follette	Schwellenbach

NAYS—59

Adams	Bilbo	Connally	Gerry

Byrd	Hughes	Overton	White
Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Utah was rejected.

USE OF INSIGNIA OF VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5982) for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. VAN NUYS, and Mr. DANAHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have at the clerk's desk an amendment which I hope the Senator from New Mexico will accept. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the committee amendment it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent any person employed by the Federal Government, the State government, the municipal government, or any agency thereof, from becoming a bona fide candidate for any public office and engaging in any lawful political activity in furtherance of his candidacy and in support of his party in the event he takes a leave of absence without pay from his employment during the campaign.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, rule 14 of the Civil Service Rules, which is contained on a franked card sent out by the Senator from New Mexico, prohibits civil-service employees from becoming candidates for nomination or election to any National, State, county, or municipal office and would prohibit the officers and employees proscribed by this measure.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, I am in no position to accept mandates. We are dealing with committee amendments. But so far as I personally am concerned, I have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have not taken any time in this debate, and I do not think anybody should object because I ask a question.

I am rather disappointed that the Senator from New Mexico should accept this amendment. Certainly, if the philosophy that he has is a correct one, there should be nothing to which he would more object than a person who has contacts with a political organization taking a leave of absence during the period of the campaign and then coming back and getting his job again. It seems to me the Senator from New Mexico certainly should object to this amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I thing the Senator from Washington perhaps misapprehends the meaning of the amendment. It would not permit an official of the Government to take a leave of absence and participate in a political campaign unless he was a bona fide candidate for office. Then he could participate, of course, in his own campaign, and in the campaign of his political party which was conducted at the same time his own campaign was in effect.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I know of nothing which might involve more impure politics than for a man who occupies an executive position, who has under him a large number of employees, to take a leave of absence with the understanding that he is going to run for office, and then come back and again hold his position if he is defeated in the election. I am astounded that the Senator from New Mexico is willing to agree to the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, I am not in agreement with a good many of the propositions the Senator from New Mexico has advanced here; but it seemed to me that when we went so far as absolutely to prohibit a man from being a candidate for office, no matter if he was willing to lay aside his employment for the entire period of the campaign, we were going away beyond what the Senate and the House ought to do.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MILLER. I did not clearly understand the provisions of the amendment. Would it apply only to State, county, and municipal employees?

Mr. BROWN. To any employee of the Federal Government, the State governments, the municipal governments, or any of the agencies thereof.

Mr. MILLER. That is all right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In the case of the W. P. A., the Senator's amendment would simply permit a W. P. A. administrator, let us say a State administrator, to take a leave of absence, run for Governor, Senator, or any other office he pleased, and in the meantime hold over the persons who are in the W. P. A. the threat that "As soon as this election is over I shall be back and be over you, and you had better watch your step in the meantime."

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is very unfair in the way he puts his question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That would be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. There is nothing in the amendment which permits a man to make a threat of any kind; and the present law amply protects any employee of the W. P. A. or any person who is on relief from coercion or threats of any kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In the case of a poor devil who is employed as a timekeeper, or who has come to the W. P. A. from the relief rolls, and who knows that the man who has been his boss is going to be his boss again unless he is elected to office as a candidate, does the Senator think he is going to feel perfectly free in his action because somebody says, "You shall not be coerced?" How does he know what the W. P. A. director is going to do when he comes back?

Mr. BROWN. I should not have the slightest objection, if the Senator from Missouri should propose it, to exempting officials of the W. P. A. from the provisions of this exception, because we especially legislated regarding them in the original Hatch Act; but I believe that any citizen of the United States has a right to aspire to political office, and I do not think a professor in the University of Michigan, who probably has no income other than his salary, ought to be denied the right to run for office if he is willing to lay down his office during the period that he is a candidate.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator from Michigan think the illustration given by the Senator from Missouri is more apparent than real? Because a man who happens to be the administrator of W. P. A. over a State is running for office, the Senator from Missouri seems to indicate that that fact in itself is a warning to everybody who works under him that they have to do what the administrator wants them to do, and go and vote for him on election day. How is the administrator going to know how they vote when they get in the booth and pull the curtain behind them?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Michigan will permit me, that is the same old argument that was made against the railroads threatening their employees back in 1896. I can remember the Democrats going around and telling the railroad employees, "The officials of the railroads will not know how you vote," but it was impossible to make the railroad employees believe that they would not find out; and it will be impossible to make the W. P. A. employees believe that there will not be a leak, and that the man who has in his absolute control their means of livelihood may not be able to find out how they voted. That condition applies not only to the W. P. A. but all up and down the line to Government offices.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I think the position taken by the Senator from Missouri, especially about the W. P. A., is absolutely correct; and I should very much like to see the Senator from Michigan amend his suggested amendment and certainly exclude any official of the W. P. A.

Mr. BROWN. I realize that we have applied a different rule to relief workers and relief employees of the Government than we have to others. I was particularly aiming at State officials, municipal officials, county officials, and Federal employees who are not on the relief rolls.

I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment exempting from the exception in the act officials who I think are referred to in section 3 of the existing Hatch law.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Is there any real distinction, so far as the W. P. A. is concerned? Is not the distinction whether these people have employees under them or not? If the Senator would say that we would make an exemption of those who do not have more than five employees under them, or something of that kind, I would not object to the amendment; but I happened to run in an election against a couple of men who were in office, and I know what their employees did for them, because they knew what their bosses would do when they got back into their jobs after they lost the election. I may be personally prejudiced in the matter because I had such an experience, but I do not think anyone occupying one public office should be privileged to run for another office. I do not say we should write anything into the law which would lay down that rule, but I do say, on the other hand, we certainly should not make an exception in the proposed act and say that it is perfectly proper for someone occupying a public office to take a leave of absence and then get his job back when he meets defeat in the election.

Mr. BROWN. We have classified the W. P. A. relief workers in the original Hatch Act very differently from the way we have classified the general employees of the Government of the United States. For instance, a W. P. A. worker may not make any contribution, voluntary or involuntary, to a political campaign, while all other Government employees may make voluntary contributions.

Mr .CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not the distinction the Senator says we have drawn a rather shadowy one? There may be a collector of internal revenue who has under him perhaps 75 or 200 employees. Then there may be a W. P. A. official who has a good many W. P. A. employees under him. What have those employees? In each case they have jobs, have they not? That is all they have—jobs which they are holding by virtue of the appointment or selection of their chief. So I do not see anything which differentiates the W. P. A. man who has a poor job from some other employee who has a good job.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator appreciates the fact that in the case of the W. P. A. employee the relief funds of the Treasury of the United States are being used.

Mr. CONNALLY. I grant that.

Mr. BROWN. While the other officials are officials who are conducting the general affairs of the Government of the United States, they do not have a large number of employees under them, certainly not nearly so large a number as those upon the W. P. A. rolls. While my amendment was originally drawn to give every Government employee, every State employee, every municipal employee the right to run for public office if he took a leave of absence, yet I was willing, in order to satisfy the Senator from Washington and the Senator from New Mexico, to leave out executives in the W. P. A.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there may be legitimate objection to exempting any particular class of employees, because there may be other supervisory and administrative officials who have just as much power over their subordinates as has any supervisor or administrator of the W. P. A. Would the Senator from Michigan be willing to accept an amendment along this line, exempting from the provisions of his amendment those who occupy administrative and supervisory positions, so that it would take away, even during the period of suspension from their own employment, while they are candidates, the implied fear, the intellectual reaction of the voter to what might happen to him if the supervisory officer should be defeated and should return to his original employment? In that case we would not be picking out any particular class of employee for exemption, but we would be picking those who might exercise influence over others. I offer that to the Senator merely as a suggestion.

Mr. BROWN. I am very happy to have the suggestion from the majority leader. I do not know just to whom it would apply. For instance, a deputy highway commissioner in the State of Michigan might aspire to the office of highway commissioner, which is a perfectly logical ambition for him to have. If the activity were connected with the construction of Federal-aid highways in the State of Michigan, he would be prohibited, under the present law, and under the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico, from becoming a candidate for higher office unless he gave up what amounts to a civil-service position, which he is fairly certain to hold for a considerable length of time. Unless he were willing to give that up, he could not be a candidate.

Likewise, taking the case of a gentleman whom the Senator from Kentucky knew, of whom I spoke the other day, the famous dean emeritus of our college of engineering at the University of Michigan, Dean Cooley, who was a candidate for the United States Senate in 1930. I think he should be permitted to be a candidate for office if he is willing to retire from his position for the time being. So I do not know just how far the suggestion of the Senator would go.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say to the Senator in that connection that I doubt very much whether the president of the university or a teacher in a university would have such control over those under him—the students, or the professors or teachers—as really to make it necessary to worry much about it.

Mr. BROWN. I think that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. This movement has not grown up because of any complaint connected with the universities or the teaching profession.

Mr. BROWN. But the dean of the school of engineering would certainly be an administrative officer.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I do not believe the Senator from Kentucky has concluded his interruption.

Mr. BARKLEY. He would not, under the Senator's amendment, or the suggestion involving the W. P. A., be eliminated. He would not be exempted even under that, unless the W. P. A. were contributing to the activities of the college or the university with respect to its engineering activities. That would happen only when they were building a new structure, as many of the universities have done, including the university of my own State; but the W. P. A. has very little to do in their general engineering activities, I understand.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the W. P. A. exception would affect the head of the school of engineering in any way.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I rose to see if I could get clear in my own mind just how far the Senator from Michigan desired to go with his amendment and what exemptions he would be willing to make from the effect of his amendment. My understanding is that he stated a moment ago that he saw a sound reason for excluding from the provisions of his amendment persons who were directing W. P. A. work. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. BROWN. I should like to utter merely a sentence or so in that connection. I see some reason for it, and I am impelled to agree with the Senator from New Mexico, who made the suggestion, because in the original Hatch law he has differentiated between relief workers and the supervisory personnel.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. BROWN. I should be very glad to have the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the purpose for which I rose; first, dealing with the W. P. A. administrative employee; and second, with regular civil-service employees. It is my understanding that under the present civil-service rule a civil-service employee who is holding a position without term——

Mr. BROWN. Let us say a postmaster.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is to say, holding a position for life, is not permitted to take leave of absence and become a candidate. Would the Senator object to inserting at the proper place in his amendment some such language as this, "Except persons holding regular United States civil-service positions and persons employed in a supervisory or administrative capacity and paid out of any Federal appropriation for relief or work relief"?

Mr. BROWN. What does the Senator from New Mexico think of that suggestion?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming is a good one if the amendment is to be adopted. Would the Senator desire to accept it?

Mr. BROWN. It sounds logical to me. I had not thought of civil-service employees, except postmasters.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me suggest that if it is desired to do what I understand the Senator from Michigan wishes to do, he could except all State, county, and municipal officers who are affected by the act and permit them to become candidates for office. But, put in the broad way in which it is now suggested, the amendment is exceedingly vicious. It has all the vice that is sought to be eliminated by the Hatch Act and under the philosophy of that act, which is to secure free elections. It is not a question of purity in politics; we will never have that. But we can make elections reasonably free from official coercion. We can save the very basis of the democratic process by preserving the freedom of elections.

There is an objection to saying that a State, county, or municipal officeholder—a member of a school board, if you please—cannot become an active candidate for office in a State because he has been engaged in administering a project to which the Federal Government has contributed. But I think the Senator could do all he desires by relieving from the ban every State, every county, every municipal officer, or the officer of any political subdivision within a State, leaving the prohibition to remain against the Federal officer. Then we would not be troubled with the question of the civil service, and we would not be troubled with any other question such as that concerning W. P. A. administrative officers.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator from Georgia. I think that solves several questions.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not believe there would be any objection to the amendment if it were restricted in that way.

Mr. BROWN. I did not have Federal officials primarily in mind.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. BROWN. And all through the debate I have been worried over the city and county employee—the small employee.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is quite correct. I think his amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator from Michigan in that connection that I wish he would not press his amendment at this time, but that we take time to try to work out something different, because a while ago, when I said I would not object to the amendment, I did not realize how far-reaching the language was, and all it might accomplish. After listening to the discussion on the floor, and visualizing what could take place under the amendment, absolutely contrary to the very thing I have been trying to do, I feel that if the amendment is left in its present shape, or even with the suggested modifications, I should be compelled to object to it and ask that it be defeated. If the Senator from Michigan would defer this amendment I believe we could perhaps work out provisions which would accomplish the things he wants to do, but not destroy what all of us are trying to accomplish.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I believe the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia would meet the situation. Certainly it would cover the case brought up in my suggestion.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that if I applied the suggestion of the senior Senator from Georgia, the amendment would read as follows:

> Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent any person employed by the Federal Government, the State government, the municipal government, or any agency thereof, from becoming a bona fide candidate for any public office and engaging in any lawful political activity in furtherance of his candidacy in the event he takes a leave of absence without pay from his employment during the campaign.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in this connection I do not want to change existing law. I would rather wait and see what we can do about the matter under discussion. Therefore I suggest to the Senator that action on the amendment be not pressed by him at this time.

Mr. BROWN. I do not desire to press action on the amendment against the objection of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I think the Senator from New Mexico has advanced a sound argument. I think we all are coming to the conclusion that the bill ought to be recommitted. It is becoming so confused, so difficult to understand, that I think we ought to recommit the bill so as to give it more study.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am not confused, and it is not difficult for me to understand my position. The bill as it is written suits me well. I have been trying to work with Senators possibly to get a vote on the bill and dispose of it, and I have tried not to be unreasonable in my attitude. The bill is perfectly all right with me. I am ready to vote now.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like for a moment to challenge the statement of the Senator by advancing one reason why there should be an exception in the case of educational institutions. It happens, so far as I am personally concerned, that prior to the time I filed for the Senate I occupied an administrative position in our State university. The first thing I did when I filed for the Senate was to resign from that position. I think it is extremely important that no one connected with an educational institution be permitted to run for public office.

One thing we must do is to keep our educational institutions out of politics. I know I could not control any votes on the faculty of that university, but I resigned because I believed I had no right to drag the university into politics.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator felt he should resign as a trustee of the University of Washington in order to run for the Senate because there might be some influence on his part upon the officials and the members of the faculty of the university——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; that was not it. I did not delude myself that I had very much influence.

Mr. BROWN. Let me finish. Why should not the Senator resign from the United States Senate before he becomes a candidate for reelection to the United States Senate? It seems to me the same reasoning applies in both cases.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; there is a difference. I did not resign because I thought I had influence over the faculty, but because I knew that that institution should not be dragged into politics, and that if I kept my position, or if I took a leave of absence, I was going to drag it into politics.

Mr. BROWN. I happen to be a trustee of the Methodist college from which I graduated in 1911.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is not a tax-supported institution, is it?

Mr. BROWN. In part it is. It receives considerable aid from the N. Y. A. and from other Government funds, and there has, I am certain, never been the slightest suspicion that simply because I was a trustee of that institution, that college, my alma mater, was dragged into politics. If a regent or a trustee of the University of Washington, or a teacher on the faculty tried to become a candidate for the office of mayor of the city of Seattle, Wash., or for Senator of the United States, or even President, he certainly would not thereby drag that institution into politics.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does not the Senator believe if he had been occupying the same position in the University of Michigan that he occupied in the private institution, that the whole university would have been dragged into the political campaign?

Mr. BROWN. As I have instanced several times, the dean emeritus of the college of engineering was the Democratic candidate for the United States Senate in the year 1930, and certainly the great university of Michigan was not involved in that political campaign.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is much difference between a dean emeritus, who is for all practical purposes retired, except that he draws perhaps an amount equal to half of his salary, or something like that, and has an honorable connection with the institution, and someone who is actively connected with the institution, and who, if he loses his political battle, will not have ended active connection with the institution after the election is over.

Mr. BROWN. I recall, if I am not mistaken, that Prof. Marion LeRoy Burton, president of the University of Minnesota and afterward president of the University of Michigan, was once the keynote speaker at a political convention. That did not drag the university into politics.

I think we are going altogether too far with this matter. We seem to forget that we still have a secret ballot in the United States, and no matter how a person may talk, he can vote without anyone knowing how he votes.

Mr. President, I yield to the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico, and if he is unwilling to accept this amendment, I am perfectly agreeable to let it go over until tomorrow.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator that from the conversations I have had with many Senators who are interested, I am confident we can work out something which will be agreeable.

Mr. BROWN. Very well. I temporarily withdraw the amendment, Mr. President, and will ask for its consideration tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what was the last statement made by the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan temporarily withdraws his amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think the time has come when we ought to arrive at an agreement with respect to voting. We all had hoped, and I am sure I speak for those opposing the bill, as well as those who are supporting it, that we would have disposed of the proposed legislation by this time. Obviously we cannot dispose of it today; but I think we ought to dispose of it tomorrow, and if we can dispose of it tomorrow, I should be disposed to adjourn over the week end. I do not offer that as an inducement but simply to say what is on my mind.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent that not later than 5 p. m. tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and all amendments and all motions pertaining thereto, and that no amendment shall be offered which has not been sent to the desk and read for the information of the Senate not later than 4:40 p. m. tomorrow.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, at the earliest possible date I intend to move to strike section 15 from the bill. My reasons are that the section is clearly unconstitutional. I am not sure that it makes much difference, but I desire the record to show that in the opinion of at least one Member of the Senate, section 15 as now printed in the bill is clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. McKELLAR. Make it two Members of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This section pretends to delegate congressional power. The decisions are all one way. The Congress may delegate congressional power within certain limitations, but the limitations must be clearly defined. There is no support in the Supreme Court decisions for the suggested rule. Section 15 delegates to the Civil Service Commission power even to make statutory law and to provide penalties. So before the unanimous-consent agreement is reached I shall desire enough time to make my motion and to make a record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's motion would be disposed of on the question of agreeing to the committee amendment. Section 15 is a committee amendment, and the question would be on the adoption or rejection of that amendment. The agreement which I have asked would not in any way interfere with the Senator's plan. It would not be necessary for him to move to strike out the section, because automatically the question would be on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the effect is exactly the same.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am advised that a substitute will be offered for section 15. I have examined the substitute only slightly; but from my examination the substitute is not in proper form, in that it refers to the wrong place in the civil-service rules. It refers to an Executive order which extends the classified civil service and does not refer to the rules promulgated by the President. So some little discussion will be required to get this matter in shape.

I shall also hold, if I have the opportunity—as I plan to have—that even though section 15 should be stricken from the amendment and the new section substituted, that would not cure the defect of which I shall complain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator objects to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall object unless ample time is afforded to discuss section 15. I have no objection to an agreement with respect to all other parts of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not asking at this time any limitation on debate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator made a request to vote at or before a certain time. A request to vote at or before a certain time certainly puts a time limitation on every amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. It imposes an aggregate limitation. After 5 o'clock there could be no debate, but that would not limit any Senator who obtains the floor in discussing an amendment which he offers or opposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understood the request of the Senator, amendments might be offered until 4:40 p. m. tomorrow. If between now and 4:40 tomorrow afternoon a Senator should offer an amendment to include in the bill the antilynching bill—which would be in order—the agreement would limit debate on that amendment as well as on any other.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. However, I will say to the Senator that I have every reason to believe that such an amendment will not be offered. I do not think it will be.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it will be, either. I hope it will not be, because, unless we have an agreement that it will not be, I am unwilling to agree to the request of the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we are to allow that contingency to prevent an agreement to vote on the bill, I do not know any way by which we can obtain an agreement, unless the Senate is willing to agree by unanimous consent that it shall not be in order for any Senator to offer that proposal as an amendment to the bill.

I do not know whether or not the Senate would agree to such a stipulation. I am perfectly willing to ask for it if it can be agreed to, because I do not think the antilynching bill ought to be offered as an amendment to the pending bill. I think that proposal should be considered on its merits, and it seems to me it does not conduce to the impartial discussion of that proposal to make it a football to be thrown in here in an effort to defeat the proposal now pending. I do not know whether or not I could obtain unanimous consent with respect to that proposal, but if I could, I certainly should be glad to do it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I have no intention of offering such an amendment to the pending bill. I wish to suggest to the Senator a plan which might be adopted. I do not care to delay the bill. Why does not the Senator from Kentucky make a unanimous-consent request that all amendments shall be submitted by 3 o'clock tomorrow, and that no amendments offered after that time shall be considered, and at that time renew his request for a limitation of debate thereafter? That would solve the problem without putting the Senate in the position of having to enter into an agreement about any particular kind of amendment. Some of us will diligently look into the amendments then pending, and if there is no objectionable amendment we will agree to limit debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope neither the Senator from Texas nor any other Senator will infer from the question I asked a few moments ago that I am in favor of such an amendment, because I am not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I renew my request made a while ago, with the proviso that if the antilynching bill shall be offered as an amendment to the pending bill, the agreement to vote at 5 o'clock tomorrow shall be null and void.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may we have the request stated again?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate shall proceed to vote on the bill and all amendments thereto, and that no amendment shall be offered which has not been read for the information of the Senate not later than 4:40 o'clock; with the proviso that if the antilynching bill shall be offered as an amendment to the pending bill this agreement shall lapse and be null and void. Several Senators have feared that at the last minute, after debate is concluded, some amendment may be offered which no one can explain. So we propose to vote at 5 o'clock p. m.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, unless section 15 shall be eliminated, I shall be forced to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. tomorrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am as anxious as is my good friend the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] to take up the agricultural appropriation bill. I do not want to be put in the attitude of postponing action on that important bill. The farmers are very anxious about it. However, I have an idea that somewhere in the proceedings an amendment will be offered which will require considerable discussion. I have seen a suggested copy of such an amendment, and if any attempt is made to adopt that amendment I shall be forced to occupy a little time.

I understand a motion will be made, before we conclude the debate, to recommit the bill to the committee for its perfection. I think that motion will require a review of the whole gamut of the amendments and discussion which we have had heretofore. I do not see how we could possibly agree to the suggestion made by our leader to act on the bill tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator evidently misunderstood me. I was not asking that we act on it at 2 o'clock. The request I made was that beginning at 2 o'clock there should be a limitation of 20 minutes on the bill and 20 minutes on each amendment.

Mr. BILBO. That is the point I was making. The amendment which is on the way, and also the motion to recommit, are of such character that it would take longer than the time fixed by the leader for a Senator to express his views on whether or not the bill should be recommitted, or to elaborate and to meet the objections to the amendment which I know is coming; so I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the motion?

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope the majority leader, seeing the position in which we are now placed with respect to the bill, which I anticipated on Monday when I endeavored to bring up the agricultural appropriation bill, will either make some unusual efforts to bring this bill to a conclusion by holding longer sessions, or lay it aside in order that the agricultural appropriation bill may be considered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am about to make a motion that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow. I think I have made every possible reasonable effort to expedite consideration of the bill. Senators on both sides of the question tell me that they want to bring it to a disposition, vote on it, and get through with it; yet when I offer a suggestion as to some method by which that can be done, I cannot obtain an agreement. If we cannot obtain an agreement to vote on the bill tomorrow, or to limit debate, I intend to move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow. If the Senate is willing to meet at 11 o'clock, I hope we can make some headway tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I regretted on Monday that I could not share the Senator's optimism that the bill would be disposed of by Tuesday afternoon of this week. I do not wish to be too importunate——

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is familiar with the old speech which we used to learn in our school days. It began:

It is natural for youth to indulge in the delusions of hope.

I did indulge in some delusions of hope on Monday as to the length of time required to complete consideration of the bill. I was a little overoptimistic. However, I think we can finish it tomorrow. I think it is almost the universal desire of Members, regardless of their position on the bill, to finish it tomorrow; and if I cannot obtain an agreement—and it seems that I cannot—I intend to ask the Senate to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course. I hope tomorrow will see the conclusion of the debate and a vote on the pending bill, because certainly delay in the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill is not calculated to enhance the chances of final adoption of the important Senate amendments to that measure.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I suggest to our able leader that we meet every morning at 10 o'clock and remain in session until 12 o'clock midnight. That would give every Senator sufficient time in which to discuss the various features of the bill.

Before we recess, I should like the opportunity to submit a few remarks for the benefit of the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH. When?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Now. I dislike to detain Senators. I know they are all tired; and, so far as I am concerned, they may proceed to their respective offices. I wish to put into the RECORD some remarks on what I consider a very important matter, in view of the fact that one of the most able men in the Government service has been charged with some things which he denies. I refer to Mr. J. Edgar Hoover. I should like to submit my remarks before the Senate adjourns, for I am afraid I shall not have an opportunity tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is entirely agreeable to me for the Senator to do that.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank our leader, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

J. EDGAR HOOVER

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, during the past few days I have read and have heard attacks upon an organization which I have greatly admired for a number of years, and which I believe has served the country splendidly in a time of stress. I cannot forget the self-sacrificing, patriotic battles of these men with desperate criminals of all kinds and types. They smashed a country-wide kidnaping ring. They have placed behind bars enemies of society who threatened the safety of law-abiding, peaceful citizens in all parts of the country. We are not going to forget all these benefits which have been rendered by these men, and to quibble in a fashion that at least might be termed ungrateful as to whether they have observed all of the rules prescribed by those whose concern appears to be more with the rights of criminals than with the protection of our citizens.

These criticisms have gone so far as even to intimate and, in some cases, definitely state that the representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have extended their activities to spying upon Members of Congress. I am informed upon the best possible authority that this is untrue. As indicating the plain, unvarnished facts, I desire to read a statement issued yesterday by J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, through the office of the Attorney General of the United States, which I hope will conclusively and finally put an end to these statements which have been heard in recent days.

As I have just stated, we have recently heard many rumors and statements in reference to the activities of Mr. Hoover. We have heard some criticisms directed to Mr. Hoover because he happened to be in Florida; and because, while there, he chose the place that suited his desires to reside, criticism even on that point has been heaped upon his shoulders.

If there is any man in the employment of the Government of the United States who really deserves some recreation and relaxation, I think that man is J. Edgar Hoover. I desire to say to you, Mr. President, and to the other Members of this body, that I do not know of a single man within the employ of the entire Federal Government anywhere in this country who, in my opinion, is more honest, more efficient, more courageous, or braver than J. Edgar Hoover. He has thrown the fear of God into the hearts of the criminals of the country. If it had not been for his courage, if it had not been for the fine training he was fortunate in receiving over the years before he was made Director of that Bureau, the country today would be worried as it was for a long, long time by kidnapers and criminals of all sorts throughout the land.

In reference to Mr. Hoover, I have here a statement which was issued on yesterday by the Department of Justice, dated March 13, 1940, reading as follows:

> Recently, statements have been reported in the press and have been made otherwise indicating that representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have indiscriminately tapped the telephones of Members of Congress. This is untrue. At no time has the telephone of any Member of Congress been tapped by any representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation since I have been Director of the Bureau.
> Statements have also appeared to the effect that wire tapping has been used by representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in violation of existing laws. At no time has there been a single instance of any action of this kind on the part of any representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation since I have been Director of the Bureau.
> Further allegations have been made to the effect that representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have tapped wires indiscriminately and in violation of fundamental civil rights. At no time since I have been Director of the Bureau has this been done.
> In 1939 I refused to endorse proposed legslation, which had been introduced in Congress, designed to legalize wire-tapping evidence obtained by Federal officers.
> The Federal Bureau of Investigation has utilized wire tapping as a method of securing information of investigative value only in extraordinary situations and in an entirely legal manner, where either a human life was at stake or where the activities of persons under investigation were of such an aggravated criminal nature as to justify the use of extraordinary means to detect their activities and cause their apprehension.

Mr. President, that is the statement of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover himself Mr. Hoover absolutely denies that he ever tapped the wires of any Member of Congress, and I assume from his statement that he does not intend ever to do so; but he states that there have been times when he was investigating criminal cases when he felt it necessary for the ends of justice to tap wires, as very frankly mentioned by him.

Mr. President, I know of no other man in the United States who could adequately fill the place that is so ably occupied by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover. This is the time of all others in the history of this country when we need in that position a man of his character, his courage, his ability, and his experience. Particularly will we be convinced of that fact when we recall that prior to the declaration of war in Europe on September 3 the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice received on an average only 250 complaints of espionage and sabotage annually, whereas since then Mr. Hoover's Bureau, with its limited force of law-enforcement officers, now receives on an average 250 such complaints daily. In other words, his Bureau of the Government now receives as many complaints of sabotage and espionage every day as it did every year prior to the declaration of war in Europe on September 3. Despite the fact that his Bureau has been flooded with thousands upon thousands of these complaints, I dare say that Bureau and the Department of Justice have carried on better under this condition than any other department of the Government. Not once have we heard J. Edgar Hoover or any man connected with his Bureau really complain in reference to anything.

I think the American people owe J. Edgar Hoover a vote of thanks for that which he has accomplished in this country in the protection of the American people, and I say again that of all times in the history of our Nation we were never more in need of a man of his character, ability, courage, and experience than now, as we realize when we recall that last year there was issued by the Attorney General of the United States a statement in pamphlet form in which he said that crime today costs the American taxpayers $17,000,000,000 annually, and when we recall that the same report included a statement to the effect, according to my recollection, that there are today in this country more than 4,500,000 people engaged in the commission of crime. To me that statement is an appalling one, for, according to that report, there are today more people engaged in the commission of crime in this country than were in our uniform and under arms at the time of the armistice, on November 11, 1918.

Mr. President, this afternoon as I sat in this Chamber I was reading a copy of the Washington Daily News, and I noted an article entitled "Getting Results," by Mr. Raymond Clapper. I read the first paragraph:

There is one thing that you can't take away from J. Edgar Hoover, Chief of the F. B. I. Since the Lindbergh antikidnaping law was passed there have been, at a recent count, 163 kidnapings. All except 2 of these have been solved.

I became interested when I read that, because I recalled that I had observed in the columns of the local press statements which had been made in reference to the activities of the members of the F. B. I. I then read the balance of the article from the pen of Mr. Clapper, and I wish to read it to those of my colleagues who are interested in law enforcement in this country, because I believe the American people are vitally interested in that subject, and I believe I can say unhesitatingly that the great majority of the American people are 100 percent behind J. Edgar Hoover, because they believe that he is not permitting politics of any sort to interfere with the activities of his Bureau, and they commend him for that.

Insofar as the Hatch bill is concerned, we do not have to extend the law to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, because, so far as I have been able to learn, there is no politics there. Those fellows are busy night and day, looking after the interests of the American people and endeavoring, as best they can, to stamp out crime and to protect the homes of the fathers and the mothers of this country.

Mr. Clapper's article continues:

There are a good many people in Washington who don't like Mr. Hoover. Around the Justice Department he is considered high-handed and difficult to work with.

I have never heard anyone say that he did not like Mr. Hoover. There are naturally a great many people who are envious of Mr. Hoover, because he is a young man, he is a fine-looking man, he has an active mind, and has performed good service. It is true that he is getting an unusually large amount of beneficial publicity through the magazines and the newspapers of the country, but it is well that he does, and I hope that he will write more articles to be read by the youth of our land, because in every one he cites proofs to them that crime does not pay. I do not know of any man in this country who is serving as a greater inspiration to the youth of our land than is J. Edgar Hoover.

Mr. Clapper proceeds:

Around the Justice Department he is considered high-handed and difficult to work with.

There are times when any man who is thoroughly efficient is somewhat difficult to work with. It may be that Mr. Hoover has his mind always on his business, and has no time to discuss anything that is not considered by him directly connected with the business of his bureau.

Mr. Clapper continues:

Recently he had a run-in with the Civil Service Commission—wanted to pick his own men. His men have done good work and that is the main purpose of hiring them, so there isn't much point in being too excited about that.

I quite readily agree with Mr. Clapper. With the organization Mr. Hoover has built up, with the fine reputation he has obtained for that organization, I think he should be entitled to pick men whom he knows, because he is experienced in the enforcement of the laws, and he knows the type of men who must be engaged in this most dangerous work.

The article continues:

God knows the Government has enough inefficiency in it—

I agree with Mr. Clapper.

God knows the Government has enough inefficiency in it, chair warmers, time killers. Mr. Hoover has never been accused of inefficiency, and when you have a bureau that is getting results there ought to be some prejudice in its favor.

It is said Mr. Hoover is a publicity hunter. Well, you'd have to fire a lot of people in Washington if that is going to be a crime.

That is certainly true.

Furthermore, in the kind of work the F. B. I. is doing it doesn't do any harm for the word to spread around the underworld that the G-men are good.

Mr. President, I say the more publicity that is given to the courage and the efficiency of the G-men the better it will be for the Department of Justice and the Bureau of Investigation, and the more protection, as a matter of fact, will the American people have against the activities of these criminals.

The chances are that the enormous publicity which the F. B. I. has received has been a real crime preventive.

That, I think, is true.

Mr. Hoover irritated the press in Miami recently because he would not give interviews and have his picture taken. He was panned there because he ducked publicity.

As to how much he worked at Miami, I don't know. He was taking some vacation and he had some agents there looking over the racketeers who infest Florida during the winter season. He didn't make any real catch there. Whether he picked up any good leads may be something else.

Of course, we do not know about that. Perhaps he was working upon something of which we have not been advised.

Mr. Clapper continues:

The Detroit cases, involving apparent denial of civil rights to persons arrested for having helped the Spanish Loyalist cause, don't look very good. Mr. Hoover says that in making the arrests he only carried out the orders of Frank Murphy, then Attorney General, and that the treatment of the prisoners while in jail was in the hands of local authorities, not the F. B. I.

In respect to that, the Attorney General of the United States at that time was Mr. Frank Murphy, and it is alleged that Mr. Murphy, the Attorney General, instructed Mr. Hoover to proceed as he did, and in view of the fact that the Attorney General is the head of the department of the Government under which Mr. Hoover works, I do not think Mr. J. Edgar Hoover should be blamed, but that we should ask the then Attorney General of the United States as to whether or not he directed that action. That would soon settle the question.

The article continues:

He may have something to explain there, and whether he can explain it to his own credit remains to be seen.

According to my view of this, he has nothing to explain. It is up to Mr. Murphy, who was then Attorney General of the United States. If an explanation is to come, the explanation should come from him, and not from Mr. Hoover, because I assume he was working under the direction of the then Attorney General, as today he is working under the direction of the present Attorney General. The article concludes:

The other big complaint here now is that the F. B. I. is tapping wires all over the place, collecting dossiers on politicians and officials, as well as on private citizens, and serving as an Ogpu. Those charges ought to be investigated. Sometimes people think they are being spied on when there is nothing following them except a guilty conscience. But it is difficult for a victim to know whether his wires have been tapped, his desk rifled, and his papers photostated. There are enough rumors of this sort to warrant Congress getting at the facts.

A moment ago I read to the Members of the Senate a positive statement made by Mr. Hoover to the effect that he has never tapped any wires of the Members of Congress, and I assume he never intends to do so, but as I stated a moment ago, I was frankly advised by way of that interview or release to the press, that there have been occasions when it was necessary for him to tap wires when he was dealing with criminals.

Concluding, Mr. Clapper said:

Although Mr. Murphy, when Attorney General, had a slight touch of red-hunting fever after the European war broke out, there has been no visible evidence that the country is being subjected to Ogpu espionage at the hands of the Hoover men.

Some 200 volunteer complaints of espionage activity come into the hands of F. B. I. agents every day. Much of this is junk and is disregarded. Thus far there is no evidence of persecution as a result of such complaints. The F. B. I. has squelched the volunteer vigilantes who wanted to take spy hunting into their own hands. I don't think many people are going around feeling that they have to look over their shoulders.

The concluding paragraph reads:

When you compare Mr. Hoover's regime with that of William J. Burns, he looks like a big improvement. If those in Congress think they have something on him, they ought to have an investigation—and Mr. Hoover ought to insist on it. Such an important law-enforcement agency should not continue under the cloud of accusation that now exists.

Mr. President, after this positive statement by Mr. Hoover that he has never endeavored to tap the wires of Members of Congress, knowing Mr. Hoover as I do, and, as an American citizen, having followed his career with much encouragement and inspiration, I am confident that he certainly would not object to an investigation. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover has always been open and aboveboard, and I believe has proved to the American people that he is a fine law-enforcement officer. Everywhere I have gone I have heard him spoken of most highly.

Now I am very happy to yield to my distinguished and beloved colleague the senior Senator from the great Commonwealth of Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not feel that there is any special obligation resting upon me to become the champion of any department of the Government or any official in the Government. It is a task distasteful to me to be looked upon as the particular champion of any man or any agency of Government, and what I am going to say, Mr. President, is said because I think it would be a species of cowardice, certainly of timidity, if I did not speak upon this occasion.

First, I agree with the speech of the able Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, as to Mr. Hoover. Some hours ago in the Senate I read an article from the Washington Star written by Mr. Frederic William Wile. It was in a manner facetious, but it was true. And if all the officials of this Government abstained from pernicious political activity as truly as Mr. Hoover and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have abstained, there would be no need for the Hatch bill.

The demand for political appointments, the demands for endorsements, come upon a Senator like a flood, and I suppose from a populous State tremendous numbers of demands for place and appointment overwhelm Senators.

It so happens that some years ago I recommended a young Arizonian for an important place in the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I sent a letter of recommendation to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The Director, Mr. Hoover, after a careful examination, wrote me that the young man could not meet the tests. I asked for a reexamination. A reexamination of the young gentleman's qualifications was held, and he could not meet the test, and could not obtain the appointment.

Mr. President, so far from arousing any resentment in my breast, that increased my admiration for Mr. Hoover, because I happened to know that if he had been susceptible to what we call political influence he doubtless would have inclined slightly in my favor, if such a thing as a favor could be granted by that Bureau.

I am sure that I never have talked with Mr. Hoover 5 minutes alone in my lifetime. I have never had sip or sup with him. It so happens that our spheres of social activity do not meet. It so happens that I have never had the opportunity or pleasure to engage in any social amenities with him. I have judged him simply, solely, and only by his work, and I think I am familiar with his work—at least I ought to be. And while it would be ridiculous and offensive, and a presumption to say that he has made no mistakes, his mistakes—I am not prepared to characterize them or where they were, if any—are few.

Being a human being, I suppose that he makes a mistake now and then, and not being omniscient, I suppose he misjudges or miscalculates some events. But if I were called upon today, here and now, to name a man in all the width and breadth of this country, who can do the work of the F. B. I. as efficiently, honorably, capably, and as fearlessly as Mr. Hoover, I would not know whom to name.

I have said these things because I believe it is my duty to say them.

We must remember that we have invited to our shores in bygone years all kinds of persons. We invited to our shore practically all races, and I am making no invidious distinctions among races. We are a polyglot people. Moreover, I ought to be frank enough to say that these various races have made their contribution to the building up of America. Wisely we are now preventing and have been for some years preventing the immigration hither of any more persons, not because we are offensive in our attitude toward other races, but because we cannot absorb them. We are no longer the melting pot, because the metal does not melt. But many of those persons whom we invited here, forgetful of the hospitality extended to them by this generous Government, forgetful of the fact that the badge of American citizenship is a greater privilege than any other civil privilege known to man—many of these persons from foreign countries have been engaged in trying to undermine and overthrow the very Government which invited them hither and which gave them an opportunity side by side with the native-born.

As soon as Mr. Hoover or any of his G-men arrest a so-called gangster who has kidnaped some person, some child, probably tortured the child, and tortured the mother and the father worse by the terrible suspense, and the gangster is brought into court, the first thing the gangster does—and he has the right to do it—is to say, "I appeal to the Constitution. You must try me and punish me constitutionally. Aye, sir," says the gangster, "the very thing—the Constitution—that I tried to undermine and overthrow, the very thing I worked sedulously to destroy, is now the thing to which I appeal for my liberty in my day of trouble."

How paradoxical! The very instrument the Communist, the gangster, the saboteur seeks to overthrow is the first thing to which he appeals—and properly appeals—in his day of trouble. He appeals confidently to the Constitution to protect him.

I know of no man who has been deprived of his liberties contrary to our Constitution and our laws; of no instance in which any citizen has been oppressed by Mr. Hoover's bureau. If any Senator knows of such a case, it should be laid before us.

Mr. President, in speaking of the gangster, the saboteur, and the Communist appealing to the very Constitution he sought to overthrow, years ago a great orator spoke along this line—I have even forgotten the orator's name, but he said, in substance:

If all the men in America who have suffered the death penalty for a violation of the laws of the United States could be resurrected at the foot of the gallows and were charged with the function of forming a government, they would form exactly the same sort and kind of government as the one under whose justice they fell.

What greater tribute could be paid to our institutions? Could all the men who have been executed under our laws be resurrected and brought together and told to form a government for their own good, they would form exactly the same sort of government as the one under whose justice they fell.

Mr. President, surely some mistakes have been made in the activities of the F. B. I. In a company of sensible men no one would pretend that there have not been a few mistakes. Doubtless Mr. Hoover has made some. Doubtless if he displays any activity at all he will make some more but I am bound in justice to say that the result of his work is wholesome. I do not say it because of any political, social, or fraternal feeling toward Mr. Hoover. I have never had sip or sup with him. I have never partaken of the social or polite amenities of life with him. I probably have spent 5 minutes alone with him, and I have forgotten the subject of that conversation. I have never discussed political appointments or political affairs with him.

Judging him by his results and by his work, I find the results to be good and wholesome. If a considerable number of persons think there should be an investigation of the F. B. I., I shall vote for it, because I want the truth to be known. If anything has been done that is untoward and improper, I wish to know it, and if the Senate is to have an investigation the only thing I ask is that I shall not be included as a member of the committee to conduct the investigation. I have no right to speak for Mr. Hoover or the Department of Justice in the matter, but surely they would not and should not take the position that there should be no investigation.

Mr. President, I repeat, the last attitude I wish to adopt is one of apology for or championship of any particular branch of government. Each branch must stand on its own merits. The F. B. I. must stand or fall by its own activity and its own integrity. I shall vote for an investigation if any considerable number of Senators wish it. I believe the investigation would show that there has been no corruption, no untoward thing, no unconstitutional act committed. Senators will be amazed at the fertillity of intellect and the ingenuity of the trained men of the F. B. I. in following the criminal.

To be a G-man requires adaptation, inductive and accurate reasoning. A G-man must needs have a phonographic brain and a photographic eye. He must see with accuracy, and see all things, and he must remember with unerring accuracy. He must anticipate in advance what a man would be likely to do in a given set of circumstances. In the nomenclature of crime, he must be able to find the "dropped stitch." The dropped stitch is that inescapable impression, that unavoidable thing, it is the track left by all men who engage in any activity whatsoever.

When one comes to detect criminals or to detect crime, one is hopeless unless one finds the dropped stitch. After one has found the so-called dropped stitch, then one must ascertain who dropped it. Be assured that in every criminal offense there is a dropped stitch, because no man can engage in any activity without making some inescapable, unavoidable impression.

The G-men are particularly trained. A man might be a very great lawyer, a very great orator, a great physician, or a great physicist. He might understand physics; he might be a scientist; he might be all these things rolled into one, and yet not make a successful so-called G-man. A G-man must be silent. He must know just what he can say and what he may not say.

Mr. President, I hesitate in this dignified body to adopt the nomenclature of the poker table in any serious argument. In England they have adopted the nomenclature of the ocean. We adopt the nomenclature of the poker table in our affairs. So, I say the G-man, in dealing with criminals, must know when to run a bluff and when not to do so. I know of no business or profession which calls for the exercise of more mental alertness, more inductive reasoning, and more accurate thinking, more courage and true capacity of brain and heart, or a greater degree of honesty, than that of the G-man.

Mr. President, the ordinary G-man could become comfortably rich in one case if he were corrupt; but it is to the honor of the F. B. I. that thus far, so far as I know, among 1,600 men in the F. B. I. not one is accused of soiling his palm with a doubtful penny. Does the Senator know of any such case?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have never heard of a single case.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, Mr. President, I realize that that does not mean that there are no bad men in the F. B. I. Lord Macaulay said that it is not possible to assemble 40 men without having one defective man.

I wish to raise the ante a little—again I resort to the nomenclature of the poker table. I shall raise the ante a little and say that it is impossible to assemble 100 men without having at least 1 man who might be subject to weakness. So if All Omniscient Wisdom had a doubting Thomas, a denying Peter, and a bribe-taking Judas in His apostolic cabinet, it is useless and in vain for mortals to believe that we can assemble 1,600 men and have no doubter and no denier.

Mr. President, some days ago when this matter came up I had intended to make a short address. I gathered a few data, but I do not think I need to ask leave to print these data. Suffice it to say that all the expenditures of the F. B. I. and all the moneys used by Mr. Hoover and the F. B. I. are under the direct supervision of the Attorney General. Mr. Hoover has no authority on his own account to draw money out of the Treasury to use for rewards or other purposes. He must obtain his authority from the Attorney General of the United States. If I correctly understand the law—and I think I do—any voucher which purports to draw money from the Treasury for the benefit of the expense accounts of the F. B. I. must be submitted to the Attorney General and receive his individual approval.

I now feel that I have discharged my duty. If any investigation should show that untoward and improper things have taken place in the F. B. I., I do not feel that I would be called upon to make any apology because I have told my tale as I understand it. I have given the Senate and the country, I hope, the facts as they have appeared to me, and it has been my particular business to be required to become more or less familiar with the activities of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, nobody is going to make any direct assault upon the Bill of Rights. Nobody is going to make any direct assault upon the Constitution of the United States. Such things are not done in that way. Such assaults will be made upon the agencies of Government. Unsocial persons will make their assaults upon the agencies of Government that are protecting the liberty and the lives and the safety of the people.

Some years ago I introduced a bill which proposed to make it a crime for anyone to offer a reward or pay a reward for the return of a kidnaped person. After giving my own bill a year of consideration, I came to the conclusion that even if I could secure the enactment of the bill such a law would be a futility. No jury in America would convict any mother or any father for redeeming their child, so I abandoned my own bill. I did not talk with Mr. Hoover about the matter, but I sent the bill to him for his report. I asked a Senator who is not now present to talk to Mr. Hoover, and Mr. Hoover sent back word that he was against my bill because, if such a measure should become a law, it would deprive him of one of his most fertile and certain avenues of apprehension of criminals, so I abandoned my own bill. I may have made a mistake, but my purpose was good. Doubtless Mr. Hoover, in his F. B. I., like other officials, while having a good purpose in something, may at times make mistakes.

I say again, if any resolution is offered proposing an investigation, I am going to vote for it.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much for his fine contribution and his generous compliment to Mr. Hoover.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator just let me say that my compliment is to Mr. Hoover's activities?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I mean his activities.

Mr. ASHURST. His work.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In view of the fact that the Senator has qualified his statement, I may add that my personal acquaintanceship with Mr. Hoover is very limited. In the years that I have been in Washington I do not believe I have ever talked with Mr. Hoover more than three times. I am going very frankly to state to the Senator that we are all subject to flattery, and we are all grateful for any little act of courtesy that is shown us.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say to the Senator that flattery is the only commodity on earth of which the supply can never equal the demand.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think the Senator is quite correct about that. I was about to say that I recall that several years ago Mr. Hoover invited me to deliver a commencement address at the graduating exercises of the Department of Justice police school. Of course I immensely appreciated that compliment, as the Senator from Arizona would have done, or anybody else for that matter; but I barely know Mr. Hoover.

I have never had a meal with him. Like the Senator from Arizona, I have never spent 5 minutes of my life with him, and my correspondence with him has been very limited; but I repeat that I have admired the man very much, because I think as a matter of fact he is the idol of the American youth.

I recently read either an extract from an address Mr. Hoover delivered or an article he wrote in reference to the Boy Scouts; and everywhere I go the youngsters ask me, "Do you know Mr. J. Edgar Hoover?" He is very much admired by the youngsters of the country, as well as by the parents of the country, because he is always fighting and preaching and talking clean living for the youth of the country.

This subject is not one in which I am personally interested. I have noted something in the columns of the press and have heard something said about Mr. Hoover's having tapped some wires. I secured for myself a copy of a press release which was issued by him on yesterday, and this afternoon I took advantage of the opportunity to read his denial to the Members of the Senate.

Again I want to thank the able Senator from Arizona very much for his very nice compliment to the Bureau of Investigation, and his contribution to this discussion.

CAMP BUCHANAN, PUERTO RICO

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the time now is available for a brief mention of another subject, let me say that I see in the Chamber the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Texas, Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, who so ably represents all the people of the Lone Star State. So long as he and his colleague the Senator from Texas, Hon. TOM CONNALLY, continue to represent that State, I know it will be well represented, and all the people will be looked after in an admirable manner. Having noted the presence of the Senator, I remind him that I have before me a letter which I procured from him this afternoon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his kind compliment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is perfectly welcome. I am always happy to have the opportunity of speaking kindly of the Senator from Texas, because when I make remarks of that sort with regard to him I really do not have to draw upon my imagination. I will say that the Senator himself is for me a fountain of inspiration.

I have here a copy of a letter which a man by the name of B. N. Wende, of Bridgeport, W. Va., addressed to the editor of the Herald Tribune, New York City, on February 20, 1940, relating to the proposed change of name of a camp at San Juan, the capital of Puerto Rico. The present name of the camp there is Camp Buchanan. It has been suggested that the name be changed to Fort Miles. It is my recollection that General Miles has been honored on many occasions by having various barracks and other military spots named after him; but I see no reason for taking away from that camp the name of Buchanan, which it has had for many, many years.

At this juncture I ask leave to have this letter printed in the RECORD as a part and portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

BRIDGEPORT, W. VA.,
February 20, 1940.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD TRIBUNE,
New York City.

DEAR SIR: It seems rather ridiculous that General Dailey, the commanding officer in Puerto Rico, recommended that Camp Buchanan should be changed to Fort Miles. It has been suggested that General Dailey (and I trust it is not so) made the recommendation on the belief that Camp Buchanan was named after President Buchanan, who, of course, had no intimate connection with the island of Puerto Rico. However, the late General Buchanan was more actively connected with the military establishment in Puerto Rico than Gen. Nelson A. Miles who did command the First Expeditionary Force to Puerto Rico in the Spanish-American War.

There are many monuments to the memory of General Miles outside of the camp in Puerto Rico. I know of no memorial for that distinguished officer, General Buchanan, and I think that some public-spirited Americans who are interested in Puerto Rico and also interested in the military history of the United States should see that Camp Buchanan be allowed to continue under the name "Camp Buchanan," as it has been for over 20 years.

Yours very truly,

B. N. WENDE.

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have before me a press notice which I clipped from one of the newspapers in regard to a bill for the registration of aliens. I feel at liberty to take the time now to refer to it, because I cannot be accused of holding up the Hatch bill; but I want to bring this subject to the attention of the readers of the RECORD and to the attention of those who happen to be here at this late hour. There are times when we have to take advantage of these occasions.

This is a clipping from one of the newspapers, entitled "Jersey Bill Asks Aliens Register."

The article is dated Trenton, N. J., January 12, and reads as follows:

Designed as a safeguard against possible wartime sabotage, a revised measure now before the New Jersey State Senate would require all aliens in the State to register with the police.

I bring up this matter at this particular time in view of the fact that a moment ago I took occasion to mention the great number of complaints of sabotage and espionage which are now being filed with the Bureau of Investigation.

The article continues:

The measure, sponsored by Gov. A. Harry Moore's emergency committee, was introduced in the name of Senate President Arthur F. Foran, of Hunterdon.

It would require all aliens in the State over the age of 18 to register annually with either State or local police. Failure to do so would be a misdemeanor, subject to $100 fine or a jail sentence of 60 days.

Between 150,000 and 200,000 persons in New Jersey would be affected.

Being very much interested in this matter, a day or so thereafter I directed a letter to Governor Moore, a former Member of this body, asking that he provide me with a printed copy of the bill referred to in the article. Yesterday he sent me a copy of the bill, which is senate bill No. 2, introduced by Mr. Scott, and referred to the committee on judiciary.

Mr. President, I have read this bill, and since we have been discussing sabotage and espionage, I ask that it be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, with the particular idea in mind that bringing this to the attention of the Members of the Senate will probably impress them with the fact that the people of the country as a whole are demanding legislation of this sort. So thoroughly are they making this demand that they are attempting, in many instances, in the Commonwealths to bring about the enactment of laws requiring the registration and fingerprinting of aliens.

I thank our able leader very much for being good enough to afford an opportunity to make these observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate, No. 2

An act requiring aliens to register with the State bureau of identification; the issuing of identification card; the protection of New Jersey citizens against undesirable aliens entering the State in violation of the United States immigration law; to enforce more successfully the State's criminal law; to maintain a record of vital statistics; to cooperate with the United States Government in the enforcement of the immigration laws; prescribing penalties, and to establish a bureau of alien registration within the State bureau of identification, supplementing article 2 of chapter 1 of title 53, of the revised statutes

Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

1. Immediately upon the passage of this act, and each year thereafter, every alien 18 years of age or over residing in this State shall register with the chief of police of the municipality in which the alien resides, and if there be no chief of police then at the nearest station of the State police, on forms to be prescribed and furnished by the State bureau of identification, and every such alien becoming a resident of this State after the first day of January 1940, shall in like manner register with the chief of police of his or her municipality within 30 days after becoming such resident. Such registration form shall show the name, age, address, occupation, name of employer, characteristics of appearance, fingerprints, suitable photographs provided by applicant, name of wife, or husband, if any, of such alien, names and ages of all children under 18 years of age residing with him or her and, if not his or her own the names of their parents and date and port of entry into the United States, and such other information and details as the supervisor of the State bureau of identification shall direct.

2. The form of such register shall be prepared by the supervisor of the State bureau of identification and by him transmitted to the chief of police of every municipality in the State. The chief of police of each municipality shall cause each and every alien enumerated under section 1 of this act, residing in his municipality, to be registered upon the form prescribed. The form of registration shall be executed in 4 copies; 1 copy being retained by the chief of police or other police officer for their files; 3 copies shall be forwarded to central file of the State bureau of identification, who will forward 1 copy to the commissioner of labor, and 1 copy to the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Washington, D. C.

3. For each original registration and for each annual registration thereafter the person registered shall pay to the chief of police or other police officer conducting the registration a registration fee of $1 and shall receive an alien identification card.

4. The supervisor of the State bureau of identification and each chief of police shall classify such registrations in such manner as shall best serve the purpose of ready reference. All such records shall be retained for a period of at least 10 years. The supervisor of the State Bureau of Identification shall have power to make and enforce rules and regulations to carry into effect and enforce the provisions of this act.

5. The supervisor of the State bureau of identification shall establish a bureau of alien registration in the State bureau of identification with such other assistants and employees as the supervisor may deem desirable.

6. Every alien over the age of 18 who fails to register as provided in this act within any of the periods required hereby shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment of not more than 60 days or both.

7. A complaint, in writing and duly verified having been made to a magistrate, or other court of competent jurisdiction, that a person has violated a provision of this act, the magistrate, or judicial officer of such court may issue either a summons or warrant directed to a constable, police officer, peace officer, or an agent of the department of labor for the appearance or arrest of the person so charged. The complaint and process shall state what section or provision of this act has been violated by the defendant, and the time, place, and nature of the violation. Upon return of the summons or warrant or at the time to which the hearing has been adjourned as hereinafter authorized, the magistrate, or judicial officer, shall proceed summarily to hear and determine the innocence or guilt of the defendant, and upon conviction may impose the penalty prescribed by this act, together with the costs of prosecution for the offense. A complaint may be made to a magistrate, or other court of competent jurisdiction, for a violation of this act at any time within 2 years after the commission of the offense.

8. All proceedings for the violation of this act shall be entitled and run in the name of the State, with an agent of the department of labor, police officer, peace officer, constable, or any other person who by complaint institutes the proceedings as prosecutor. A magistrate or judicial officer may, in his discretion, refuse to issue a warrant on the complaint of a person other than an agent of the department of labor or a police officer, until a sufficient bond to secure costs has been executed and delivered to the magistrate or judicial officer.

9. Any constable, police officer, peace officer, or agent of the department of labor may serve upon him a summons, in the name of any magistrate's court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, in the county or municipality wherein such officer is authorized to discharge his duties, directing the person so summoned to appear and answer such charges as may be preferred against him, for which purpose the county or municipal clerks, respectively, shall provide such officers with a form of summons, which, when filled out, executed, and issued by any such officer, shall be good and effectual according to the purpose and intent thereof.

10. In the prosecution instituted under this act the complaint filed therein, if made by a constable, police officer, peace officer, or agent of the department of labor, will be considered duly verified if made under his oath or affirmation, which oath or affirmation may be made by the official upon information and belief.

11. A hearing to be held pursuant to this act may, on the request of either party, in the discretion of the magistrate or judicial officer or any court of competent jurisdiction, be adjourned for a period not exceeding 30 days from the return day named in a summons or warrant or from the date of an arrest without warrant, as the case may be. In such case the magistrate or judicial officer shall detain the defendant in safe custody, unless he makes a cash deposit or enters into a bond to the State, with at least one sufficient surety, or himself qualifies in real-estate security situate in this State in twice the amount fixed by the magistrate for the bond with a surety, to or in an amount not exceeding $5,000 conditioned for his appearance on the day to which the hearing may be adjourned, or until the case is disposed of.

12. A summons or warrant issued by a magistrate or other court of competent jurisdiction under this act shall be valid throughout the State. An officer who may serve the summons or warrant and make arrest on the warrant in the county in which it is issued may also serve the summons or warrant and make arrest on the warrant in any county of the State. If a person is arrested for a violation committed in a county other than that in which the arrest takes place he may demand to be taken before a magistrate or other court of competent jurisdiction of the county in which the arrest is made for the purpose of making a cash deposit or entering into a recognizance with sufficient surety. The officer serving the warrant shall thereupon take the person so apprehended before a magistrate or other court of competent jurisdiction, of the county in which the arrest has been made, who shall thereupon fix a day for the matter to be heard before the magistrate, or other judicial officer, issuing the warrant, and shall take from the person apprehended a cash deposit or recognizance to the State, with sufficient surety, for his appearance at the time and place designated in accordance with this act. The cash deposit or recognizance so taken shall be returned to the magistrate, or other judicial officer, issuing the warrant to be retained and disposed of by him as provided by this act.

13. All fees, fines, and forfeitures collected under the terms of this act shall be paid to the State treasurer on or before the 10th day of each month, for the preceding month, by the chief of police, other police officer, or magistrate. Twenty-five cents of every alien registration fee received by the treasurer of the State from a chief of police or other police officer shall be returned to the chief of police or other police officer as the cost of maintaining his files. Seventy-five cents of every alien registration fee remitted to the State treasurer shall be placed to the credit of a fund to be known as the registration of aliens fund, which fund shall be used exclusively for the purchase of supplies, equipment, salaries, and other expenses involved in the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

14. If any part or parts of this act shall in any court of competent jurisdiction be declared invalid, void, or unconstitutional, such part or parts shall be rescinded and the remainder of the act shall continue in effect.

15. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

16. This act shall take effect immediately.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

During the delivery of Mr. REYNOLDS' remarks,

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order that Senators may know what the program is tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its deliberations today it recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. REYNOLDS' remarks,

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a treaty, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess, under the order previously entered.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Friday, March 15, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 14 (legislative day March 4), 1940

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Carl R. Arnold, of Ohio, to be production credit commissioner.

Roy M. Green, of Kansas, to be land bank commissioner.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

William M. Lindsay, of Kansas, to be United States marshal for the district of Kansas, vice Lon Warner, removed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, most merciful and most gracious, amid the tumult of the day enable us to hear Thy calming voice. In a dreary outlook upon a distracted world, crown our minds with unconquerable faith and our hearts with uncrushed hopes. Help us through all waiting hours to deny the claim of every earthly folly and sin, standing erect and freeing ourselves as becometh Thy children and the servants of the state. Inspire us with the mind that receives the expressions of the eternal mind and with the heart that responds to the quivering heart of the Divine. Permit no future to allow an eclipse of our faith nor the splendor of the peace of God, who brought again from the dead the Great Shepherd of the sheep with the blood of an eternal covenant, even our Lord Jesus. Almighty God, we beseech Thee to hew out of earth's prison walls portals of release, until the thundering soul of Christendom finds religious tolerance and political freedom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a memorial address delivered by former Representative Martin, of Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Los Angeles Times on the census, and I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a letter from John McFadden, director of public information of the N. Y. A., and excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by my colleague, Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, before the New York Board of Trade.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from an article which appeared in the Philadelphia Public Ledger and the New York Herald Tribune in regard to the census.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, on March 4 I spoke in New York on constitutional government and the rights of the people as set forth in the Constitution of the United States. In the mail today I received a book entitled "Choice Is Mine," and appended to the book these two notices, which are a threat on my life:

THORKELSON: There seems to be truth in the saying that "there's no fool like an old fool," at least insofar as you're concerned. McWilliams' dupes have learned not their lesson, but his. Have you learned yours yet? Evidently not—but it's in this story, if you want to know what it's all about before you're called.

Don't forget: This trip may end any second. Have you the courage to face your Maker? Be prepared. Read Choice Is Mine, because next time you may be one of those on the other side.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reply to this, for the writer did not sign his name. We know, however, happenings of the past; and, while messages of this sort may be looked upon as coming from twisted mentalities or cranks, they should not be treated lightly, for it is significant that our own policing departments are lax in their obligated duties.

In reading this book, one can raise no question as to its origin, and I say now that if the Department of Justice and other law-enforcement bodies do not protect their own citizens in the performance of their duties to this Republic, the people themselves must take action and remove the menace which is now threatening our Nation.

FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein part of certain correspondence I have received from the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], a few days ago in the course of a speech was rather critical in referring to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, calling attention to the shipment of several carloads of apples to Bentonville, Ark., for distribution. It appears the vicinity of Bentonville produces a large crop of apples. I felt this was a proper matter for the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to look into, and I have made some investigation. I now have some correspondence from the Department of Agriculture on the subject. The Secretary of Agriculture fully justifies the shipment of the apples to this territory and also shows practically everybody interested granted their approval.

Mr. Speaker, as part of my remarks I include a portion of the report I received from the Department, including the Secretary's letter. The report follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1940.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. COCHRAN: On the floor of the House of Representatives, on March 11, Mr. TABER, of New York, called attention to a quotation from the Saturday Evening Post to the effect that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation had shipped 3 carloads of Washington relief apples to Bentonville, Ark., where there were already 30 carloads in cold storage for lack of a market. A further statement was made that this was one of many instances of the way money is being wasted by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

I should like to present the facts both as to the shipment of apples into Bentonville and also as to the action taken by the officers of the Corporation in this instance.

On December 23, 1939, four cars of Idaho apples arrived at Bentonville, Ark., for distribution to eligible persons on relief and for use in connection with free school lunches. The shipment of these apples was made pursuant to a specific request of the Arkanses Department of Public Welfare. The request was at first refused because of concern on the part of officers of the Corporation over the possibility of interference with local marketing. However, the Corporation was assured that proper authorities within the State were satisfied that no such interference would result. A representative of the Arkansas College of Agriculture also gave his assurance that there would be no conflict with local marketing.

In addition to this, officials of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation knew there were no surplus apples in northwest Arkansas, including Benton County, available for purchase for relief and school-lunch distribution. On October 16, 1939, Mr. CLYDE T. ELLIS, Representative from the Third District of Arkansas, had requested the Corporation to conduct an investigation of the apple situation in northwest Arkansas, including Benton County, and within a week thereafter a Federal representative was on the ground and an extension economist was designated by the director of extension of the State of Arkansas to accompany him on a survey. As is the usual procedure in connection with programs for the purchase of agricultural surpluses, in cooperation with county agents, numerous conferences were held with growers throughout the area. In this particular instance the result was that growers reported that they did not wish to sell apples to the Government, as the crop had been very short, and they felt that they could get a satisfactory price commercially. The grower holdings at that time in the 5 cold storages located in northwest Arkansas totaled only 31,000 bushels, as compared with normal holdings of 90,000 to 130,000 bushels.

The article quoted did appear in a Bentonville, Ark., newspaper. The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, therefore, again sent a representative into the area to reconcile this report with known facts. In connection with this investigation a meeting was held in Rogers, Ark., on January 5, 1940, which was attended by apple growers, officials of the chamber of commerce, Red Cross, relief agencies, mayors of towns, one State official, and public-spirited businessmen. The situation was thoroughly discussed, and the following resolution unanimously adopted by the interested parties present:

"Resolved, That the welfare agency be permitted and instructed to distribute the five carloads of Idaho apples which were recently shipped into Bentonville, to be distributed to relief clients in the five counties comprising this welfare district, and that are now on storage at Bentonville."

There being a limited number of apple growers present at the meeting on January 5, another meeting was held on January 8, at which the president of the Benton County Farm Bureau presided, and which was attended by many other growers, county agents, cold-storage owners, and Farm Bureau officials. It was brought out at that meeting that, instead of 30 carloads in storage in Benton County, as reported by the press, there were less than 16 carloads in all northwest Arkansas; also that none of the growers present cared to offer apples in sale to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, as this would involve regrading.

There are accompanying this letter photostatic copies of seven documents which very forcibly establish the facts in connection with this alleged incompetent handling, as summarized by the mayor of the city of Bentonville in one of the documents:

"I personally contacted every responsible grower and merchant, locally, and did not find one single intelligent criticism over the shipment of these apples into our midst, for release to those upon charity."

Knowing your interest in the work concerning agricultural surpluses being carried on by this Department, I felt sure that you would be glad to know the facts in this particular case.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

Mr. M. A. CLEVENGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CLEVENGER: Had a good day at State meeting. Good program. Everybody in a good humor.

We passed a resolution, unanimously, asking the Surplus Commodities Corporation to ship all they can, of this crop, into our State. The members thought next crop may be different.

Very truly,

E. S. GRAHAM.

CITY OF BENTONVILLE,

Mr. H. C. ALBIN,
Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ALBIN: I simply want to tell you how well your Mr. Merritt Clevenger handled the matter of the apples shipped into our community recently and over which some complaint arose.

When Mr. Clevenger got through with the matter I think everyone understood better the working of the Surplus Commodities Corporation and were perfectly satisfied.

I personally contacted every responsible grower and merchant locally and did not find one single intelligent criticism over the shipment of these apples into our midst for release to those upon charity.

Mr. Clevenger handled the matter with intelligence and energy; we appreciate you sending anyone like him to handle such matters.

Yours truly,

D. W. PEEL, Jr., Mayor.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Rogers, Ark., January 27, 1940.

Mr. H. C. ALBIN,
Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation,
1901 D Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ALBIN: We appreciate very much the way in which the apple question was handled by Mr. Clevenger early this month. The businessmen, welfare officials, and the majority of growers were all satisfied in the final analysis, which is somewhat unusual in many instances.

We appreciate the work that the F. S. C. C. is doing in assisting the grower, and, as a result, furnishing food for the needy.

The ease and speed with which Mr. Clevenger handled the difficult task of straightening out the northwest Arkansas apple situation is highly complimentary to your organization, and we cannot sing too loudly our praises for him.

Yours truly,

CHARLES G. HAYS,
Secretary-Manager.

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION WORK IN AGRICULTURE AND HOME ECONOMICS, STATE OF ARKANSAS, Bentonville, Ark., January 5, 1940.

Mr. M. A. CLEVENGER,
F. S. C. C. Representative,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CLEVENGER: As a result of the controversy in this district concerning apples that were sent here from Idaho to distribute to relief clients, a meeting of businessmen, professional men, and apple growers was held at the Harris Hotel, Rogers, Ark., at 10 o'clock this morning.

The following resolution was introduced by E. S. Graham, State representative and apple grower in Benton County:

"Resolved, That the welfare agency be permitted and instructed to distribute the five carloads of Idaho apples which were recently shipped here to be distributed to relief clients in the five counties comprising this welfare district, and that are now on storage at Bentonville."

The motion was made and seconded that this resolution be passed as presented by Mr. Graham. The motion was carried by unanimous vote of all men present except representatives of the welfare agency and agricultural extension service of the University of Arkansas, which did not vote because of the fact these men considered this matter to be decided by apple growers, business, and professional men in the affected district.

The following men were present and voted for the resolution: E. S. Graham, apple grower and State representative, Lowell; W. L. Hinton, apple grower, Rogers; M. R. Puryear, apple grower, Bentonville; W. T. Bolin, manager of the cold storage at Bentonville; Earl Harris, member of the board of directors of chamber of commerce, Rogers; E. W. Pate, editor, Rogers Daily News; T. O. C. Murphy, apple grower, Rogers; Craig Jackson, chairman of the public relation committee, chamber of commerce, Rogers; D. W. Peal, Jr., mayor of Bentonville and chairman of the county welfare board; L. A. Harris, vice president of the American National Bank, Rogers; Denver Murray, president of chamber of commerce, Rogers; E. G. Sharp, apple grower, Rogers; S. Casey, manager of the cold storage, Rogers; Charles Foster, Benton County Red Cross chairman, Bentonville; and Charles Hayes, secretary of Rogers Chamber of Commerce.

In addition to the men mentioned in the above paragraph the following men were present but did not cast a vote, either positive or negative: Clifford L. Smith, county agent, Washington County; P. R. Corley, county agent, Benton County; Kermit C. Ross, assistant county agent, Washington County; J. R. Rice, county welfare director, Benton County; Perry Arthur, superintendent of the surplus commodity warehouse, Bentonville; J. H. Pitcock, district area supervisor, surplus commodity, Fort Smith; and yourself.

Mr. J. H. Kirkpatrick, president of the Benton County Farm Bureau, and Mr. H. S. Mobley, president of the Washington County Farm Bureau, could not attend the meeting due to ice-covered roads. As you know, you and I have since contacted these men and after explaining the proposition to them, both have agreed that the logical thing to do would be to distribute the apples that are now in storage at Bentonville. They both expressed their opinion that they could see nothing to arouse criticism of the growers in this section of the State provided such apples were distributed to relief clients only.

I wish further to state that the meeting was very harmonious in that no opposition whatsoever developed to the distribution of the Idaho apples after a clear explanation had been made by you.

Yours very truly,

P. R. CORLEY,
Acting Chairman, County Agent.

BENTON COUNTY FARM BUREAU,
Bentonville, Ark., January 10, 1940.

Hon. CLYDE T. ELLIS,
Congressman, Arkansas Third District,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CLYDE: Replying to your telegram recently received concerning surplus apples in Benton County. I am pleased to advise that conditions are better than were represented to you. Instead of 68 carloads of apples we found less than 10,000 bushels. We also found that the drought and other climatic conditions cut the grade of apples so severe that it was utterly impossible to meet standards of the F. S. C. C. Apple growers at a meeting Monday expressed their appreciation of the efforts made to move surplus apples, but decided that they could market their fruit more profitably than through the Corporation.

Thank you on behalf of our growers as well as myself. I am,

Yours very sincerely,

J. H. KIRKPATRICK,
President, Benton County Farm Bureau.

ECONOMY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we heard a good deal at the beginning of this session of Congress from the other end of the Capitol with regard to economy and that they wanted to have an economy committee appointed. It did not happen. The appropriations that have already been passed this year by the House of Representatives amount to $5,480,146,435, and this includes the authorization passed the other day for the Navy. I have noticed that when appropriation bills come back here from the Senate they are padded, they are increased, they are raised; and yet that great body talked about cutting down expenses. Every appropriation bill passed at the last session they increased over the amount that passed the House of Representatives. Why? Let us see them do something about cutting down appropriations rather than increasing them all very considerably. Including the authorization for the Navy, we have appropriated already just about as much money as we received last year in taxes, which amounted to $5,667,823,625.59, and we must be careful from now on what we do in our appropriations. I predict that before this Congress adjourns it will be a squandering Congress instead of a conservative body. You still have to pass appropriations for relief, appropriations for the Army, appropriations for the District of Columbia, and other important appropriation bills. All you do is appropriate. I again ask you the great question, Where are you going to get the money?

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—SCOTT AGAINST EATON

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 2, I submit a report on the contested-election case of Byron N. Scott, contestant, against Thomas M. Eaton, contestee, from the Eighteenth District of California.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 427

Resolved, That Byron N. Scott was not elected a Member from the Eighteenth Congressional District of the State of California to the House of Representatives at the general election held November 8, 1938; and

Resolved, That Thomas M. Eaton was elected a Member from the Eighteenth Congressional District of the State of California to the House of Representatives at the general election held on November 8, 1938.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, together with the report, will be referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Patents may be permitted to sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LARRABEE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article appearing in the Sunday Oregonian on Oregon Bankers Top Nation in Farm Activities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two letters from a constituent on the farm problem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein three tables compiled from records of the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short news article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including an editorial from the New Orleans States on sugar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—LAWS ENACTED BY NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 2 (a) (11) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit copies of laws enacted by the National Assembly of the Philippine Islands. Included are laws of the first national assembly, third session, January 24, 1938, to May 19, 1938; and of the second national assembly, first session, January 23, 1939, to May 18, 1939; first special session, August 15, 1939, to September 18, 1939; and second special session, September 25, 1939, to September 29, 1939.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 16, 17, and 18, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named in such amendment, insert "$3,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by such amendment, and on page 51 of the bill, commencing with the colon (:) in line 14, strike out the remainder of the line and line 15 and line 16 to and including the word "to"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$9,975,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Treasury Department

On No. 1: Makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for the United States Processing Tax Board of Review.

On Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, relating to the Coast Guard: Restores the provision of the House bill, stricken out by the Senate, making $100,000 available for the Coast Guard station authorized by the act of June 29, 1936; makes $8,000 of the appropriation for aids to navigation available for buoys and lights on the American side of the international waters of the Lake of the Woods and Rainy Lake, as proposed by the Senate; inserts the clarifying language proposed by the Senate in connection with the designation of items for the "A" and "B" budgets.

On No. 9: Appropriates $688,973, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $628,470, as proposed by the House, for salaries and expenses of the Procurement Division.

On No. 10: Makes $3,000,000 of the appropriation for strategic and critical materials immediately available instead of $5,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Post Office Department

On No. 11: Appropriates $587,600, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $585,000, as proposed by the House, for salaries for the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General.

On No. 12: Appropriates $111,300, as proposed by the House, instead of $119,320, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries in the office of the Solicitor of the Post Office Department.

On No. 13: Appropriates $114,120, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $111,240, as proposed by the House, for salaries in the Bureau of Accounts.

On No. 14: Makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Department.

On No. 15: Appropriates $1,750,000, instead of $1,700,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous items at first- and second-class post offices.

On No. 16: Appropriates $16,074,149, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $15,674,149, as proposed by the House, for foreign air-mail transportation.

On No. 17: Appropriates $11,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $11,100,000, as proposed by the House, for Star Route Service.

On No. 18: Appropriates $1,325,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,270,000, as proposed by the House, for power-boat service.

On No. 19: Omits the provision in both the House bill and the Senate amendment for expenses of attendance of delegates from the Post Office Department at certain international postal meetings.

On No. 20: Appropriates $9,975,000, instead of $10,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $9,950,000 as proposed by the House, for rent, etc., for first-, second-, and third-class post offices.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include a letter and a financial statement explaining the provisions of the bill and a final summation of the measure in its conference form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, your conferees, when we met with the conferees of the Senate, were confronted by only a few points in disagreement. The Senate had accepted our bill as a sound and wholesome measure and had made but few changes, namely, of a minor character. Under the circumstances, a conference agreement was easily and speedily obtained. The agreement I present to you is unanimous, being signed by all of the House and Senate conferees.

The largest item subject to conference action was an amendment which the Senate adopted adding $400,000 to the bill to provide for an additional trip per week on the trans-Atlantic air-mail route. This estimate came to Capitol Hill too late to be considered in framing the bill in the House, and your conferees were faced with it for the first time in the conference committee.

Of all of the component elements of our foreign Air Mail Service, the trans-Atlantic service is the most promising in respect both to usefulness and to revenues. Notwithstanding the serious handicaps and dislocations imposed upon this Service by the war in Europe, it is developing in a way that exceeds all expectations, and your conferees did not hesitate to approve the item the Senate had inserted in the bill, which will substantially improve and strengthen the trans-Atlantic air mail and augment its advantages for the benefit of a rapidly growing patronage.

Another Senate amendment which we approved increases the appropriation for salaries and expenses of the Procurement Division in the sum of $60,503. We were assured that if this money were allowed, the Procurement Division would be able to build up its force on a basis of permanency and stability so that it never again will be necessary to transfer personnel from emergency rolls to the regular roll. The constant tendency of administrative officials to urge that emergency personnel be covered into regular jobs has been a worrisome problem to appropriating subcommittees, and we were glad to see a solution reached, if only in this instance.

The Senate had stricken out of our bill a provision appropriating $100,000 to begin the construction of a Coast Guard Station on Lake St. Clair, Mich. The records of the Coast Guard show that more commerce passes that point than any other place under consideration for such facilities and that the loss of life there has been exceptionally great. On a showing of merit the Senate conferees yielded and the item was restored to the bill.

The only other item of exceptional interest discussed by the conferees was a Senate amendment appropriating $55,500 to enable the contractor on the route from Seward via Kodiak Island, the Alaskan Peninsula, and points on Bristol Bay, Alaska, to provide boat service to those isolated communities.

This estimate was first presented to our subcommittee and although it had a very strong humanitarian flavor, we felt it to be our duty to reject it. In effect, it was proposed to furnish a passenger service and hang it on the fiction of a postal service. Of the need of the service there is no doubt. Without it these far-away inhabitants are virtually marooned and in case of illness there would be no transportation facilities to take the sick person to a hospital. Although the postal revenue from the operation would be almost nothing compared with the expense involved it was proposed to pay for this needed service out of postal appropriations.

The plain fact is that the contemplated operation has almost no relevancy at all to the postal service. It merely foists onto the postal service another nonpostal item, of which there are already far too many. Our subcommittee acted, as we thought, to protect the integrity of the postal service.

However, notwithstanding the irregularity of the entire proposal, it could not be divested of its humanitarian aspects and when the Senate adopted the item, we House conferees, somewhat against our best judgment, perhaps, yielded to the impulses of the heart and accepted it. Postmaster General Farley, in the meantime, had approved the appropriation and had indicated his willingness to perform the service, and we believed that since he felt that the integrity of his Department was not jeopardized there perhaps was no reason why we should worry. We will be hoping that this appropriation will not establish a precedent to plague us in the years to come, but if postal appropriations can be drawn upon to establish passenger service in Alaska why cannot they be drawn upon with equal justice to establish similar service in any other remote possessions of ours?

Final favorable action on this project was a striking tribute to the ability of ANTHONY DIMOND, the delegate from Alaska, and the high esteem in which he is universally held by the Members of both the House and Senate. He pleaded the cause of his people with a persistence that was almost irresistible.

As chairman of the conferees on the part of the House I asked for some assurance that this proposed abnormal operation, masquerading as a postal service, would be temporary and Governor Gruening and Mr. DIMOND joined in a statement which I herewith present to the House and ask to have made a part of the RECORD. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1940.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: This is written in answer to the question which you asked us when we talked with you recently about the desired additional appropriation for powerboat service in Alaska, which has been incorporated in the Treasury-Post Office supply bill in the Senate in the amount of $55,500.

It is our considered judgment, after careful review of all of the facts, that the aid now asked for will not be needed beyond a period of 4 years; for we are confident that at the expiration of 4 years the population of the area to be served will be sufficiently increased and its industries correspondingly expanded so that the desired service can be given without assistance through the Post Office Department or any other department or agency of the Government. However, it will probably be necessary to make a 4-year contract in order to secure the service, for otherwise the contractor would not be justified in securing and fitting out a vessel which will be adequate for the job. Obviously, a contractor would not be warranted in going to large expense in securing and preparing a vessel for the run if the contract would not extend for a period longer than 1, or even 2 years.

So far as we are able to do so, we assure you that it is not our intention to renew the present request beyond the 4-year period. And if application should be made to renew it, we believe that the subject ought to be examined anew by Congress as though no authority had ever been given.

Since the bill was before the House, thorough examination has again been given to the possibility of securing the desired assistance through the Coast Guard. Admiral Waesche, Commandant of the Coast Guard, advises that it is not possible for the Coast Guard to supply the service unless Congress shall amend the basic law of the Coast Guard, and also supply funds with which to buy or build a suitable vessel.

It is now certain that unless relief can be given through making the appropriation asked for, it will not and cannot be given at all; for every other conceivable source of aid has been thoroughly explored and none found which offers the slightest chance for help.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST GRUENING,
Governor of Alaska.
ANTHONY J. DIMOND,
Delegate from Alaska.

While the members of the conference committee on the part of the House are willing that this service shall be established on account of the humane considerations involved, we do not think it should go on forever, and we urge the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] and the people he represents to put their ingenuity at work in an effort to find a better plan to furnish the needed service, as we frankly do not believe the Appropriations Committee will long countenance the figment of loading onto the Postal Service an operation that has almost no relation thereto. We at least hope that this better way will be found before the expiration of the 4-year period mentioned in the statement signed by Governor Gruening and the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

I present to the House a financial picture giving the picture of this appropriation bill from its beginning to a summation in its final form, as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 424.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 424

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7079, a bill to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and at this time reserve 5 minutes for myself.

This rule, as indicated by the resolution which has just been read, is an open rule for the consideration of H. R. 7079. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate, and the bill, of course, is subject to amendment.

The bill provides for two additional circuit judges and for five additional district judges. The two circuit judges are, one for the sixth circuit, which comprises the States of Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, and Tennessee; and one for the eighth circuit, which comprises the States of Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota. The five district judges are, one for the southern district of California, one for the district of New Jersey, one for the northern district of Georgia, one for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and one for the southern district of New York.

All these judgeships have been recommended both by the judicial conference and the Attorney General. The report from the Committee on the Judiciary is unanimous, and a further statement in their report is to the effect that in the opinion of that committee these judgeships ought to be created and the positions thus created filled immediately.

I reserve the remainder of my time and ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] to use some of his time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado has outlined what the bill is and what it does. This bill, as reported, is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary. I voted for the bill as reported in the Committee on the Judiciary, and I also voted for the rule to bring the bill on the floor with the understanding that the bill is to include only the judges mentioned in the bill as reported by the committee. I am opposed to including additional judges by amendment from the floor. As is well known to those who have been here some time, the Congress a number of years ago set up a body known as the judicial conference. That consists of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and the presiding judge in each circuit in the United States. The Attorney General of the United States is also present. That conference meets in the month of September each year, according to law, and in the city of Washington. It considers the needs of the Federal judiciary. It recommends where additional judges are needed. I have taken the position that I will not vote for a judge not recommended by the conference, because those are not political judges. I do not believe that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the judges of the several circuits would vote primarily for political judges. However, the Committee on the Judiciary has always reserved the right to review those recommendations. I might also add that the Committee on the Judiciary never considers politics in connection with recommendations so far as appointments to Federal judgeships are concerned. I know that one can present a case by bringing in a lot of statistics. For instance, some people think we should have judges according to population. Nothing is further from the fact. The real criterion is: Can a litigant have his case heard before the court having jurisdiction within a reasonable time? It makes no difference if there are 5,000 cases on the docket. I remember the time when some Federal courts were carrying minor cases—even draft-evader cases from the recent World War—to pad, so to speak, the number of cases pending before the court. They never intended to try those cases; they never would try those cases; but they were cases that could be shown in a compilation of unfinished business before the court.

I think the Committee on the Judiciary is unanimously satisfied with this bill as presented by the committee, and for which a rule was granted, and that it is a good bill and is not a political bill. I expect to support the bill if no additional judges are added by amendments from the floor.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, we have no requests for time on this side.

Mr. MICHENER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

By unanimous consent Mr. KEAN was granted leave to print as a part of his remarks certain excerpts from newspapers and certain letters.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I am frank to say that I know nothing of the need for additional judges provided for by this bill in any States or districts outside of New Jersey. Therefore, I want to devote myself to the New Jersey situation.

Let us look at the history of this proposed new judgeship. In July 1938, almost 2 years ago, Judge Clark, of the district court, was promoted to the circuit court. When consideration was being given to the filling of the vacancy thus created, there arose a quarrel between Mayor Hague, from north Jersey, and the senior Senator from New Jersey, from south Jersey, as to whom should be appointed.

Both remained adamant and it seemed that these Democratic leaders could not reach an agreement as to whom should be recommended to the President.

The President apparently had no desire to take the matter into his own hands, as evidently he did not wish to offend those who were reputed to be able to produce not only the type of delegation to the Democratic National Convention which he might desire, but also a tremendous number of Democratic votes on election day.

So, in order to have no hard feelings, it was decided that a bill should be introduced providing for two judges in New Jersey to take the place of the one, and thus each of the political leaders would be able to recommend his own choice for appointment, one from north Jersey and one from south Jersey.

The fact that this additional judgeship is not needed, or that it would cost the taxpayers of the United States about $20,000 a year, was given no consideration. What is $20,000 a year to our New Deal spenders if it means a few more votes for their candidates?

When this bill came up on the Consent Calendar last winter, it was passed over. In the meantime, Federal justice in New Jersey continued to be conducted by the three judges, with the one vacancy continuing.

It is true that there was some congestion, but a most interesting point is that in spite of the fact that there were only three judges sitting from July 5, 1938, there were 347 less cases pending at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, than there were at the end of the previous fiscal year.

Thus, you may see that with only three judges working they were gaining on the calendar.

At last, after 18 months with only three judges, in December a fourth judge was appointed.

Now if the administration found that they could get along for 18 months with three judges instead of four, what possible excuse is there for burdening the taxpayers with five, at the additional annual cost of $20,000 every year.

The hypocrisy of the administration in requesting this additional judgeship can be well seen, for in Attorney General Murphy's recommendation to the Senate committee in July 1939 he states:

> The volume of new business has been considerably increasing in this district.

And then he compares the increase in the number of actions filed in the fiscal year 1938 with those in 1937, and he gives a figure, excluding bankruptcy cases, of 235. However, he fails to state that there was a decrease from the year 1936 to 1937 of 542 cases, and again last year there was a decrease of 102. If we would include the bankruptcy cases, the showing is even better.

District Judge Merrill E. Otis in an article in the University of Kansas Law Review in June 1939 sets up a measuring stick as to the number of cases which a district judge should be able to handle: 400 criminal cases, 200 civil private cases, 20 civil cases—United States a party.

If this yardstick is correct, the 4 New Jersey judges should be able to handle 1,600 criminal cases, 800 private cases, 800 civil cases—United States a party. There were pending at the end of the last fiscal year in the New Jersey district 480 criminal cases, 588 private cases, 412 civil cases—United States a party.

Thus you may see that according to this yardstick, the four present judges, who are all conscientious, able men, should be easily able to handle the pending litigations—and still the politicians want another judge.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HART. The gentleman has quoted from several members of the bar and others in connection with an extra judgeship in New Jersey. Has the gentleman any expression of opinion from any of the members of the court now sitting as to the need for this judgeship?

Mr. KEAN. As I stated here, the members of the court sitting 2 years ago voted against it. Last year they voted in favor of it, but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the number of cases pending at the time they voted against these judgeships was greater than the number of cases pending at the present time, and I feel that those judges, having been burdened with that extra 33 percent of work, through the failure of the administration to appoint that third judge——

Mr. HART. Oh, the gentleman is not even attempting to answer my question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to read to you certain testimony which appears in the hearings, pages 187 to 191, when this matter was being considered by the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. Morris H. Cohn, chairman of the committee on the judiciary of the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, stated in his testimony:

Our association is definitely of the opinion that there exists no present need to create an additional Federal judgeship for the district of New Jersey.

Again, I quote from a letter from Henry Ward Beer, president of the same association, appearing in the same testimony:

According to statistics, there is at the persent time no need for an additional district court judge in New Jersey.

I also wish to quote from a statement made on the same occasion by Mr. Ralph E. Lum, former president of the New Jersey Bar Association, who was appearing before the committee as chairman of the judiciary committee of the New Jersey Bar Association:

We appear in opposition to an additional district judge in New Jersey. Taking the situation as a whole, and I know the whole State pretty well, there is no need for the additional judge. There is no work for him to do. We do not need more than four judges. I am sure that with the four judges we have, another judge is not needed now. We do not need additional help in the district courts. I can take any kind of a case there and have it heard before summer recess this year. I do not see any need for an additional judge in New Jersey.

When this legislation was first proposed, all four of the sitting district court judges met in a conference and unanimously condemned the proposal to add a fifth judge.

It is true that last autumn, after 18 months with only three judges working, they asked for further help; but this was only natural as owing to the administration's failure to appoint the fourth judge each of them was suffering from the burden of 33 percent extra work, which has now been removed.

There were no public hearings on this bill before the House committee, though Circuit Judge William Clark, who was a member of the district court for 13 years and whose promotion to the circuit court caused the vacancy which lasted for 18 months, signified his willingness to appear before the committee in opposition to this bill.

Judge Clark is strongly opposed to the creation of this additional judgeship, and I hold in my hand a letter from him, stating his views, addressed to my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY], which I ask unanimous consent to print here as a portion of my remarks.

I also wish to quote from an editorial from the Newark Evening News of July 27, 1939:

[From the Newark Evening News of July 27, 1939]

NO FIFTH JUDGESHIP

The Senate confirmed the nomination of District Judge William Clark to be a judge of the third circuit court of appeals on June 16, 1938, since which time there have been three United States district judges functioning in New Jersey instead of the statutory four. The vacancy has existed for more than 13 months. Now, on top of this, the Senate passes an act creating a fifth judgeship for this district, and the bill goes to the House of Representatives for action. The House, in the light of all the circumstances, should reject the legislation.

The fourth judgeship remained vacant during the last 6 months of Attorney General Cummings' tenure, and it has remained vacant for almost 7 months since Frank Murphy became Attorney General. The criminal docket in this district is reported to be in a serious state of congestion. Yet, Mr. Murphy announced months ago, and has restated it since, that he was going to purge the Federal courts of politics, to disregard politics in appointments to the Federal bench, to reform inefficient and laggard methods of handling court business, and to clear up congested dockets.

One might say in this connection: Mr. Attorney General, there has been a vacant judgeship in this State during almost 7 months of your term of office, during which the Congress has been in session, the Senate prepared to consider and confirm a suitable nomination. What is the reason no appointment has been made? Could it be politics? Could it be, as Senator REED, of Kansas, charged in the Senate, that Mr. Hague and Senator SMATHERS can't get together on a candidate? Can it be that the creation of a fifth judgeship is designed to liquidate this dilemma?

With one judgeship vacant for 13 months, does not the proposed creation of another place have an aroma of politics? Are you aware that when the proposal for a fifth judge was first made to the Congress, in the report of Mr. Cummings, it was stated that all four district judges had expressed themselves as opposed to Mr. Cummings' recommendation when one of his assistants, Mr. Keenan, first broached the subject to them?

Suppose we fill the fourth judgeship and see what happens. Suppose Mr. Murphy then speeds up the presentation of cases here and integrates the work of the courts, as he has promised to do everywhere in a general statement on the needs of the Federal bench. Suppose, in case of need, a retired Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States is sent here to sit as a district judge, as was done in New York, or that one of the retired judges of the third circuit is designated to help out as a district judge in certain cases. Let's see what happens then.

If, in spite of all this, it can be demonstrated that congestion of dockets in this district is still serious, still prejudicial to that promptness which Chief Justice Taft once described as "the essence of justice," then it will be time for the Congress to consider the creation of a fifth judgeship, without the reproach of politics being present to hurt the prestige of the Federal bench, which all of us more than ever desire to guard and preserve.

My attention has been called to an article by Judge Otis in the December 1939 issue of the Journal of the American Judicature Society wherein he refers to the general principle which should govern the creation of district judgeships, in which he said:

They would spurn any effort of any politician to secure the creation of some new judgeship for the mere sake of patronage, although his efforts be buttressed by some specious showing or even by an honest showing of need obviously transient. Packing a district court with unneeded judges is not only an economic waste, it is degrading and humiliating to every serving judge in the district affected.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS,
THIRD JUDICIAL CIRCUIT,
Newark, N. J., January 19, 1940.

Chambers of Judge Clark.

Hon. FRED A. HARTLEY, Jr.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HARTLEY: I have your letter of January 18, advising me of the pendency before your honorable body of Senate bill 1481, popularly known as the omnibus judiciary bill, and requesting an expression of my views with respect to the inclusion therein of an additional (fifth) district judgeship for the district of New Jersey. I should always, of course, be glad to give you my views on any subject on which you happen to feel that they should be of any value. In this particular instance, however, I feel that I may be entitled to speak for two reasons. For 13 years I was a United States district judge for the district of New Jersey, the last 7 years of which I was the senior judge of the district. During that period, as I sat in Newark, the busiest place in the district, it happened that I tried, it is fair to say, in the neighborhood of three-eighths of the cases and should therefore be familiar with conditions. For the last 18 months I have been a member of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, and in accordance with an act approved on August 7, 1939, it is now the duty of the circuit judges to organize themselves as a council for the purpose of directing the administration of the business of the district courts. In that capacity, I am a member of the subcommittee appointed by the chief judge, Judge Biggs, which conferred with the district judges of the district of New Jersey with respect to the condition of their calendars.

I am sure that you will agree with the general principle which should govern the creation of district judgeships. It has been well expressed by Judge Otis in an interesting article in the December 1939 issue of the Journal of the American Judicature Society, of which I happen to be a member, at page 151:

"They would spurn any effort of any politician to secure the creation of some new judgeship for the mere sake of patronage, although his efforts be buttressed by some specious showing or even by an honest showing of a need obviously transient. Packing a district court with unneeded judges is not only an economic waste, it is degrading and humiliating to every serving judge in the district affected. Responsible statesmen will welcome a measuring stick, if one can be devised, by the application of which to work to be done in any district it can be determined whether a new judge is needed."

It seems to me there has been a notable failure to apply that principle to the current problem in New Jersey. You will understand it is not either my desire or my place to do more than recite facts. The inferences therefrom, if any, must be made by the members of your honorable body.

I shall detail the specific efforts to increase the number of district judgeships in New Jersey.

(1) They began in February 1932. The late Judge Runyon was appointed under a commission for his lifetime. Upon his death the Congress created a new permanent position, despite a letter from me to Senator NORRIS, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, as senior judge, opposing such permanent creation. I enclose copy of that letter, dated February 3, 1932.

(2) In June 1937 the district judges of New Jersey unanimously disapproved the creation of a fifth judgeship in a letter dated June 3, 1937, to Mr. Joseph B. Keenan, assistant to the Attorney General. I enclose a copy of that letter.

(3) In spite of this disapproval, the Attorney General, without further correspondence, recommended a fifth district judgeship to the judicial conference.

(4) Not one of the district judges was requested to give his views by the judicial conference or New Jersey's representative therein, Judge J. Warren Davis.

(5) On February 24 and 25, 1938, hearings were held before a subcommittee of the Committee of the Judiciary of the Senate, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, on S. 3233. The chairman of the judiciary committee of the Federal Bar Association and the chairman of the same committee of the New Jersey State Bar Association appeared and emphatically disapproved the creation of a fifth judgeship (Hearings, pp. 187–191). I am sure a copy of those hearings is available to you.

(6) The President promoted me to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and I was sworn in on July 5, 1938. In answer to an inquiry from Senator NEELY, of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the remaining three district judges for the district of New Jersey, without notice to me, reversed their previous stand in a letter of March 15, 1939. This letter is vague and general in character and contains figures that, in my opinion, are not entirely accurate. The original must be in the files of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

(7) No member of the Senate Judiciary Committee communicated with me.

(8) The Attorney General again recommended the inclusion of a fifth district judgeship in the omnibus bill.

(9) Judge Biggs, our representative of the third circuit at the judicial conference, requested my views with respect to an additional district judgeship for New Jersey. I told him I opposed it, and I am sure he so reported it to the conference. No other member of that conference communicated with me, and the conference recommended the creation of such a judgeship.

(10) The Council of Circuit Judges was organized pursuant to the act approved on August 7, 1939, and a resolution calling attention to the vacancy which had existed for 17 months in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey was passed and forwarded to the Attorney General. I enclose copy of that resolution.

(11) That vacancy was filled by the appointment of Judge Thomas G. Walker, who was sworn in on December 28, 1939.

(12) Upon the demand of the Council of Circuit Judges the district judges submitted a summary of every case pending in the district of New Jersey. This summary is too bulky for enclosure and so detailed that it would have to be explained to your honorable body. Generally speaking, however, it indicates, first, that the listing of many of the cases as current is due to archaic methods in the clerk's office; and, second, that even the three judges now sitting in the district of New Jersey have made considerable progress toward coming abreast of their work.

(13) Judge Walker, the newly appointed judge, began the trial of his first case exactly 1 month from the date of his appointment. That was because on the supposedly congested calendar no cases were ready for trial.

(14) The calendar of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit is, I am pleased to say, now actually current. As we have five judges to rotate for three places, I could quite easily be assigned to the district of New Jersey for a period sufficient to enable me to bring their calendars up to date in the next 3 months.

I conclude from these recitals that the district of New Jersey has never and does not now need more than four judges, and that to add a fifth judge in a district where there has been a vacancy for 17 months would be unwise and utterly impossible of any public explanation. I do not happen to know Chairman SUMNERS and Senior Minority Member MICHENER, but I have had some correspondence with both of them and have followed their public careers with great admiration. I should be only too pleased, therefore, to either write or talk with them if they should be inclined.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM CLARK.

JUNE 3, 1937.

Hon. JOSEPH B. KEENAN,
The Assistant to the Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KEENAN: In reply to your letter addressed to the several judges of this court requesting our views as to Senate bill No. 2484, we met in conference today on the subject, and after giving full consideration to the conditions existing in the district came to the conclusion that we cannot favor the passage of this measure.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM CLARK,
GUY L. FAKE,
JOHN BOYD AVIS,
PHILLIP FORMAN,
Judges.

NOVEMBER 13, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY,
The Attorney General,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, That the examination by this council of the state of the business of the District Court of the District of New Jersey discloses a condition of congestion seriously affecting the interests of litigants, which condition, in the opinion of the council, has largely resulted from the fact that a vacancy in the office of district judge in that district has remained unfilled since July 5, 1938.

COUNCIL OF CIRCUIT JUDGES OF THE THIRD CIRCUIT.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address I delivered before the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association on yesterday, March 13.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7079, with Mr. DUNCAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Without objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has told you, this measure was reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary. Because there has been an attack made on just one provision of the bill, I will address my remarks to that particular provision. I am quite certain that my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] did not want to create the impression that the Committee on the Judiciary was playing politics in making the recommendation that it made in this matter, but certainly he has done that very thing. I want to say to him that Chief Justice Hughes is the last person in the world I would accuse of making a recommendation that would be of benefit to the majority party. The recommendations that the Judiciary Committee has made are all recommendations made by the judicial conference, of which the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States is chairman.

I know what is back of the opposition to the creation of a new judgeship for the State of New Jersey, and I got it from the gentleman who has been supplying the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] with his information. Mr. Justice Clark, of the circuit court of appeals, has stated in my presence that he is opposed to an additional judge for the State of New Jersey, because he does not want Franklin D. Roosevelt to name him. Now, that is your opposition, and it comes from the lips of a judge appointed by Franklin D. Roosevelt to the circuit court of appeals.

At the present time the circuit court judges in the third district are sitting in the district court of New Jersey in an effort to give to the citizens of that State the sort of justice to which they are entitled. Every one of the circuit court judges is now placed in a position where in a few months he may be required, sitting where he belongs on the circuit court bench, to review a judgment that he, sitting as a district court judge, rendered. I will say to my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] that the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives does not approve of that practice. We do not believe that district court judges ought to sit in the circuit court, nor do we feel that circuit court judges ought to ever be placed in the embarrassing position where, subconsciously at least, they may be hesitant in overruling the judgment of one of their colleagues.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Not at this time. I will yield in a moment.

As far as the quarrel that the gentleman from New Jersey has mentioned between the Democratic leader of the State of New Jersey and one of the Senators is concerned, I know nothing about it and care less.

Mr. HART. May I interpolate there?

Mr. WALTER. In just a moment. Let me tell the gentleman that wherever he got his figures as to the condition of the docket in New Jersey, they are entirely erroneous. According to the report that came from the Attorney General, there were pending on July 1, 1938, 1,015 cases in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. One thousand three hundred and thirty-nine, I have.

Mr. WALTER. They were criminal cases. Just recently the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice informed me that cases arising from violation of the income-tax laws were continued because they could not get a judge to try them, and witnesses had been subpenaed and were in court at Camden, waiting since October for those cases to be heard. Certainly that does not seem like good economy to me. I say that because the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] has stressed the iniquitous spending of the New Deal in connection with this measure.

I call attention to this fact, that it does not cost the taxpayers of the United States $20,000 a year for judges' salaries, but the salary of a judge is $10,000. In addition to this provision in the bill being recommended by the judicial conference, it was recommended by the Attorney General of the United States. There is no provision in this bill that was not recommended by both the judicial conference and the Attorney General.

I certainly feel that our committee in carefully following out our policy of accepting the recommendations of the conference as being advisory and merely making the recommendations that the hearings disclose are necessary, has not departed in the recommendations in this bill from that policy.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. HART. Permit me to state that in the course of his remarks the gentleman stated that he knew nothing about any arrangement between the Democratic leader of the State of New Jersey and the senior Senator from that State.

Mr. WALTER. I did not say "arrangement"; I said "controversy."

Mr. HART. It was referred to in the prepared speech of the gentleman from New Jersey. I merely want to advise the gentleman and advise the committee that the gentleman from New Jersey knows nothing whatsoever about it either.

Mr. KEAN. I know nothing of the kind, but I do read the newspapers.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman kindly give the Committee some explanation with respect to the proviso appearing on page 2 of the bill?

Mr. WALTER. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this proviso makes all of the judgeships temporary so that upon the death, resignation, or removal of any of the present judges a vacancy would not automatically be created. The subcommittee of which I am chairman feels that we ought to be hesitant in the creation of permanent judgeships. Population shifts, business shifts, and we are certainly not in any position today to foresee the condition of a court calendar even a year hence. We therefore felt that all of these judgeships ought to be temporary.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. As a member of the Judiciary Committee and as a resident and a member of the bar in the eighth judicial circuit of the United States, I am familiar with the judicial situation in that circuit, as shown by reports and by showings made by the presiding judge of the circuit court of appeals. The Judiciary Committee has concluded, after consideration of the matter, that two additional judges are needed on the circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit. I wish the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee would explain, if he has not already done so, that while the bill calls for and carries provision for only one judge in the eighth circuit, a committee amendment will be offered for two judges. Will the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania kindly take time at this point to explain briefly the reason for the committee's action?

Mr. WALTER. I shall be pleased to. The reason is that this bill was reported at the last session, and the information we had at that time related to the condition in that circuit as it existed then. At the time the subcommittee reported this bill despite the fact that a recommendation had been made by the judicial conference that there be two additional judges appointed for the eighth circuit they recommended only one because there were three retired judges sitting almost continuously in the eighth circuit. They were men of advanced years. I believe my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska, has a statement from the senior circuit judge with respect to the ages and the abilities of these men.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALTER. I would very much like to have the gentleman at this point insert in the RECORD the statement to which I referred.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I shall be very glad to insert it in the RECORD. My purpose in asking this question was to have brought out the necessity for the additional judge which is recommended by the Judiciary Committee.

The statement referred to follows:

STATEMENT BY JUDGE KIMBROUGH STONE, SENIOR CIRCUIT JUDGE, EIGHTH CIRCUIT

The necessity for two additional circuit judges in the eighth circuit arises from three coacting influences which are (1) increase of work, (2) decrease in number of judges to do the increased work, and (3) method of doing work.

I. INCREASE OF WORK

The increase of work is caused both (a) by increase in number of cases and (b) by increased difficulty in character of cases.

Effects of number of cases and of character of cases on judicial work

While the number of cases in a court has a direct bearing upon the work of the court, because each case must be separately examined and determined, yet the character of the cases is even more important. The difference between the effect of the number of cases and the effect of the character of cases arises from the time and the effort required to examine a particular case. If a case presents issues on points of law frequently before the court, and has a comparatively small record, it will not require great and extended effort and time to read the record and to decide the issues. If a case presents new, unusual, or difficult law issues or has a long record, it requires, naturally, more effort and time to determine it. Where a case presents both new, unusual, or difficult law issues and also has a long record, the effort and time are of course still greater. Therefore one difficult case or one having a long record, or one having both difficult issues and a long record, may require more effort and time than a dozen of the relatively lighter kind.

Let me illustrate the relative importance of number and of character of cases. All experienced appellate Federal judges know that it is the rare criminal case which requires much effort or time. This is so because the same kind of issues are presented in criminal appeals again and again—therefore the applicable law is familiar and fresh in the judges' minds—and the records are very rarely long. On the other hand, many civil cases present novel issues of law and many have long records.

Next, let us apply the above considerations of number and character of cases to the actual situation in this circuit.

(a) Increase in number of cases

The increase in number of cases for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, was about 8 percent above the average for the preceding 14 years. It was almost 14 percent above the number filed the preceding year. The increase in number of cases for the fiscal year 1939 over the year 1938 was over 7½ percent. There is every reasonable assurance that the number of cases in future years will increase—certainly there is no hope for a sustained decrease.

(b) Increase in difficulty of cases

The character of civil cases coming before a Federal court of appeals depends upon many factors. One of these factors is the kind of social conditions and businesses in the particular circuit. For example, the second circuit (except for Vermont, being the seaboard States of New York and Connecticut) will have a considerable number of admiralty cases which can be rather easily disposed of, because the law is settled and the records not exceedingly long. On the other hand, the eighth circuit is located in the middle of the country, with both large rural areas and also with large cities therein. This results in a wide diversity of kinds of civil cases coming on appeal in this circuit. This diversity is convincingly shown by the fact that in 1938 over 47 percent of the cases filed in this court were not susceptible of classification under the rather detailed table of classes (15 classes) devised by the Department of Justice—this large percentage of cases had to be placed in the catch-all class, called "Miscellaneous." In 1939 the "miscellaneous" cases were almost 48 percent of the total cases, there being 17 classes.

(a) Effect of legislation: Another factor is recent legislation by Congress. Whenever Congress enacts a statute affecting many people in their mode of life or business, the natural result is an increase in litigation. First, there come attacks upon the validity of the act. If the act is sustained by the Supreme Court, there follows an extended period of tests as to the proper construction of and as to the application of the act. In the past few years Congress has enacted a more-than-usual number of such statutes, which are noticeably increasing the work of the court of appeals or of the judges therein. Examples of these are the creation of various administrative boards, the Chandler Bankruptcy Act, the new rules governing trials in district courts (authorized by Congress), and the act requiring three judges (one of whom must be a circuit judge) in all district-court cases attacking the validity of an act of Congress.

Administrative boards: The act creating the various administrative boards require direct reviews or enforcement of board orders to be brought direct in the proper circuit court of appeals. The action of these new administrative agencies is in new legal fields where there is little or no precedent, and, therefore, where a very considerable burden is placed upon the courts of appeals in trying to construe and apply these new laws so as to carry out the intention of Congress.

In addition to this the records in these review proceedings are nearly always very large. Rarely are they as little as 1,000 pages (except in reviews coming from the Board of Tax Appeals). I have on my desk now 1 such record of more than 4,000 pages. I am informed that 2 such reviews have been recently filed in this court wherein the records will exceed 20,000 pages in each case.

In most of these cases one point always urged is the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and order of the board or commission. Such an issue can be determined only by a careful reading of the entire record.

Last year, 20 percent of the total cases filed in this court were reviews of administrative boards or commissions.

Chandler Bankruptcy Act: This new act (approved June 22, 1938, effective September 22, 1938) makes numerous changes in the Bankruptcy Act as theretofore existing. There can be no question but that these changes will result in much litigation extending over years until these changed provisions have received judicial interpretation.

In addition to this, the Chandler Act makes one change which is already being reflected in increasing litigation in the courts of appeals. Before the Chandler Act, appeals in bankruptcy matters were allowable by the district courts as of right only in certain described instances (secs. 24 and 25 of the act, secs. 47 and 48 U. S. C. A., title 11). In all other instances, allowance of such appeals was within the discretion of the courts of appeals and many appeals were denied. The Chandler Act gives appeals as of right except in the limited class of cases where the amount involved is $500 or less. Obviously, the number of appeals is being and will be increased.

New rules: The broad sweeping scope of these rules is stated (rule 1) as governing the procedure in the district courts "in all suits of a civil nature," with certain exceptions set out in rule 81. They make drastic changes in very many phases of procedure from the commencement of an action through to an appeal and also as to some phases of appellate procedure. Any experienced lawyer knows that there will be hundreds of appeals involving construction of these rules. Such result has followed the introduction of every code in a State. This effect is being felt already and will continue for many years—resulting in a definite increase of the number of appeals and of the work in the courts of appeals.

Three-judge cases: The act of August 24, 1937 (50 Stat. 752, U S. C. A., title 28, sec. 280a) requires three judges—at least one of whom must be a circuit judge—to sit in all injunction cases involving constitutionality of acts of Congress. Cases under this act are not numerous but they are highly important and usually involve extended hearings for taking evidence. Each such case takes at least one circuit judge away from his regular appellate court duties, usually for some time, thus interfering with his disposition of appellate business.

(b) Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins (304 U. S. 64): This decision (April 25, 1938) has decidedly increased the work of the courts of appeals in circuits having several States—this circuit has seven States. Theretofore many appeals involved applications of the so-called general law (defined by Mr. Justice Story in Swift v. Tyson (16 Pet. 1) in 1842). In the nearly 100 years between the Swift case and the Erie case, this general law as to many recurring situations had been fairly well defined and therefore was not especially difficult of statement or application. Of course, no matter in what State an appeal might arise, the rule was the same. The Erie case has reversed all of that. The general law has, at least as to substantive law, disappeared. Now the same issue (formerly subject to general law and governed by one rule) may come up in seven cases—one from each of the seven States in this circuit—and, instead of the easy statement and application of one rule to all, we must examine the law separately as to each case so as to ascertain and apply the law of the particular State from which the case came. Thus, until the entire field formerly covered by this general law is settled, the work on this character of appeals may be multiplied seven times because we have seven States in this circuit. It is certain that our work of this kind will be affected every year for a number of years.

(c) Generally: In outlining the above particular matters which increase the work of the court of appeals of this circuit, I have not tried to mention every such consideration but only such as are rather outstanding. There are others. One of these only will be mentioned. While the number of appeals increases, the number of criminal appeals decreases. As said hereinbefore, criminal cases are, as a class, less difficult of examination and determination. Last year (fiscal 1939) the criminal appeals in this circuit were less than one-third of the average for the preceding 4 years. Criminal appeals have tended to fall off since the criminal-appeal rules were put in force by the Supreme Court in 1934. Those rules have much discouraged criminal appeals which were frivolous or for delay. The situation is that the less meritorious, and therefore easily disposed of, criminal appeals are disappearing, while the total number of all kinds of appeals and reviews is increasing. The result is that a hundred appeals today require decidedly more time and effort than the same number did a few years ago.

The actual result is that the work of this court has materially increased in the last few years.

II. DECREASE IN JUDGES

In the past few years this court has been able to keep up with this additional work only because of the fortunate circumstance that we had additional temporary help. This help came through the valuable assistance of three experienced and able retired circuit judges. Judge Wilbur F. Booth retired on January 1, 1932; Judge Arba S. Van Valkenburgh on May 1, 1933; Judge Charles B. Faris on December 1, 1935.

We have now lost most of this assistance. Judge Faris died December 19, 1938. Judge Booth has not sat since September 1938, and will certainly not sit again because of defective hearing and other serious physical ailments—he will be 79 years old next August. Only Judge Van Valkenburgh remains. He does an excellent quality of work, but sits only from one-third to one-half as much as a single active judge. How much longer he will want to help is problematical, as he will be 78 years old next August and is not in the best of physical health.

III. METHOD OF DOING WORK

(a) Choice of method: Wherever a court is made up of more than one judge, and where more than one must sit in every case, there is a choice of method which affects both the rights of the litigants and speed of the work, and therefore the number of cases which can be disposed of within any given period of time. This choice is between doing the work properly or doing it quickly.

The same judges can turn out much more work if they want to sacrifice good, thorough work to speed. Some courts do just this thing. For example, there are courts of three or more judges where, at the adjournment of court for the day, the judges talk over for an hour or more the three to six cases heard that day. They reach a decision in each case, and the cases are assigned for opinions. Each judge then writes the opinions assigned to him. By the time these opinions get to the other judges (who have been busy writing the other opinions assigned to them) these other judges have more or less hazy remembrance of the cases they do not write. If an opinion reads well, they concur without more. Such a method results, in essence, in a one-man decision. By this method more cases are disposed of, but the litigants have not had their rights, because they have really not had the mature, careful consideration of each of the judges who sat. Thus the substantial rights of all of the litigants have been sacrificed for the sole end of speed.

Our method of work: The act of Congress creating the circuit courts of appeals provides that each of such courts "shall consist of three judges" (U. S. C. A., title 28, sec. 212). This court has always construed this language to mean that Congress would not have required three judges unless it intended that litigants should have the careful consideration and determination of each one of the three judges and that the judgment of the court should be the result of the real work of three men.

Our entire method is designed solely to get the careful consideration of each judge and therethrough to have every judgment of this court represent the best thought which three men—not just the thought of the one judge who might write the opinion—can bring to bear. To secure this result—sought by Congress—we have evolved the following method:

Our unit of work is our week during which the same three judges usually sit. (1) At the end of each day there is an informal discussion of the cases heard that day. This discussion has two puposes: First, to ascertain if the decision in any case is so clear that it needs no further consideration (this rarely occurs); and, second, to fix the oral argument in our minds. (2) Next, each judge independently investigates each case—reading the record and briefs—and prepares his written memorandum thereon. (3) When all three judges have prepared such memorandum, a conference is held. At this conference memoranda are read and there is a full discussion as to how each case shall be decided and as to the grounds for each decision. (4) The cases are then, for the first time, assigned for opinions—usually such assignments are made to the judge who seems to have the best and clearest grasp of a particular case, as shown by his memorandum and discussion during conference.

The above method absolutely secures the independent thought and investigation of each judge. These memoranda are usually quite complete, and frequently are extended discussions of every point in the case necessary to be decided—I have one now on my desk of 24 typewritten pages of legal cap paper. Thus when the three judges gather for conference, each is thoroughly informed and prepared on each case and, therefore, can discuss it intelligently. The result is that every decision is the product of three minds which have investigated, separately, and thereafter discussed together every point presented by counsel. Through years of experience, this is the best method we have been able to develop to put into the decision the informed judgment of every judge who sat—a result intended by Congress and, therefore, one to which the litigants are entitled.

Clearly, this method involves an enormous amount of work. We could reduce our work by two-thirds if only the one judge who wrote the opinion made this thorough investigation. Also, opinions could be gotten out faster and more cases disposed of if we did not do the work this way. But such gain in dispatch of business would be at the sacrifice of good work. When Congress required three judges, it did not intend that two of them should be mere "yes men" and figureheads.

We have regarded it as our first and great duty to be as near right as possible. This is the basis of our method.

IV. NEED FOR TWO ADDITIONAL JUDGES

The net result of all of the above is that the court of appeals of this circuit has, for the past few years, had more work than the five active judges, alone, could possibly have done; that this work has been kept up to date only because of the help of the three retired circuit judges and, later, by use of district judges. The help from retired circuit judges has now, in large part, finally ceased. Either the docket must fall behind, district judges must be used, or the court must have additional circuit judges to help do the work. The necessary manpower can come only from one of two sources: By use of district judges on the court or by additional circuit judges.

Use of district judges: There has been substantial objection by the bar to having the determination of appeals participated in by trial judges. This is not the place to discuss the advantages or disadvantages of such practice, but I merely call attention to this attitude of the bar as an existing fact.

A more important thing is the practical situation in the circuit. That situation is that the district judges in this circuit have all they can do to look after the work in their own district courts, and some of them are overburdened. To place upon them the further work of service on the court of appeals is obviously unfair to them and to the litigants in their courts. While it may be better to have some districts fall behind rather than to have the court of appeals fall behind, yet this is but a choice between two evils, neither of which should be permitted and both of which can be avoided by the simple expedient of increasing the manpower of the court of appeals itself.

I have been a member of this court of appeals for more than 23 years and the senior judge for almost half of that time. During that period I think I have gained experience which is useful in estimating the situation of the appeal litigation in the circuit and in gaging the man-force necessary to take proper care of that litigation. All of the present judges work hard and intelligently. They cannot do more than they are doing. I am certain that the court needs these two additional judges. I hope the Congress will see its way to provide them during this session so that the work will not fall behind or the district courts be badly affected; either result is bound to affect litigants harmfully.

I will be happy to aid in any way in further understanding our problems.

Mr. WALTER. This statement explains very clearly the situation. The work was kept up to date because these three retired judges served and later by also using the services of a retired district-court judge. The help from the retired circuit judges has ceased. One of these judges has died, another is 79 years of age and very hard of hearing from what I understand, and the third has recently been stricken by a serious ailment. Since the committee reported the bill, therefore, the situation has changed. The eighth circuit is now deprived of the services of the three retired circuit judges and the service of one district judge.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The Committee on the Judiciary is unanimous in its approval of the committee amendment providing two additional judges for the eighth circuit rather than one as set forth in the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Right in this connection, when the Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill out last July it did not include two judges for the eighth circuit because some gentleman from Nebraska at that time felt that possibly that was not necessary. The judicial conference, however, did make that recommendation.

Mr. WALTER. That is right, the judicial conference made the recommendation, but our subcommittee felt that in view of the fact there were four retired judges sitting we would see whether or not they could get along with just one additional judge.

Mr. MICHENER. That is just one reason why we should pay attention to the judicial conference. The judges there knew of the health of these men, they knew the work there was to do, they knew their abilities, and they recommended this.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Of course, the subcommittee and the full committee have taken into account the fact that developments subsequent to the recommendation of the judicial conference make necessary the additional judge called for in the committee's amendment.

Mr. WALTER. I may say to the gentleman that the judge who will make the recommendations this year is the judge who furnished us with the figures showing the absolute necessity for two judges.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is Justice Stone, the presiding judge?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for two additional circuit judges, five district judges. One circuit judge in the sixth circuit is included. I take it there is no question about that particular circuit judge. The bill also provides for an additional circuit judge in the eighth district. The circumstances of that situation have been explained. The committee will offer an amendment providing for an additional circuit judge, which amendment should be supported, and I hope will be agreed to.

The five district judges have been recommended by the judicial conference; they have been recommended by the Attorney General and have been considered carefully by the subcommittee which unanimously recommended them to the full committee, and the full committee offers this bill. I know there is some difficulty about the judgeship in New Jersey, but just what the political situation is there, I am sure I do not know.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman tell us who in New Jersey has recommended this additional judgeship?

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield so that I may answer that question?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Every one of the district court judges in the State of New Jersey and in addition thereto all of the circuit court judges in the circuit in which that State is located. The only opposition comes from those people who do not want to see a Democrat appointed as a district judge in that State.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. May I say that I have yet to get one letter from any judge in New Jersey or from any lawyer in New Jersey or from any organization in New Jersey advocating the need for a new judgeship there, but I have received a lot of mail in opposition.

Mr. GWNNE. May I say to the gentleman that we have applied to that situation the usual test that must be applied by any committee considering a proposition of that character. In spite of what the gentleman says, that judgeship has been recommended by the judicial conference, upon which his circuit is represented; it has been recommended by the Attorney General and it has been recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Chairman, some amendments will be offered to provide an additional judgeship in Oklahoma and, I understand, an additional judgeship in Florida. I do not believe those amendments should be agreed to at this time. I will not go into that particular situation at present, but I hope when either amendment is offered I may have the opportunity to oppose it.

Mr. Chairman, the Members should bear in mind that the responsibility for providing sufficient personnel and sufficient facilities for these courts is not one that devolves upon the judicial conference but is a responsibility of this Congress. Furthermore, may I remind the Members of the House that the entire expense of operating the Federal judiciary is less than one-fifth of 1 percent of the total expense of the Federal Government. Of course, that is no excuse for creating judgeships that may not be needed.

Reference has been made to a report by Judge Merrill E. Otis. Judge Otis considered the work done in the 10 largest districts of America, and I refer to the 10 districts having the greatest amount of litigation. He considered their record in 1933, which was the peak year, and arrived at the conclusion from the figures studied that the average district judge should terminate in a year 400 criminal cases, 200 civil cases in which the United States is a party, and 200 other civil cases. If you were to apply this formula to the work of many district judges, you would find they are not doing that much work, and the reason is that many of them do not have the work to do. I remind you of this because I hope you will retain in this bill the amendment put in by the subcommittee, and agreed to by the full committee, appearing on page 2, providing that the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge in each of these districts shall not be filled.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that much could be done toward the efficient and economical administration of justice in this country if some revision were made in the boundaries of the various Federal districts and perhaps in the circuits. There was created during the last session of Congress the Office of Administrator for the Courts. When we legislate in the future on these subjects, we will have more information about what is really needed. I trust this amendment will be agreed to because it will provide this House with the opportunity from time to time to consider the needs of the various districts and permit it to legislate accordingly. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, may I say at the outset that this bill has been very carefully considered by the members of the Committee on the Judiciary. It follows the recommendations not only of the Attorney General but of the judicial conference. The judicial conference is composed of various circuit judges, presided over by Chief Justice Hughes, who meet annually to determine the needs of the various jurisdictions. Their recommendations are made after mature deliberation, and we ought to follow their recommendations. They have asked us for the additional judgeships which we have embodied in this bill. We indeed would be derelict in our duty if we would not follow that expert advice. I personally, however, deplore the provision in the bill—and I only speak personally, I do not speak for the committee—which makes these judgeships temporary. I do not believe we should make these judgeships temporary because in almost every instance during my almost 18 years in this House whenever we have added these temporary features to a bill, the temporary judgeships were subsequently always made permanent.

Let me recite a rather anomalous situation that has developed in my jurisdiction in New York. In the last session of this Congress we passed my bill to provide that the temporary judgeship in the southern district of New York, created in 1938, be made permanent. In 1938 we had provided for one additional judgeship, but we provided that this judge should be only temporarily assigned, that, in other words, the first vacancy that occurred in the southern district was not to be filled. The situation in New York is such that we need that judge beyond peradventure of a doubt. Judge Patterson was elevated to the circuit court of appeals, and there was, therefore, a vacancy, but the President was deprived of right to appoint his successor because of the condition which we appended to the original bill in 1938 precluding the right to fill that vacancy, and because thereof we in New York have suffered. He cannot have an appointee in Judge Patterson's place. My bill made the temporary judgeship in New York permanent. But my bill lags in the Senate.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. We repealed that condition.

Mr. CELLER. I am coming to that.

In the last session we provided that this temporary judgeship in New York might be filled, but this only proves my point that in almost every instance where we have provided the temporary feature we have obliterated the temporary feature on some subsequent occasion and made the judgeship permanent. If we would be forthright with ourselves, we would eliminate this temporary feature. We merely include it in the bill for the sake of getting a few votes and for the sake of the argument that it is only a temporary judgeship. For that reason, I do hope that this provision will not remain in the bill. I shall not offer such an amendment because I want to stand by my committee, but I am giving you this opinion for whatever it may be worth.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] to the fact that our former colleague the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Chandler, spent several years in making a study of the advisability of offering a bill redistricting the entire United States, and, but for the fact that he has left this body, in all probability we would be considering such a recommendation. I believe the administrative officer will very shortly submit a report advocating the changing of the districts in the United States.

Mr. MICHENER. That is one reason no one should vote against this amendment.

Mr. CELLER. I have given you my opinion for what it may be worth. I shall offer no amendment. I still believe, despite what both the gentlemen have indicated, that we should not put these provisos in the bill.

Now, as to New York, I wish to say "Justice delayed is justice denied."

As far as New York is concerned, there is great delay in the trial of all cases. There has been a tremendous accumulation of all manners and kinds of cases. For this reason we have asked for the additional judgeship in New York, as recommended by the Attorney General and by the Judicial Conference.

For example, we have cases in New York that take 3 years to try. There is, for example, the Aluminum Trust case, which has endured thus far for over a year and a half and, I am informed, will continue before Judge Caffey for another year and a half, so that judge is almost useless to us as far as all other cases, civil and criminal, are concerned. Judge Woolsey is intermittently ill. There is a motion-picture case about to be tried in the southern district of New York against the motion-picture combine that will take over a year to try. Therefore three judges will be hors de combat, as it were; they will be taken out of the average run of court cases. New York always has a situation of that sort.

In New York we try more admiralty cases than are tried in all the other jurisdictions. We try more patent and copyright cases in New York than are tried in all other districts. We have a plethora of alcohol-tax cases. In many of these cases the defendants number as many as 50, and sometimes more. The environs of New York City are veritable centers for the manufacture of illicit alcohol. Alcohol, non-tax-paid, is manufactured in Greater New York by bootleggers, especially since we increased the internal-revenue tax, to a much greater degree than during prohibition. As a result, a vast number of liquor-tax cases have accumulated. These bootleggers and tax evaders, out on bail, are free to recommit their crimes. For this reason we need these judges to get after these culprits and bring them to book.

I could go on and indicate something of the many fake insurance cases, the income-tax cases, and the Railway Employees' Liability Act cases. Under the Railway Employees' Liability Act most of the cases which could be brought in other States gravitate to New York. Employees are injured in Pennsylvania or Maine or Vermont. They all bring their suits in New York because practically every railroad has an office in New York, and thus jurisdiction is easily assured.

They do this for the reason that New York juries give large verdicts, verdicts which are larger in amount than the verdicts in other parts of the country. So we have a tremendous number of these cases that do not rightfully belong to us.

It is unnecessary to dwell on the denial of justice resulting when calendars of courts are congested and judges overworked. Meritorious claims are compromised on harsh terms when litigants of ordinary circumstances are confronted with interminable delays before a trial can be had and an appeal heard. A speedy trial is a constitutional right of one accused of crime. The southern district handled, for example, during the fiscal year 1938 on the general-motion calendar 4,588 motions, 2,851 bankruptcy motions, and 2,211 discharges and compositions in bankruptcy. From July 1, 1938, to March 1939 there were 4,199 general motions, 2,188 bankruptcy motions, and 1,352 discharges and compositions.

During the same period there was an avalanche of naturalization cases. There were 16,697 petitions for naturalizations. The court is woefully behind in handling naturalization proceedings. Applicants ready and anxious for citizenship must wait 2 years at times after filing their applications for final papers, due to the tremendous amount of work the judges are called upon to perform, and which superabundance of labor precludes appropriate asssignments to the naturalization part.

It is rather anomalous that we hear frequently in the House many outcrys against the tardiness of aliens in embracing citizenship ,and then we have hesitation to appoint additional judges to take care of these aliens pleading for citizenship.

Judge Knox, an able, fearless, and hard-working jurist, testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee that the criminal docket is loaded with cases that cannot be tried for many months. We have a courageous and energetic United States attorney—Mr. Cahill. He has struck at criminality in our district some hard, telling blows, so that New York is no longer a safe place for crooks and malefactors. We stay his hand if we do not cooperate by supplying judges to try the cases he prepares. We cannot bring criminals to book without judges.

At the present time one judge assigned to the criminal part is trying the McKesson-Robbins case, with many defendants. That case will take months to try. There are many such cases awaiting trial. There are scores of mail-fraud cases awaiting trial. There are not enough judges to go around. There are many fake insurance claim proceedings involving physicians and lawyers. These are important trials, involving bogus claims on disability policies. These cases will undoubtedly result in verdicts of guilt. They should be tried speedily. They cannot unless we help.

How about the many cases under the Jones Act, where men are injured on ships. These suits might be brought elsewhere, but are attracted to New York because of larger verdicts in New York than are obtained elsewhere.

There are hundreds of reorganizations under 77B. New York is a veritable vortex of such cases—New York, with all its hotels and apartment houses, which are primarily the subjects of reorganizations.

The case load per judge is over 375 cases, more than 1 a day. That load is staggering.

Statistical data for New York's southern district are as follows:

The judicial conference in September 1938 recommended the creation of two additional district judgeships for the southern district of New York.

The State of New York is divided into four districts—eastern, western, northern, and southern.

The southern district comprises two of the counties (New York and Bronx) composing New York City, the Hudson River Valley counties as far north as, but not including, Albany County, as well as Sullivan County, which adjoins Pennsylvania.

There are 11 judges in this district. A twelfth judge was authorized by section 4, paragraph d, of the act of May 31, 1938 (Public Law No. 555), which also contained a provision that the first vacancy occurring in any of the other 11 positions should not be filled. Recently one of the district judges—Judge Patterson—was elevated to the circuit court of appeals, and legislation is needed to permit this vacancy to be filled. Such legislation is recommended.

The number of civil actions filed is growing. It was 2,675 for the year ending June 30, 1937, and 3,235—an increase of almost 600—the following year.

During the past few years there has also been a marked increase in the number of criminal proceedings in this district. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, there were 779 criminal cases filed; in 1937, 920; in 1938, 1,183; and for the first 6 months of the current fiscal year, 581. In addition, during the last 2 years there has been an increase in the number of civil actions filed. The number of pending cases has increased.

Thus, on June 30, 1937, there were 4,059 cases pending; on June 30, 1938, 4,318; and on December 31, 1938, 4,476. This indicates that the judges are unable to keep abreast of the work, because new cases come in faster than the old ones are disposed of.

The dockets are considerably in arrears. As of June 30, 1938, the law dockets were 3 months and the equity dockets 11 months behind. A year previous the condition was much better.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this bill has the lukewarm support of myself, as well as most of the other members of the Judiciary Committee, I believe.

I am extremely reluctant to vote for a bill increasing the membership of the district courts of the United States. I hate to see the Federal pay roll going up day by day, the pay roll of the Army and the Navy, the classified service, the unclassified service, the permanent part of the Government, the temporary agencies of the Government, and the judiciary itself.

When the prohibition law was repealed we all had reason to believe that the burden on the Federal courts would be considerably lightened. Such has not been the case. During the last 7 or 8 years there has been a very flourishing bankruptcy business in the United States courts, many corporations have been reorganized, a great many new criminal statutes have been placed upon the books, and the various New Deal agencies set up to control business have forced business to go to the courts to fight for their lives. I think the appropriate title for this administration will be "The Era of the More Abundant Strife." At any rate, the litigation in the courts has steadily increased.

We are limited in our knowledge of the needs of the courts almost entirely to the report of the judicial conference, the recommendations of the Attorney General, statements from the various bar associations, and the Representatives in Congress in districts where new judges are requested.

We have an extremely conscientious subcommittee that studied this question, studied the statistics, and reached a conservative conclusion. I have complete confidence in the judgment of the chairman of this subcommittee the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] and the ranking Republican on the committee the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE]. I am perfectly willing to abide by their judgment. They have found that these five district judges are necessary. They have specifically recommended against including an extra judge in the State of Oklahoma, and I think when the committee amendment to strike out that item of the bill is reached the House ought to support the committee. I understand that the gentleman from Oklahoma on the committee [Mr. MASSINGALE] has changed his mind about the necessity for this judge. Formerly opposed to an additional judge, he is now to ask that that provision be retained in the bill. I may say, in passing, that the State of Oklahoma now has 4 district judges with a population of a little over 2,000,000. My own northern district of New York has the same population or a little more than the State of Oklahoma, and we get along very nicely with 2 Federal judges. I see no justification whatever for giving Oklahoma five when two can do the business in New York State.

As the gentleman from Michigan has suggested, it is not entirely a matter of population; it is the amount of litigation that should be the determining factor, but it is well to bear in mind that the northern district of New York borders on Canada, and we have many deportation cases in our district court. It is also a manufacturing State, which means we have much patent litigation. It is in the heart of the industrial East, where there is a great deal of litigation caused by diversity of citizenship. I think, as a general rule, an industrial section of the country has more litigation than a rural section, because there is more business.

I hope we will not accept any amendments outside of those recommended by the committee, because their report is the result of very careful study. There is always a temptation for Members of Congress to offer amendments to get additional judges for their own districts, and I hope the House will resist such efforts. There are a number of us who cannot vote for the bill if it is loaded down beyond the committee recommendations.

As I said at the outset, this bill has my unenthusiastic support, and I think that is the general feeling. I am going to vote for it, though with some hesitancy, exactly as the committee have reported it, and I hope it will be the last judgeship bill reported to the Congress for many years to come.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, the Representatives from New York are deeply interested in the pending bill because our district court calendars are growing longer, and the present personnel of the court seems unable to promptly dispose of much urgent business. I would like to see five additional district judges appointed for the Southern District of New York instead of just one as is provided by this bill. I believe we should also have an additional circuit court judge. An increase in the number of judges seems to be the only solution to the problem of crowded calendars and long delays.

It would seem that, year after year, our local district courts are lapsing into a slower pace. They are continually falling behind in the disposition of important business and unless we take action the situation will become unbearable. My colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] spoke about the great amount of work in the southern district. The gentleman mentioned a few big Government cases that are occupying the full time of some of our district judges, and at the rate the judges have been proceeding they will probably take the rest of their lives to try them. The judge assigned in these special cases are very estimable gentlemen, but they are quite old and do not appear to be in any rush to finish the cases.

Many of these cases being prosecuted by the Government and requiring the full time of a judge could and should be tried in other districts. For some reason best known to the Attorney General they are moved into the southern district of New York. As a result, New York is busy doing the work of every other district and its own. Only a few weeks ago another one of our judges was assigned to the Associated Gas case. This case originated up-State New York, but by some agreement it was transferred to our district. This case involves millions of dollars, and you can readily see how this judge will be required to devote practically all of his time to advising with the trustees and hearing the many motions arising out of this litigation.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Also, the judicial conference recommended two additional judges, although this bill complies with only half of that request.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I would like to see at least five judges created by this bill. One Member, in speaking today, introduced the subject of politics in connection with this bill. He intimated that it would mean jobs for Democrats.

This is not so, because when the President recently had a vacancy in the circuit court he appointed a Republican and passed over the Democrats on our district bench. We have a senior judge in our jurisdiction who is a Democrat, appointed by Woodrow Wilson, but he finds time to go around delivering speeches condemning not only the administration but everyone connected with it. Certainly there is no politics as far as we New York Democrats are concerned. I hope the Members will give serious thought to this bill and help us create additional facilities in our jurisdiction. I wish all of you gentlemen who are not especially interested, because your State is not to have any judgeships under this bill, will consider the problem of our courts in the southern district and vote favorably, so that my home district may obtain these much-needed additional judges. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House has been very carefully considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I desire to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the ability and integrity of the chairman of the subcommittee, who has handled this particular legislation, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. In this bill we have provision for one circuit judge in the sixth circuit. That question was determined originally by the subcommittee at the time it considered the bill. An amendment will perhaps be offered by the committee providing for a circuit court judge in the eighth circuit. I propose to vote for it and fully support the committee in that proposed amendment. This bill provides for five additional district judges. There will probably be two amendments, one providing for an additional district judge in Oklahoma and one in the State of Florida. I shall compare briefly for your consideration the question respecting Oklahoma and some of the other States in which we have a less number of judges than they now have in the State of Oklahoma. In the State of Oklahoma, as I understand it, there are now four district judges, who serve a population in that State of approximately two and a third millions of people. I turn to my own State of Indiana, having a population of more than 3,000,000 people and we have in that State two district judges—one in the northern district of Indiana and one in the southern district, both of whom are alert and active in the disposition of the business of the court. Those two district judges, in my own State, take care of and handle the tremendous volume of business in the courts in that State. As I understand, in the State of Oklahoma, they have the two districts with two judges in one district and with one roving judge who sits in the other districts and aids in handling the judicial business in part, at least, in those particular districts. They are abundantly equipped in that State at this particular time, and at the time this bill was considered, my fine colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] expressly stated before the committee that the extra judge was not needed in that State. Since that time, however, he has stated that he has asserted the well-known prerogative and has changed his mind in that respect. However, the volume of business in the State of Oklahoma, as it appears from the records, fails to justify an additional judge in that State. The four judges there at the present time are certainly able to handle all of the business in that State.

Also, in the State of Florida it is expressly stated, and the subcommittee had a statement before it, and the whole committee had the same statement before it at the particular time it considered this measure, that there was no necessity for an additional judge in the State of Florida.

As I understand, in that State one of the judges has practically reached the age of retirement. That retirement will occur in a short time. That judge will retire and a new judge will be appointed to take his place, and then they will be equipped to handle all the business in the State of Florida. One of the judges, Judge Holland, of Miami, as I understand, has been ill. That is only temporary, and with the new appointment in the not far distant future, they will be well equipped to handle all of the business coming before the Federal courts in the State of Florida.

I propose to support the committee in this matter with respect to the creation of these courts. I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the appointment of additional judges where they are not necessary. We have other problems in this country. We have the problem of the unemployed. We have the farmers' problems, which must be solved. The questions which affect labor must be determined, and a just and proper solution made. I am unalterably opposed to the appointment of any additional Federal court judges in districts where they are not absolutely necessary. We can get along without them. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDELSTEIN].

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] has announced his opposition to the appointment of additional judges in districts where they are not necessary. I believe that a careful consideration of the hearings held by the Senate's "special committee to study reorganization of the courts of the United States and reform judicial procedure" on April 17, 1939, would convince him of the necessity for the appointment of an additional judge for the Federal District Court of the Southern District of New York. I come from that district. I have only been a Member of this House for a period of 3 weeks. However, for 29 years I practiced very extensively before the Federal court of that district. From my experience I can affirm without hesitation or qualifications that that district needs the additional judge recommended by the House Judiciary Committee. I am surprised that the committee reported in favor of only one additional judge. I believe that the southern district could easily use five additional judges. I would like to see the time when this will be done.

The southern district of New York is a unique district in our Federal court system. In territorial extent it is one of the smallest. In the size of business that it handles, year in and year out, it is one of the largest. In complexity of cases which come before it, it exceeds any other court. As you all know the southern district of New York has within it the financial capital of the United States, if not of the world. It has jurisdiction in admiralty over the enormous shipping activities carried on in the port of the city of New York. Numerically, it has more district court judges than any other district, but in comparison with the amount of business handled, the number is absolutely inadequate.

Let me point out to the Members of this House in some greater detail the different types of cases which exist in this district in large number and which rarely arise in any of the other districts. In the first place the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is instituting most of its very important prosecutions under the Sherman Act in this district. The long heralded prosecution against the motion picture industry is now pending in this district. This case is not one that will be disposed of in a day, a week, a month, or possibly even in a year. Other antimonopoly prosecutions will also be instituted in this district, I understand, whenever there are sufficient facts to lay a proper venue for bringing the suit in the southern district of New York.

Under the Judicial Code citizens of another State residing in New York are given the privilege, when sued by a resident of New York, to remove cases begun in the State courts into the Federal District Court of the Southern District of New York. Most of the corporations whose offices are located in the financial and business sections of New York City have their domicile in some other State. The tremendous amount of litigation which naturally flows from their contracts and their torts provides much of the case load in the southern district. Many of the negligence actions which could well be begun in other jurisdictions are brought in the southern district court. This situation does much to swell the aggregate number of cases on the calendar in the southern district of New York.

I have already referred to the obvious fact that the southern district contains the financial center of this country. In recent years a tremendous number of cases in bankruptcy, which includes 77B proceedings for reorganization of realty corporations and industrial corporations, have been instituted in the southern district of New York. Although these proceedings can be handled somewhat more expeditiously than equity cases, since most of them involve corporations whose assets are in the tens of millions of dollars, the proceeding is likely to continue anywhere from 1 to 3 years. This is in addition to the usual run of bankruptcy cases arising out of ordinary small business.

Finally, let me refer to the condition of the criminal calendar. New York City, because of its close relation to business enterprises, has many cases of use of the mails with intent to defraud. There are also criminal cases which are likely to arise in any metropolitan center of population.

The calendar steadily falls behind. This is in no sense a criticism of any of the hard-working judges who are members of the southern district court. I know that these judges, in an effort to keep up with their work, after sitting on the bench all day—and they do not adjourn on the minute—come back to their offices in the evening and on Saturday afternoons and Sundays to take care of the work which has piled up, to study cases they have heard, and to prepare their decisions and opinions. Nor is it an attack upon the handling of these cases by the United States attorney for that district, who, with his capable assistants, has been solicitous of the constitutional rights of those who have been accused of crime.

The district attorney and his assistants are aware of this distressing condition. They spare no effort to minimize it as much as possible. They work nights, Sundays, and holidays, but if there are not enough judges to hear the cases their endeavors go for naught.

Notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the judges and the United States attorney for that district, those who are accused of crime and who cannot furnish bail, are being deprived of the right guaranteed to them by the sixth amendment of the Constitution of a speedy trial. They must stay in jail for a considerable period of time, while those who are fortunate enough to raise bail, can walk the streets free. If some of those who are held in jail until tried are found not guilty, there is no redress for the prison term they have served.

Considerations of justice should move this House to provide for an additional judge for the southern district of New York so that these cases of hardship will be eliminated as much as is humanly possible. We can do no less than that at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to say that while I was not a member of the Judiciary Committee at the time this matter was considered, I have since become a member of that committee and I have sufficient confidence in the chairman and members of the subcommittee to go along with their judgment on the measure.

For a minute let us consider, if we may, what brings about the necessity of an additional judge. I speak of New Jersey alone, because as a member of the bar of that State I am fairly familiar with the situation. In these times of stress and economic difficulties that have arisen in the past few years we lawyers—and I include myself in that category—have been inclined to start cases in some instances where we might have tried to settle or perhaps thought twice before we did start the action. As a result, there has been a very great congestion in the calendars of our courts, not only the Federal courts but the State courts. Also there has been considerable increase in bankruptcy, reorganization, criminal, and the many various types of cases that the Federal courts handle. As that calendar has increased, the number of judges have not increased, nor has the staff been increased in the Federal departments. The attorneys general and the assistant district attorneys have not had an increase in their staff, yet there has been an increase in the criminal cases before the Federal courts.

We attorneys know—and perhaps this is an admission out of school that I should not make—that in the rush of business and public life sometimes when the court calendar is made up for the trial day we can find many thousands of excuses why we should not try our case on that particular day, and have it postponed. After all, the court must set a calendar in order to function. When we postpone these cases, sometimes the judges are left without any cases to try on that day, further congesting the list. New Jersey is not any exception. Being as close as it is to the metropolitan section and New York City, our calendar has increased alarmingly. In 1938 we suddenly found a very peculiar situation. With our calendar increasing daily, there was a vacancy created by reason of the elevation of Judge William Clark to the circuit court of appeals. Immediately the powers that be in the State tried to determine who might be the probable or possible successor. Unfortunately, those who would have the choice of naming that person did not agree. I may say, incidentally, that it was in the newspapers, so it is public property. They did not agree for 18 months, during which time the calendar increased daily and the cases were not tried. Because of the clamor of the citizens of our particular section, the civil cases took precedence over the criminal cases and few days could be given for such trials.

At this time I want to commend our assistant United States district attorney, Hubert Harrington—he is a very close friend of mine—for the admirable work he has done in trying to relieve the condition. Working day and night and being able to devote only 1 or 2 days a month to criminal cases, he has kept the calendar down to a minimum, as the figures will show. He tried 327 criminal cases in a period of a year.

Then there was an appointment. Incidentally, during the entire time that there was a disagreement on the appointment of the judge, a special appeal was made for an additional judgeship in New Jersey. No one paid any particular attention to the fact that there was a vacancy which had not been filled. Then, 18 months afterward, after the calendar had piled up for the lack of this one judge, a new man was appointed; and let me say that the ultimate choice was worth waiting the 18 months to have him appointed, because Judge Thomas Walker is one of the finest men I know, a classmate of mine, and will make a good addition to the Federal court.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Is it not true that much of the congestion in New Jersey is due to the vacancy which existed over a period of months?

Mr. VREELAND. Considerably.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. And that just as soon as that vacancy was filled the congestion began to disappear.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman is right.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. So there is really no necessity for the additional judgeship in New Jersey such as there was while the vacancy existed.

Mr. VREELAND. I disagree with my colleague from New Jersey on that point. I do not feel that this vacancy should have occurred, but it did occur, unfortunately, and we are advised cases have piled up so that an additional judgeship is necessary to serve our litigants, to take care of the criminal cases that are awaiting trial, and to take care of the interests of the United States Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. VREELAND. I am, however, going along with this mainly for the reason that the additional judgeship is temporary. I believe firmly, after the congestion has been relieved and the calendar cleared, four judges can handle the job, just as has always been done.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield.

Mr. HART. Answering our good friend and colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS], will the gentleman permit me to read a statement by the presiding judge of the district court with reference to the need for the five judgeships, despite the vacancy?

Mr. VREELAND. I would like to very much, but I have only 1 minute left.

Mr. HART. I appreciate the gentleman's lack of time, but I have a statement from Judge Fake showing why an additional judge is necessary despite the filling of the vacancy.

Mr. VREELAND. I also want to point out, Mr. Chairman, if I may, that while the figures which have been quoted of 3,284 cases pending are staggering, nevertheless 1,804 of these cases are bankruptcy actions. We attorneys know that in bankruptcy the referees handle most of the cases, and, in fact, are not usually heard by the judges.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman seems to be using the same figures which were criticized by the able chairman of the committee when I used them. Will the gentleman tell us where he got these figures?

Mr. VREELAND. These figures were sent to me by Administrative Assistant to the Attorney General Thomas D. Quinn.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, in this brief time I shall try to explain the Oklahoma judgeship situation.

The impression has been left by certain Members that this is just an afterthought on the part of Oklahoma. I have studied the report of the judicial conference, signed by Chief Justice Hughes, and I find that Oklahoma is just as strongly mentioned therein as is any other State.

Attention has been called to the fact that Indiana requires but two judges, whereas Oklahoma, with a similar population, requires four. Let me remind you that Oklahoma is a new State, and within her borders is approximately one-half of the Indian population of the Nation. Practically all litigation involving Indians must go through the Federal courts, both cases with respect to the person of the Indian as well as to his land and property. Indian land titles present one of the most complex questions of law that any court can be called upon to decide.

In some instances it involves old tribal customs which must be studied. Since the Federal Government has made Oklahoma the home of the Indians and put upon us the duty of trying these cases in the Federal court, our load naturally is heavy.

The 4 Oklahoma judges in 1938 terminated 2,090 cases. Virginia, with a population almost identical with Oklahoma's, has 4 judges and terminated 1,345 cases. Oklahoma terminated 645 cases more than Virginia. Louisiana, with a comparable population and 4 judges, terminated 1,173 cases; in other words, Oklahoma terminated 817 more cases. Tennessee, with a population comparable to Oklahoma and with 4 judges, terminated 1,442 cases; in other words, Oklahoma terminated 548 more cases. The number of cases terminated by the 4 Oklahoma judges was 2,090 against an average for these 3 other States of 1,320 cases. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, practically every Member who has spoken this afternoon on the pending bill is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I yield to no one in my respect for the Judiciary Committee, but today we have seen an example of one of the great committees coming in with a bill upon which there has been no unanimity of opinion on the part of the committee for it. I have seen member after member of this great committee take the floor this afternoon and apologetically say he expects to support this measure; but he says he is not completely sold on it. This confirms an opinion that I have had for some time, which is that providing new judgeships and filling them is done without the consideration that such important matters should have.

There are those of us who have been against this judgeship racket for years. Now is the time for us to rally together and beat this poorly prepared measure. Let us remove this uncertainty in the minds of these fine brethren on the Judiciary Committee. Let us take the position that we do not need any more judges until it can be shown conclusively that we need them. So long as such a large number of these splendid fellows do not agree, then it is our duty to act cautiously and vote "no." We have voted many additional judges for New York, but the more judges that are given to New York the more they want. The more you give to Ohio the more they want. There has been no definite or persuasive facts or figures set forth here today that we need more judges any place. I take the position that we do not need these judges. I am a lawyer also and I have practiced a great deal in the United States courts. I have the highest regard for those courts, but there is no use rushing into something when we are not sure of our way.

What we need in connection with the selection of judges is to select better judges. Occasionally men are selected as judges who have seldom ever tried a lawsuit. We have seen a fine example of that in the last year or two when men have been elevated to the Supreme Court, some of whom have never been recognized as practicing lawyers.

Some of these men who have been appointed judges throughout the country also have not been considered as real lawyers. Of course such men cannot dispatch the business of the court. They do not know how to do it. I can give you an illustration of how these courts are loaded down with men who should not have been appointed. I know a man who I think is in the process of being prepared for a place on the Supreme Court, and if anybody wants to ask me who it is I will tell him. I have seen him appointed as counsel for the T. V. A. investigating committee. I have seen him perform that service, just as his master told him to perform. Was he rewarded for his tractable and servile service? I can only suggest that he received an appointment to a place on the circuit court of appeals of the United States. He received this appointment almost before he had finished his work helping whitewash the T. V. A. How long did he hold this most honorable position of circuit judge for the United States? He only held it for a few months. They resigned him from that high and honorable place at the behest of the administration to accept a place as Solicitor General of the United States—that place is not to be compared to a place on the highest court next to the Supreme Court—and I think he is being prepared for the Supreme Court of the United States. I am opposed to that sort of method of picking judges. I am opposed to that way of handling our courts. Why do we not rise up here this afternoon and defeat this proposition? Let us put it aside for a while. We can get along without any more judges at this time, and when we have done that we will have done what our constituents want us to do, what we ought to do and we will have done right. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] challenge the report of the judicial conference wherein it is stated that there is a need for another judge in the gentleman's circuit?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have great respect for the judicial conference. But there are several things involved in putting a man on the bench. In the first place, you need a competent man, and in the second place he should be put on there in the right way. I am not ready to say that we need another judge in Ohio. For instance, one of the persons appointed to the Federal bench from Ohio had not tried a case for many years, yet he was appointed on the circuit court of appeals to decide the important matters that claim the attention of that court. This is not a wise course to pursue.

Mr. COCHRAN. We are not considering the appointee. We are considering the recommendation of the judicial conference.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has referred to the distinguished Philadelphian, Francis Biddle?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. It is too bad the gentleman did not read the speech delivered at a dinner recently by George Wharton Pepper, one of the leaders of the gentleman's party, extolling Mr. Biddle.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I probably know as much about that matter as does the distinguished gentleman to whom my friend refers. I have no desire to discuss personalities. I say that the selection of Mr. Biddle to the court of appeals was not above unfavorable comment, and that the withdrawing him from the court and putting him in another position does not reflect credit on him or those at whose beck and call he responds, and it is almost an insult to the high judicial position with which the parties were playing hide-and-seek.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the need for additional circuit judges in the eighth circuit. The work of that circuit has been very, very heavy for a long time. The appellate work in that circuit has been such that it has been necessary to call members of the district bench, already overburdened with duties of the district courts, to assist on the circuit bench. This is not a good condition.

May I say a word about the Committee on the Judiciary? I have watched its work in connection with this bill and I feel that committee has approached the subject purely from the standpoint of the needs of the people of this country. One of the most vital needs of every people is justice, and a justice which is not delayed. Justice delayed is justice denied. In spite of the tireless efforts, the industry and ability of the splendid judges who occupy our Federal bench, justice will be delayed and denied unless we provide a sufficient number of judges. Whenever we are so niggardly in our appropriations and in our arrangements for the judiciary of this country that we do not provide a sufficient number of judges to do the work carefully, thoughtfully, and in an orderly manner, we are denying justice to the people of this country. I do not think the Congress wants to do that. So I urge the Members here to vote for the pending bill because I think it is a very good bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. May I suggest to my colleague that he also bring out the fact that unfortunately the two retired judges in the eighth circuit are now physically unable to answer the call to serve in emergencies, which requires the eighth circuit at the present time to call upon the district judges in that circuit? That certainly is a very bad practice and the judicial conference recognizes that fact and recommends two additional judges.

Mr. BELL. I am familiar with that condition, and it is a condition that needs remedying.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, following the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], I want to remark that it appeals to me that the committee has made a good report and has, perhaps, proved to us the need of these additional judgeships. They have been very polite, indeed, and very careful not to discuss the practical situation as to how and by whom these judges are to be appointed. We are well informed as to the appointments already made by this administration. I listened yesterday to your side say that they refused a large number of appointees and funds to the old Librarian of Congress because a new Librarian was coming in. Why not be as courteous today and wait for the new President to come in within a few months? We certainly have had enough of a certain type of judges. That is what causes present objections. I believe it is proper and a fair criticism, and that we may warn ourselves that, although the need may exist, "what may we get?"

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CAMP].

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I was surprised this morning to find that some Members do not believe there is any need for certain of these additional judgeships. I ask your indulgence for a few minutes to tell you of my experience in the northern district of Georgia. I came directly from the district attorney's office in that district to this House last August, having served more than 5 years there as assistant United States attorney. In the northern district of Georgia we tried, during the year ending July 30, more than 1,100 cases. We have only one judge and during that year we constantly had with us visiting judges. Judge Kennemer served almost half his time there, coming from Montgomery to assist Judge Underwood in that court. Judge Barrett and Judge Deaver spent almost a third of their time in disposing of this large number of cases.

You may ask why so many cases are tried there. It is mostly because of the heavy habeas corpus docket. We have, in Atlanta, the Federal penitentiary, and there are more than 3,600 prisoners there constantly. Almost every one of these men files an application for a writ of habeas corpus, and the judge has tried more than 300 habeas corpus cases each year for the last 5 years; the hearings on some of the cases lasting several days. The hearings in the famous Al Capone case, the Beard case, the case of Lupo the Wolf, and the Farnsworth case, all took a long time. If you will look at the records you will see that this district court has tried more habeas corpus cases than all the other United States district courts combined.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Is not the Atlanta Penitentiary in that district?

Mr. CAMP. Yes; that is what I am speaking of. All these cases come from the Federal penitentiary.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, may I say that I emphatically agree with what the gentleman says. May I say, also, that there has been no increase in the judicial personnel in Georgia since the act of May 28, 1926.

Mr. CAMP. May I also say that within the northern district of Georgia lies a great Federal reserve, known as Chickamauga Park. There is a peculiar law in effect, giving to the Federal courts exclusive and original jurisdiction over that area. Therefore, the district court in the northern district of Georgia has to try even misdemeanor cases originating in that great tract of land.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. While I believe a great many of our Federal judges are little more than fancy loafers, and while I do not like the philosophy of a great many men who have been promoted to the Federal bench, I am familiar with the situation to which the gentleman is addressing himself, and I know there is a real need for relief through the appointment of an additional judge. The inquiry I have made discloses that this situation is true with respect to the other four judgeships provided in the bill.

Mr. CAMP. The judicial conference in September 1938 recommended an additional judge for the northern district of Georgia. Georgia has three districts—the northern, middle, and southern.

The northern district includes the city of Atlanta, one of the most important industrial and railroad centers of the South. The United States penitentiary, known as Atlanta Penitentiary, being there results in the filing of the large number of habeas corpus proceedings. The volume of business in this district is the heaviest of any district in the United States having only one judge. Judge Underwood, the present judge, is the most overworked Federal judge in this country. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, there were filed in the northern district of Georgia 419 civil actions and 496 criminal proceedings, a total of 915 cases, while the average number of cases filed per judge for the whole country in the same period was 183 civil actions and 188 criminal proceedings, a total of 371 cases. Thus, there were nearly three times as many cases filed before the one judge in this district during the fiscal year of 1938 as was the average per judge for the entire country during the same period.

Moreover, the number of cases pending on December 31, 1938, was 423, an increase of 32 cases over the number pending on June 30, 1938. During that 6-month period 495 cases were terminated, while 527 were filed.

I desire to appeal to you to remedy this situation not only in the interest of justice and fairness, but I ask it for the relief of this overworked judge and the understaffed office of the district attorney.

To keep up with this growing docket and to dispose of this large volume of business it is the custom of the judge when presiding in the divisions of his court outside of Atlanta to open his court early and adjourn very late, often holding court open until after darkness has set in. This has resulted in much inconvenience to jurors, parties, and witnesses who live in the rural sections.

We really need this judgeship. There has been no increase in the judicial personnel of the State of Georgia since the act of May 28, 1926 (44 Stat. 870), which increased the number of districts in the State from two to three.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired; all time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional circuit judges as follows:

One for the sixth circuit and one for the eighth circuit.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: Page 1, line 6, after the word "circuit", strike out "one" and insert "two."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that the Judiciary Committee agreed on this morning. I have already discussed the amendment. It provides for two judges in the eighth circuit.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that inasmuch as the amendment has just been agreed to that he move to strike out the word "two" in line 4, and insert "three."

Mr. WALTER. I shall offer a perfecting amendment later.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, seven additional district judges, as follows:

One for each of the following districts: Southern district of California, district of New Jersey, western district of Washington, western district of Oklahoma, eastern district of Pennsylvania, southern district of New York, and one who shall be a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 8, on page 1, strike out "seven" and insert "five."

In line 11, on page 1, after the word "Jersey", strike out the remainder of the line, and all of line 1, on page 2, and insert "northern district of Georgia."

On page 2, line 3, after the word "New", strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 4, and insert "York: Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge in each of said districts shall not be filled."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: On page 1, line 11, after the word "California", insert "northern district of Illinois."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, while this amendment is not recommended by the judicial conference, nevertheless it appealed to the members of the Judiciary Committee who gave considerable thought to this proposition that certainly there ought to be a temporary judge provided immediately for the northern district of Illinois. This need arises from the incapacity of one of the judges, who is past retirement age. This judge has not been on the bench for many months, with the result that the criminal cases have increased from 150 pending on the 30th of June 1938, to approximately 300 today. All of the cases in that district have increased from a grand total of 3,900 to 4,288.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has used the words "temporary judge." Will the gentleman explain what he means by a temporary appointment?

Mr. WALTER. By that I mean when there shall be a vacancy due to the death, resignation, or removal of any of the present judges, the vacancy cannot be filled except by an additional act of Congress. All of the judges in this bill are popularly known as temporary judges. The judges themselves are appointed for life, but the judgeship is a temporary position.

I certainly feel that in this case we ought to create this additional, temporary judgeship.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment has not been considered by the Judiciary Committee, other than as suggested in a meeting of the committee this morning.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at the last regular meeting of the committee we did discuss this matter, and the committee agreed to offer this as a committee amendment. The gentleman from Michigan was not at that meeting. We again discussed the matter this morning.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman says that is true, it is true. I did not know I had missed a committee meeting, but I possibly was a little late on some occasions. The other members of the committee would probably know about that, but the fact is, and the real thing to be considered is that the judicial conference has not recommended this judgeship. I am absolutely opposed to all political judges. I go along with the bill when it has the recommendation of the bar association—the people who know—the businessmen of the community—the people who know—the judicial conference, composed of the Chief Justice of the United States and the judges who should know, but I am opposed to political judges, and I am opposed to creating judgeships momentarily or on the spur of the moment here on the floor of the House.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It seems to me that the question ought to be commented on whether it is better to appoint these judges now or wait, perhaps, until the next Congress or the next administration comes in. It seems to me that always before this administration, Presidents of both parties have appointed independent men and able lawyers as judges, and it might be, we hope, that the next administration, regardless of party, will adopt that traditional policy.

Mr. MICHENER. For my part, I am a Republican, and I would possibly appoint all Republican judges if they were as capable as available Democrats; but I am saying that the Judiciary Committee is not partisan. I am saying that we have found, after careful study, and as recommended by a Republican Chief Justice, that the country needs these additional judges provided in this bill; and I, for one, am not going to deprive the litigants of the country of the right to have the courts function now, simply because we are going to get a Republican President in 1940. If the Democrats have as much trouble in selecting judges and in settling their political quarrels about the appointment of judges as they have had in the State of New Jersey, we need not fear any appointments for at least a year, and so I, for one, am ready to start the thing going; but I do think we are going far afield—and I am not talking politics—when we come on the floor and attempt to create new judgeships. Perhaps the majority have the political votes to do that, but you are going to do it by political votes, if you do.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman does not believe it political where the judge is incapacitated and is in California for his health and has been there for 5 months, and as a result of that the entire calendar has become congested?

Mr. MICHENER. That is possibly true. The judicial conference is going to meet shortly, and the judicial conference will recommend, and if it does recommend that we need that judge there, the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that I will be the first man to advocate the appointment.

Mr. WALTER. But the judicial conference will not meet again until October.

Mr. MICHENER. But you have your summer vacation right ahead of you. If I were making a speech against this bill and wanted a real excuse, I would say the judges would not be appointed so that they could do anything during the summer anyway. The summer vacation comes very soon; however, we must remember that the next Congress does not convene until next January. Judges appointed now will be available for the fall terms.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MICHENER) there were—ayes 86, noes 70.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the chair appointed Mr. WALTER and Mr. TABER to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 89.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 1, line 11, after the word "Jersey" insert the following: "Eastern district of Missouri."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I especially would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. I approve of the method of selecting additional judges when the committee accepts the recommendations of the judicial conference. Such a procedure removes the political issue. Surely we can trust Chief Justice Hughes and his associates.

The gentleman from Michigan said a moment ago to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] that the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that he, the gentleman from Michigan, would be the first one to support an amendment recommended by the judicial conference. The judicial conference in 1938 and again in 1939 recommended an additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri. So I hope the gentleman from Michigan will be consistent and not only vote for my amendment, but make a speech for it.

It so happens that included in the eastern district of Missouri is the city of St. Louis. It is one of the greatest railroad centers in the United States. It is not a flag station. No train ever goes through that city. It either is made up there or it ends its run there. We have in our district courts a number of cases where large railroads are in the hands of receivers, and that is taking the entire time of one of our district judges. There is nothing that I can say concerning the situation in the eastern district of Missouri that has not been said by the conference of circuit judges, headed by Chief Justice Hughes. Here is the recommendation—

The judicial conference in September 1938 recommended an additional district judge for the eastern district of Missouri.

Missouri is divided into two districts—the eastern and western. The eastern district is composed of 48 counties and includes the city of St. Louis.

There are two judges in this district, who are assisted a part of the time by the judge authorized by the act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1804) to serve both the eastern and western districts.

The volume of business is large, and during the fiscal year of 1938 the case load per judge of 406 cases exceeded somewhat the average per judge for the entire country, which was 371 cases. The business is increasing, as appears by the fact that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, there were 515 civil actions and 499 criminal proceedings filed, while during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, there had been 425 civil actions and 512 criminal proceedings filed.

Then followed the 1939 recommendation for an additional judge.

If we are going to follow the recommendation of the judicial conference, I think you should accept the recommendation not only for 1938 but also for 1939, and accept my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. As I understand it, the provision for this judge is not in this bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is not in the bill, but it has been recommended by the conference of circuit judges for 1938 and 1939. I introduced a bill immediately following this recommendation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Did the gentleman appear before the Judiciary Committee and ask for this judge?

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not. I felt there was no necessity if they would follow precedents and would accept the recommendation of the judicial conference.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think that it comes with rather poor taste to add these judges on the floor of the House when the Judiciary Committee has not had a chance to give consideration to the question?

Mr. COCHRAN. If there is one Member of this House who has offered amendments on the floor, it is the gentleman from Kansas; and I am just wondering if the gentleman has appeared before the legislative committees on all the amendments he has offered to all bills on this floor before he submitted the amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the two Federal judges in the city of St. Louis also serve the entire eastern district of Missouri by holding court at stated intervals in northeastern Missouri at Hannibal and southeastern Missouri at Cape Girardeau, and if those courts do not take up a large part of the time of those two judges? Is that not the fact?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; that is the fact, as the record will show. They serve a territory with over 2,000,000 people.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. And I will ask the gentleman if it is not further the fact that, because of the amount of business in the eastern district of Missouri, those judges are months behind in transacting the business on the dockets of those courts?

Mr. COCHRAN. The conference of circuit judges so reports. I do not know that exists; but when the conference says so, I feel the proper answer to the question is "yes."

I do not know the conditions existing in other parts of the country; but I say if there is any district that is entitled to an additional district judge, it is the eastern district of Missouri. It so happens for about 10 days on a recent visit to St. Louis I stayed at a hotel where also stayed the judge who serves part of his time in the eastern district and the other part in the western district of Missouri. I am a competent witness in this matter, because I know this judge worked every night until at least midnight in an effort to keep up with his assignments. That is not fair. Is it any wonder so many of our judges are ill? I do not ask you to provide this judge solely on my recommendation but on the recommendation of the conference of circuit judges.

In view of that report, I again say I hope the House will accept my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] questioned my statement made a moment ago as to just what my position was on the recommendations of the judicial conference. The Judiciary Committee has not recommended to Congress in this bill all of the judges suggested by the judicial conference. As I recall, the Missouri judgeship was never before the committee for consideration. Possibly a bill might have been introduced, but these gentlemen certainly did not come before the Judiciary Committee and present their case. Certainly no one else appeared before the Judiciary Committee asking that this judge be included. Certainly the Department of Justice did not appear before the committee and ask that this judge be included. Therefore the Judiciary Committee has not included it.

I always favor a judgeship where that judgeship has been suggested by the judicial conference and where the Judiciary Committee, after careful study, has determined that it is needed. We scan those matters carefully before including them in a bill. The approval of the judicial conference is a prerequisite with me. I stand today squarely for the bill which the Judiciary Committee, after careful consideration, reported to this House. I shall vote against the bill if these political judges are included.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman has added a proviso to his statement, but I will say to the gentleman that when the judicial conference made its report I immediately introduced a bill to carry out the recommendations of the conference. When the Judiciary Committee of the House considered this legislation, it certainly had before it the report of the judicial conference, not only for 1939 but also the report for 1938. How could I add anything that would have more weight than the statement of the judicial conference headed by Chief Justice Hughes?

Mr. MICHENER. I suggest that the gentleman come before the next Congress and show his interest in the bill. He is one of the most industrious and influential Members and his presence always carries conviction.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Did the judicial conference ever recommend that two judgeships be consolidated or that any be eliminated, or do they just advise when they need an extra one?

Mr. MICHENER. No; I do not recall that they ever did, but the Judiciary Committee of this House has set up an agency which is now studying this thing and is going to make a report in the next Congress. It is my hope and the hope of every man here, I think, that those judges that are not needed should be eliminated. There are a number of them that were political judges, put on on the floor of this House, just as we are trying to put on this judge under this bill. Where they are not needed they should be eliminated.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is this same organization of your committee that is making this study also studying the matter of additional judges, so that we might wait until that report is presented before acting on this matter?

Mr. MICHENER. They are making an investigation of conditions throughout the entire country. They may report back to the Judiciary Committee and that committee will report a bill to the floor just as soon as it feels one should be reported. Therefore, since there is no politics in the matter and we are not acting as Republicans or Democrats, but as a committee, I think the House should be very cautious about adding additional judges on the floor of this House when they have not been considered by a committee of this House.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman asked why the subcommittee did not include this judgeship despite the fact that it was recommended by the judicial conference. That was because the statistics which we considered showed a considerable falling off of the work in that district.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, that is the chairman of the subcommittee speaking.

Mr. COCHRAN. When were those statistics prepared?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call to the attention of the membership certain facts which appeared in the hearings on similar bills before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

With reference to the situation in Missouri we find these facts: There are two judges in this district who are assisted part of the time by a judge authorized by the act of June 22, 1936, to serve in both the eastern and western districts. The volume of business is large. During the fiscal year 1938 the case load of 406 cases per judge exceeded somewhat the average per judge for the entire country, which was only 371 cases. In this district, therefore, you have an average case load of 406, whereas the average case load throughout the length and breadth of the land is only 371. It was this very fact which caused the judicial conference, as I understand it, to vote for this additional judge. There may have been a falling off of the number of cases recently, but we know that the case load may fall off one month and increase the next. In the light of these circumstances and this case load, I think it is only reasonable that there should be this additional judge.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is no reason in the world why we should not support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri if we are going to support this bill. I shall be consistent and support neither. Why should not the gentleman from Missouri have an additional judge? He represents the great city of St. Louis. He has made out as good a case as the others. How will he explain to his constituents that you deny him? He told you that the judicial conference recommended an additional judge for the great city of St. Louis, but still you deny him. You allowed an additional judge for Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will call you to account for discriminating against him.

In the State of Ohio an additional judgeship is needed, so they say. The distinguished gentleman from Cleveland [Mr. CROSSER] stated that he might offer an amendment for an additional judgeship in Ohio; I should be sorry to find myself in opposition to him, but I shall oppose it. This is a poor time to be adding additional expenses. In proof of what I have been saying, let me point out certain language in the bill. Page 1, lines 10 and 11:

> One for each of the following districts: Southern district of California, district of New Jersey, western district of Washington, western district of Oklahoma.

They struck out "western district of Washington, western district of Oklahoma," and they also struck out one who should serve in both the northern and southern districts of Florida. Why did they make that change?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry, I cannot yield to the distinguished gentleman at this time.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has asked a question. Does he not want an answer?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot yield until I have followed this up. Then, I will let the gentleman answer.

Why did they insert these States and then strike them out? It is just as I stated a while ago, this is simply a logrolling proposition. Like children playing a game, they put their finger down at random and say, "We will have a judge here, we will have a judge there, and another there." Do we need these judges? Why not send some of those who have little to do to help those who are rushed; that is the way to do it.

Mr. Chairman, we know that we now have enough judges in this country to do this business if they could be sent from one district to another. Let me point out some other language in this bill that needs defining.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

Let me point out certain language on the last page of the bill which it seems to me needs some explaining:

Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge in each of said districts shall not be filled.

What sense is there in this kind of legislating? In effect, it provides for the appointment of a new judge, but provides that if any of the judges at that time serving should quit or die that that vacancy would not be filled. It means that a new judge is needed and will be appointed, and that when he is appointed he will serve for life, and that if Judge A, who is the acting judge, and may be a hard-working, efficient judge, dies soon thereafter, that his place shall not be filled. It would appear that if they needed another judge to assist A, that if A would die they would need another judge to assist the new man recently appointed.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will yield, that matter can be explained.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I cannot yield at this time, for this language that I read explains itself. And, besides, the gentleman from Missouri is not going to get an extra judge.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out the inconsistencies in this language that I have quoted. Why do we not do the rational thing? Why do we not send this bill back to the Committee on the Judiciary and let them come in here after full thought and then if they demonstrated the need of new judges Congress can act. Only two or three of the members of this great committee are really for this measure, some only half-heartedly for it, while several other members of the committee are against it. Why do we not do the right thing, the sensible thing; send this bill back where it came from and let them bring out a real bill, which will command our respect and support?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman asks why we do not send judges to different districts to try cases. I remind the gentleman that we have reduced allowances to judges for travel expense and subsistence from $10 to $5 a day. How can one expect a judge to go to New York or any large industrial center and live on $5 a day plus travel expenses? It just cannot be done. The judges will not do it because they have to pay too much out of their own pockets.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Just as the gentleman from Michigan told us, if this bill is passed and these judges are appointed, not one of them can get to work before next fall. Why not just wait until next fall before we pass this bill? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK and Mr. MICHENER) there were—ayes 71, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the House has already adopted an amendment which declares that this bill is not necessary. The committee amendment on page 2 says:

Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge in each of said districts shall not be filled.

That committee amendment has been agreed to. Now, how can we tell our constituents that we were justified in voting for a bill to increase the number of judges throughout the country and at the same time place a provision in the bill that they are not needed? It is the most ridiculous bill I have ever heard of.

I have the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, for the Committee on the Judiciary, but I cannot stultify myself to the extent of supporting a bill which declares on its face that it is not necessary and ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. This is a common provision in many bills heretofore enacted. The gentleman has stood on the floor and advocated those bills himself. It is only for the purpose of meeting existing conditions and preventing overstaffing the courts as conditions change. The gentleman has supported many similar provisions.

Mr. TABER. I have never once in my career in this House voted for any bill providing for additional judges that contained any such provision as this. Maybe some of them have been passed, but not with my vote.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. May I remind the gentleman of something that happened near home. I refer to the bill that created an additional judge for the northern district of New York, which contained this identical language. The gentleman lives in northern New York?

Mr. TABER. It was not advocated by me.

Mr. HANCOCK. It was necessary because the sitting judge was so old and infirm that he was unable to transact any business. So we thought if we were going to have any court business attended to we ought to have an able-bodied young man on the bench. The additional judge was provided; a younger man was appointed, with the provision that when the older judge died there would only be one judge. That was in the northern district of New York.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr WALTER. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the language which he has described as ridiculous appeared in a bill passed by unanimous consent while the gentleman was on the floor several years ago.

Mr. TABER. That may be so, but I do not know of it. It was not passed with my knowing that language was in there. I do not see how the House can possibly vote for a bill that absolutely declares right on its face that it is unnecessary. I cannot do it. I do not know what the rest of you are going to do.

The judge from northern New York referred to is still on the bench and holds court every day 10 years after the bill was passed.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the motion to strike out the enacting clause will be agreed to, which will put an end to this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 67, noes 88.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: Page 2, line 3, after "New York", insert "and one who shall be a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that particular language has already been stricken out of the bill by action of the committee. It has already been disposed of once by the committee. The committee acted on this identical language.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] does not come too late, because no debate has occurred on the amendment.

The Committee of the Whole acted on a committee amendment striking out this identical language; therefore, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word so that I may secure some information before finally voting on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I refer specifically to the language found on page 2, at the end of the bill. May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he will be kind enough to state just how many of the proposed new judges provided in this bill, including the amendment adopted here, will take the places of judges who are now incapacitated through illness or disease or inability to perform their work?

Mr. WALTER. There are two. In the other cases the additions are required because of congested calendars.

Mr. KEEFE. It appears then that the thinking of the committee is based on the theory that because there are two judges who for some reason or other are incapacitated, there must be other judges appointed to do their work?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, no. The committee feels that the American citizens are entitled to the justice that they can get only through a speedy trial. In the case of some of the districts we have considered, it takes 38 months to get a case tried, and we do not think that is justice.

Mr. KEEFE. If the gentleman will confine himself to answering my questions, I would appreciate it. I am asking for information, if I can get it.

Two of these judges are incapacitated, yet you expect to provide additional judges in those districts in order to do the work these judges are not able to do.

Mr. WALTER. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. If the judge who is incapacitated finally dies or resigns, that vacancy will not be filled?

Mr. WALTER. Precisely.

Mr. KEEFE. Then, as far as the judgeships in the districts where additional judgeships are asked, based on the overcrowding of calendars and overwork are concerned, there certainly will not be a situation other than that those judges will be permanent. Is not that true?

Mr. WALTER. No; that is not true, because every district court judge to be appointed under this bill will be appointed under the same conditions.

Mr. KEEFE. He is appointed under the same conditions; he is appointed for life.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. The only situation is that if one of them is appointed for life in a district that has an overcrowded calendar and where the judges are active, he will stay there for life and until some judge decides to quit or dies or passes out of the picture.

Mr. WALTER. No; of course not.

Mr. KEEFE. Will he not?

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is asking me to discuss something I cannot answer.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is chairman of the subcommittee, and I respect the gentleman's ability.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is asking me to tell him what is in the minds of these judges.

Mr. KEEFE. No.

Mr. WALTER. Of course he is. The gentleman is asking me what they are going to do. How do I know what they are going to do? All I know is that we are creating temporary judgeships.

Mr. KEEFE. As far as the four districts in which you are creating judgeships because the calendars are overcrowded are concerned, there is no question about the appointments at all. These judges are appointed for life, and they will stay there as long as they live.

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. The only situation that might arise would be one that would arise normally, if in those districts a sitting judge were to die or become incapacitated and so resign. Then, under the provisions of this bill, in those districts in which you claim the calendar is overcrowded there would be no appointment to fill that vacancy, and Congress would again have to act.

Mr. WALTER. Correct.

Mr. KEEFE. That is the information I sought, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the gentleman believe that is a good provision?

Mr. KEEFE. As far as I am concerned, I believe the objective to be a laudable one. However, I have definite doubts as to the constitutional right of Congress to place a limitation upon the appointing power vested under the Constitution in the President. Having created the office, I doubt the power of Congress to try to limit the right of the President to fill the vacancy.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. That has been the practice of the Congress on many other occasions.

Mr. KEEFE. I do not know anything about that, being just a new Member of Congress, but I do know, having given some thought to this situation, that I do not know how you could accomplish the purpose in any other way to provide the litigants with help.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: On page 2, line 1, after the comma, strike out "western district of Oklahoma."

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HANCOCK. Is not this the language that was just stricken out of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The language has been stricken out already by committee amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOUSTON: On page 1, line 11, after the comma following "New Jersey", insert "Kansas."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I am asking for one additional judgeship for Kansas. This does not mean I am asking for a new district or marshal—only one additional judgeship.

The State of Kansas has only 1 Federal judge today to serve approximately 1,882,000 people. The District of Columbia has 1 Federal judge to serve each 40,572 residents. The State of Nevada has 1 Federal judge serving only 91,055 people. The average for the United States is 1 Federal judge for each 693,644 of population, and remember that Kansas has only 1 judge for 1,882,000 people.

The Kansas population per judge is almost three times the average, and it is the largest population per judge in any State of the Union.

Delaware has 220 lawyers to each Federal judge. Kansas has 1,940. The average is 901 lawyers per judge, and Kansas has more than twice that number.

With the exception of one State, Kansas has the greatest area in square miles per judge of any State in the Union—80,000 square miles for one judge.

Under the Republican rule we had two judges, and they operated under the same provision as the one to which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] referred a moment ago. In 1926, under that provision, an additional judge was appointed because the older judge was incapacitated physically, but as he still was able to work now and then he remained on the pay roll and did not retire. In 1929 the second judge was elevated to the circuit court of appeals and a new judge appointed under that provision, and he is still serving.

The elder judge died a few years ago, and our one district judge out there has to handle an average of three cases per day for every working day in the year. I think this is too many cases for one judge to handle if he is to give them the proper time and attention, and I therefore hope that my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, there is no more use for another Federal judge in Kansas than there is for a fifth wheel on an automobile. [Laughter.] Three times the Judiciary Committee of the House by a majority vote, composed of Democrats, has declared against this judgeship. Likewise, the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously opposed it. The district judge of Kansas has declared that he will try any case or motion that is on the docket of the court in Kansas within 3 days if such trial is demanded.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that in 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938, the judicial council endorsed an additional judge for Kansas?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. They did, but they quit it when they found it was not necessary.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would the gentleman say that the judicial council was wrong?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. The point is that in spite of that fact the Judiciary Committee, believing it unnecessary, reported against it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman discount what the judicial council recommended for 4 consecutive years?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Yes; I disagree with them. We did not need a judge then and we need one less now, because the dockets are going down not only in the State courts, but also in the Federal courts. I say again that we need no Federal judge in Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that the gentleman is waiting for the Republican Party to come back into power and then they will need a Republican judge in Kansas?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. No; I shall oppose it then just the same as I am opposing it now, if it is still unnecessary, and if I am on the Judiciary Committee the gentleman will find that is true.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Does our colleague from Kansas admit that we are coming back?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Well, I do not know about that. These New Dealers are optimistic.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I regret very much that I find it necessary to take the floor in opposition to the amendment submitted by my colleague from my own State, who wants, by this legislation, to provide another Federal judge for the State of Kansas. I cannot agree with his views and am opposed to his amendment. I just don't believe he can justify his argument in favor of it.

This proposition of another Federal judge for Kansas has been before this Congress at other times. The gentleman knows that he and I appeared on opposite sides of this question before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate about 2 years ago. The Senate committee, after hearing the evidence on both sides of the question, turned it down. That committee went over the matter carefully and decided Kansas did not need an extra judge. We do not need another judge any more now than we did at that time. The gentleman talks about facts and figures. I have here a copy of a letter that was written to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas who presented this amendment. It was written by the clerk of the United States district court, and here is what he had to say in one of the paragraphs:

> The docket in this district is in good condition and indicates a reduction of business in the district. Judge Hopkins hears all cases, demurrers, and motions of every kind as soon as they are ready for hearing and disposition and counsel are able to present them. Judge Hopkins is continually urging counsel to get their cases ready for trial. He has especially crowded attorneys to prepare and try the war-risk-insurance cases.

The gentleman also called attention to the crowded dockets, but this same letter states:

> These cases pending at this time are for the most part cases filed some years back, but due to the necessity of extensive investigation by the Government since most of the plaintiffs ceased paying premiums and relied upon permanent and total disability at the time of their discharge, 18 years ago, to keep their policies in force, it has been difficult to get them ready for trial.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is another bill that has not had the approval of the Judiciary Committee of the House. I do not want to criticize the committee too much, but I have been led to believe that the Judiciary Committee of the House is one of the most important, most powerful, and most influential committees of the House of Representatives. That committee has held hearings on these extra amendments. That committee as such is not expressing its views now. We are providing for additional judges without the opinion of that committee as to whether or not they are really needed. We are entitled to the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary on these matters. I do not think this House has the right to pass any of these amendments unless they are at least heard by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and I think your good common sense will approve that sort of practice.

We should not vote, either, on these measures on party lines. The majority party has voted almost solidly for every amendment providing for additional judges in various parts of the country. We are already providing for a number in the original bill. I believe we could get along well without most of the new ones asked for in the original bill.

On this amendment asking for an additional judge in Kansas you have made no investigation. You have no evidence for the creation of this new judgeship in the State of Kansas except only a 5-minute speech by the distinguished gentleman from the Fifth District of Kansas.

Mr. Chairman, we do not need the additional judge in Kansas. The majority of our State does not want it. The present judge is taking care of the situation. He has plenty of time to hear all the cases when they are ready for hearing. For the good of our State and for the good of the taxpayers of this country you should vote this amendment down. If I really thought we needed the extra judge, I would not be here opposing this legislation.

I realize that while other Members of Congress are getting new judgeships it is somewhat tempting to ask for one in our part of the country.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it is not a fact that this same Republican clerk appointed by a Republican Federal judge 3 years ago wrote a letter to the committee that only 3 cases were pending, when the Department of Justice said there were about 1,100?

Mr. REES of Kansas. All that I can say is that I have been reading from a copy of a letter directed to the gentleman who proposed this amendment by the clerk of the United States court of that district. He has charge of the records and should know the facts. I believe that letter states the situation in pretty good shape.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the membership of the House will exert their independence, use a little backbone, and vote against this amendment. Then go further and vote against these other amendments creating more and more judgeships. You and I know very well the country can well get along without these additional judgeships. There will be no miscarriage of justice. I do not think there are very many overworked Federal judges in this country. You do not, either. I regret to say it, but this judgeship bill, in my opinion, is mostly another patronage proposition at the expense of a Treasury that shows a deficit and an additional charge against the people of this country, who cannot afford it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOUSTON) there were—ayes 69, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MASSINGALE: Page 1, line 11, after the words "New Jersey" insert "one additional judge for western district of Oklahoma."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. This same proposition has already been passed upon by the Committee of the Whole, and this judge was stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states to the gentleman from Michigan that this amendment, apparently, is in somewhat different language.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming that it is in a little different language, under the rule, as I interpret the rule, the result is what counts. The purpose of the Committee on the Judiciary in reporting the bill was to strike out the Oklahoma judgeship. That was before the Committee of the Whole voted to strike it out. The gentleman now offers the same thing in another amendment—that there be created an additional Oklahoma judgeship. Under the circumstances I submit that it is clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will look at the language and not at the result. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, since we have finished the political feature of the Kansas situation I presume it is all right to go back to a discussion of amendments that are worth while in the present bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I cannot yield at this time. Let me say this to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary. I know them all quite well and I appreciate them very much. We have this situation in regard to this particular bill—at least I look at it in that way. I have worked harmoniously with that great committee and have enjoyed it very much. Take the distinguished members of it, like my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], and the gentleman from Indiana, Judge SPRINGER. All of those gentlemen are wanting to punish me, and do you know why? I shall tell you why I am about to be punished, or that they are making an effort to punish me. They are all against me apparently. I think the reason may be found in that old story about Old Dog Tray. I went before this committee last year when this bill was under consideration and told them emphatically that I thought it better not to report out a bill creating an addiional judgeship in Oklahoma because I doubted the necessity for it, and on that recommendation that I made, those gentlemen in agreement with the others concluded that they would just scratch out Oklahoma. I told them at the same time that I was going to investigate the facts. I did investigate the facts, and I came back here this year and told them that Oklahoma needed that additional judgeship, and now these boys are going to punish me because I went in there and had the nerve to tell a bunch of my associate lawyers the truth. Sometimes it just does not do to tell the truth to a lot of lawyers, and that is where I am about to get into trouble. I told them the truth about that Oklahoma situation, and the truth is this: In Oklahoma now the case load is 174 cases greater than the number of cases per judge in the entire United States. Do you tell me that that does not argue that Oklahoma needs an additional judge? Listen to this: In addition to that, as my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] told you, Oklahoma's record for disposing of cases in the Federal court is 2,090 per year.

The next State under that, with an equal population and an equal number of Federal judges, is Tennessee, which disposed of 1,442 cases. Then we come to Virginia, which disposed of 1,345 cases. Then Louisiana. Those are the only four States in the Union having four judges and having comparable population to the State of Oklahoma.

One of these friends of mine, Judge Springer, from Indiana, complains that Oklahoma should not have any more judges, because Indiana only has two judges. That is not our fault. Indiana ought to work up some business; ought to spread out its industries or business of some sort. Do not penalize Oklahoma, because it has outstripped Indiana in court business and in the dispatch of court business.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. No; I do not have time to yield.

Now, this is the situation: Oklahoma has a population of 2,396,000. It has four judges and has disposed of 2,090 cases, and, as I said, the case load in the State is 174 cases greater than the case load all over the United States in Federal courts. [Applause.]

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I dislike to oppose my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE]. I find he is usually right. One of the troubles is that the gentleman made two conflicting statements before the subcommittee examining this question. Unfortunately for him, perhaps, the subcommittee heard him the first time. [Laughter.]

Now, seriously, I see no reason why there should be an additional judge in Oklahoma. It is true it was recommended by the Judicial Conference and, I believe, by the Attorney General. Let me remind you, however, that the responsibility is in neither of those places, but it is right here. I want to give you the facts. If you think there should be an additional judge in Oklahoma, you should vote for it. In Oklahoma they have three districts. That is unusual to start with. They have one judge in each district and one roving judge, or a total of four judges for a population of some 2,500,000 people.

Now, here is the situation as far as cases pending are concerned: The cases pending July 1, 1938, criminal and civil, were 502. Cases filed during the year, 661. Cases terminated during the year, 781. They were keeping up with their work and, in fact, they were getting ahead.

So the cases pending on June 30, 1939, were 382. Now, if you would compare the cases filed in the western district of Oklahoma of all kinds, with the cases filed in other districts of Oklahoma, I think you will conclude that there is no real reason why this judgeship should be included at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MASSINGALE) there were ayes 80 and noes 86.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MASSINGALE and Mr. GWYNNE to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided and the tellers reported there were ayes 104 and noes 89.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: Page 1, line 10, before the word "one" insert "one for the northern and southern districts of Florida."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. That has already been voted upon by the Committee and has been stricken from the bill. There is no difference whatever between that and the language of the bill, with the exception of the word "one" and the word "one" was already there in line 10. So that it does not change the amendment from the language in the bill which was stricken out, in any degree whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] desire to be heard?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, the language in the amendment is not the same as the language in the bill. The Chair will note that the language in the bill provides "who shall be a district judge." That is not in the amendment that was just offered. That was in the committee amendment which was acted on when the bill was first taken up.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DUNCAN). The Chair believes that while there is some similarity, there is sufficient difference to justify submission of the amendment.

The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I could not conceive of a worse situation existing anywhere in the United States than that which appears in Florida today. There are three judges in Florida, all of whom are critically ill. One man had a heart attack just about a month ago. Another one is suffering from diabetes and it is a serious question if he will ever serve again. The people in that State are in the position today that they cannot get a judge to sign an injunction.

At the time the committee took up the bill, as a matter of fact an additional judge was provided in the Senate bill—we felt that it would be possible to carry on without this additional judge.

Since the committee acted the above-described situation has arisen. Certainly the membership of this House does not want to deprive the great State of Florida of the services of at least one judge.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the cold figures would convince anyone that there is no justification for giving an additional judgeship to Florida. The only reason the problem is here before us is because, unfortunately, some of the judges are now physically incapacitated. I believe, however, this is something that need not be called to the attention of Congress. We have in the law at the present time a provision which allows the President, under such circumstances, to appoint a judge to take care of this emergency. His means of knowledge are at least equal to ours and he has taken no action in the matter. Furthermore, let me remind you that in such cases the law allows the assignment of a judge from another district to take care of the situation temporarily. There is no showing here that that had been done in this case. I think the people of Florida should first utilize these other remedies they have been given before they apply for an additional judge, the need for which cannot be justified under the record.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the Members for just a moment, because I believe the situation is misunderstood. There is a very amusing and ironic situation existing today, anyway, particularly in regard to this Florida judgeship. I have heard a good many Members on the Republican side of the House say that it was purely politics that we bring in this bill providing certain judgeships.

In regard to the Florida judgeship let me say that we all remember the Hatch Act which is cleaning up politics to a great extent. The gentleman who passed that act through the Senate and passed it through the House, with the help of these gentlemen on my left, also reported a bill providing an additional judgeship for the State of Florida, and I am sure the Republican Members would not accuse him of politics.

I think the best way to answer the opposition to this amendment is to quote what your own Republican judge in the State of Florida has said concerning politics. What I am about to read is from a letter written by the Honorable Alexander Ackerman when he was judge. This letter was written to the chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee of the Senate, the gentleman to whom I have just referred. In his letter to this Senator, Judge Ackerman said:

> I beg to assure you that in making the foregoing statements I am in no way influenced by political or personal concern. Prior to my appointment as judge I was rather active in Republican politics and was appointed as a Republican. Of course, I have endeavored in every way possible since my judicial appointment to avoid any participation in politics other than to exercise a citizen's right to vote, but as the appointee to this additional position could only be expected to be a Democrat, such appointment would in no way be pleasing to me politically, and as to a personal consideration, I will be eligible for retirement in about 20 months, and I expect to retire as soon as possible. Therefore, the additional judgeship would not be of any great personal relief to me, but as one who as senior district judge has been responsible for the dispatch of business in the district, I would rejoice to see it made possible for the dockets in this district to be made current and avoid the general criticism of the law's delay.

That came from Judge Alexander Ackerman. I will not at this time read further from the judge's letter but will just say, as Judge Ackerman pointed out, that we have a peculiar problem in Florida. People come there to live just for the winter. This gives rise to cases involving automobile accidents, and because people are from outside of the State and there is diversity of citizenship the cases must be tried in the Federal court. We have the sponge industry. These people use boats. We have our ports and our harbors. This gives rise to admiralty cases which must be tried in the district courts. All our fruits and produce is shipped into and out of the State in the stream of interstate commerce; we have insurance companies operating in the State but incorporated in other States; we have railroads operating within the State but incorporated elsewhere; and we have many other situations which give rise to cases which must be taken to the Federal court instead of the courts of the State of Florida. If we could do away with the problem of diversity of citizenship, if our State courts could handle a lot of these cases the situation would be different; but they have not been able to solve this problem. Now let me say something about the disability of our judges in Florida.

One Member of the House said that if we would appoint better judges we would clear our dockets. Let me say that I do not believe better judges have been appointed anywhere in this country than the present judges in Florida. These men have worked hard. Because, as I say, of cases arising out of diversity of citizenship the Federal judges of our State have been overworked in the past 2 years. Every judge now sitting except the one just recently appointed, Judge Barker, has had serious illness. Because of this fact and because of the further fact that we have so many cases there our dockets are crowded. Let me read a brief table showing something of the cases now pending in the State of Florida as compared with other States.

These figures are for 1937. Alabama had pending 197 cases, Georgia 312, Florida 771, Mississippi 238, and Louisiana 539.

I would like to say that we deserve a judge in Florida and we actually need him. I hope the Members will vote for an additional judge in the State of Florida.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call to the attention of the Committee a very strange situation. This bill, no doubt, was prepared by the subcommittee and reported to the full committee for final action, and when the bill was first introduced it provided for a judge for Florida. Then the Judiciary Committee apparently changed its mind and struck the Florida provision out of the bill. They did this after the bill was printed. You will see that it has been stricken out, but it was necessary for the chairman of the committee here this afternoon to ask you to vote an amendment taking it out. You adopted that amendment, and now that same chairman is asking you to reinsert that matter into the bill and pass it. The same gentleman comes forward and asks you to do the exact opposite from what he asked you to do an hour ago. This is a very strange situation, and it justifies what I said previously this afternoon—that this bill has not been prepared properly, and it is not a credit to this fine, important Committee on the Judiciary. They can do better than this, and they should have another chance.

The Judiciary Committee probably know more about this than I do, but in justice to those of us who are not on the committee, and in justice to those of us who want to vote intelligently and conscientiously, this bill should be sent back to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee should report a proper bill.

In considering amendments you have been asked to adopt an amendment to provide an additional judge for Kansas, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] made an effort to get another judge for his State and cited the recommendation of the judicial conference in support of his contention; but you refused to give Mr. HOUSTON's State of Kansas another judge.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] is a strong supporter of the New Deal, but you deny him; and the distinguished New Deal gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] asked for another judge. He made a tearful plea, but you turned your back upon him. But it is different with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], who is a member of the Judiciary Committee. You give him another judge when his State has not nearly as many people as Indiana, but has twice as many judges. When you get through with this bill you will be ashamed of it. You who are the chief proponents of this measure have admitted by your vacillation that you have no set convictions about this matter. Since this is true, why not send the bill back to the committee and let that committee bring in a bill in line with right and justice? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HENDRICKS) there were—ayes 79, noes 94.

Mr. HENDRICKS and Mr. PETERSON of Florida demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WALTER and Mr. HANCOCK to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported there were—ayes 89, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Page 1, line 11, after the comma, and following the words "New Jersey", insert "district of the Virgin Islands."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment in order to speak for 5 minutes on the pending bill. While I was in Congress for 10 years prior to being washed out by the New Deal tidal wave of 1932 many new judgeships were created under a Republican administration. The statistics indicated that these judgeships had to be created on account of congestion in the calendars of the various districts, particularly on account of the then existing Prohibition Act, with its wave of prohibition tyranny. Now we find Federal prohibition with reference to beer, wine, and whisky gone with the wind, and instead of reducing the number of judges, as we promised during the repeal fight, the number of judges has steadily increased since the repeal of prohibition.

At first blush I thought I would oppose this bill, which provides for additional Federal judges. I find, however, upon careful examination, that prohibition tyranny with reference to beer, wine, and whisky has gone with the wind; but we now have a New Deal prohibition tyranny under which the New Deal attempts to regulate or prohibit almost everything done or used by man from the cradle to the grave under a system of espionage and persecution which almost parallels a combination of the German Gestapo and the Russian Ogpu.

In Kenosha, Wis., the New Deal "Ogpu" recently arrested and tried to throw into the Federal penitentiary a poor, hard-working tailor, claiming that he had failed to answer some of their inquisitorial questions with reference to the housing census. In view of the fact that the calendars are loaded in the many judicial districts, and since we can expect until after the 1940 election at least many more cases such as that of this Wisconsin tailor, I shall support this bill in order that the people of America will not have to wait to have their day in court, when they are persecuted and prosecuted by the chosen tribe of New Deal Karl Marx disciples.

Some of our economy peddlers on the Republican side have been threatening us with a roll call because they oppose this bill in the name of economy. I do not intend to be clubbed into line by any economy peddlers on my side of the aisle who in the name of economy want to oppose the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars to expedite the trial of the great rank and file of our people who are persecuted and prosecuted by our New Deal brethren, particularly since some of these economy peddlers stood up without blushing and voted $100,000,000 so that the Export-Import Bank could play Santa Claus in a big way to foreign countries and people in foreign lands.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the gentleman's amendment to create a judgeship in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I believe they ought to have one. I know the New Deal is going out in 1940 as sure as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west. I am not fearful that this bill will provide jobs on the Federal bench for "lame ducks" because "lame duck" Members of Congress will not be able to qualify for those jobs. Furthermore, I believe that after the New Deal goes out with the wind in November and New Deal Federal bureaucratic tyranny is ended we will be able to reduce the number of judgeships we already have. I offer this amendment to create a judgeship in the Virgin Islands so that you can find a good "lame duck" berth for an expert on the Virgin Islands, Prof. Rex Tugwell, so that when the New Deal goes out in 1940 he can go back to the Virgin Islands and dispense his pure conceptions of Karl Marx socialism.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEAN: On page 1, line 11, after "California", strike out "district of New Jersey."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order, because it strikes out a provision that was voted on by the Committee.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this provision has not been voted on at all by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. This provision is part of the original bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the chairman of the subcommittee who criticized my statement that these district judgeships cost $20,000 apiece, that I got my information as to that from the Director of the Administration Office of the United States Courts, who stated that that estimate was moderate.

As far as this judgeship is concerned, it is not needed. It was conceived in politics merely to satisfy the patronage desires of two political leaders who could not agree on a candidate for one vacancy. For 18 months the district court litigation was taken care of by three judges, and during that time they gained on the calendar. Now the politicians say they need five judges. Before their judgment was influenced by the fact that they had 33 percent more work, due to the fact that there were only three judges, the sitting district judges unanimously opposed the creation of this extra judgeship. There are now fewer cases pending than there were when they took this action. The circuit judge whose promotion caused the vacancy says this judgeship is not needed. The New Jersey Bar Association in its testimony before the Senate committee stated it was not needed. The leading independent newspaper of the State says it is not needed. I feel that this amendment should be approved.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I notice that the recommendation of the conference of circuit judges states that there is an increase in the number of cases, and they cite 900 civil actions and 439 criminal proceedings, whereas the year before there were 768 civil actions and 336 criminal proceedings.

Mr. KEAN. To which years is the gentleman referring?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am referring to 1937 and 1938, and these are the figures that are recorded in the report of the judicial conference.

Mr. KEAN. That is correct. The number of cases increased from 1937 to 1938, but there was a large decrease from 1936 to 1937, and there was also a decrease from 1938 to 1939.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend who has just addressed the Committee has, of course, produced nothing with respect to the motion he has just made that was not contained in the prepared address that he delivered when the rule was under consideration. The gentleman has been very careful to cite the statements of several more or less eminent members of the bar, one of whom at least does not live in the jurisdiction affected by this particular section of the bill. However, the Committee will recall that much has been said here today about the recommendations of the judicial council having included a judgeship for New Jersey in 1938 and again in 1939; likewise, the Attorney General of the United States has recommended the inclusion of an additional judgeship in New Jersey in this bill. The subcommittee reported this judgeship to the Judiciary Committee and the Judiciary Committee has announced that it has reported it to the House unanimously.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another question was asked by my very distinguished colleague and good friend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS] as to whether or not there were any recommendations besides those which I have mentioned in behalf of the inclusion of an additional judgeship for the district of New Jersey. I wish to state that I have in my possession two letters, one dated March 1939 and another dated in January of 1940, the first of them signed by the then three remaining Republican sitting judges in the district of New Jersey, all of whom were in favor of the creation of this additional judgeship. The letter of January 1940 is signed by the presiding officer of that court, the Honorable Judge Fake, a Republican, an eminent jurist, and in that letter he reiterates his support of the proposal to include this additional judgeship.

Nobody brought politics into this discussion prior to the statement of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey, who is in opposition to this provision in this bill, but he essayed to describe to the House some sort of fantastic or fictitious agreement or arrangement supposed to have existed, and still to exist, between two political figures on the Democratic side in the State of New Jersey. Of course, that is just a familiar red herring being drawn across the trail. As a matter of fact, his opposition to this bill stems from nothing other than a political desire to permit this vacancy to go over in the hope—vain, as I am sure it is—that with an incoming Republican administration, for which they are all praying on that side, this vacancy may then be provided for and an appointment made by a Republican President.

For 20 years, Mr. Chairman, we had four, or, rather, let us say, three, Republicans sitting in the district of New Jersey, and besides those we had Judge Clark. I do not know what Judge Clark's politics were or are. I know that he is not a Democrat. I should hesitate to assume the responsibility of charging that he is a Republican. [Laughter.] I do know that he gave hope to the Democrats' hearts in New Jersey on one or two occasions by declaring that he contemplated being the Republican candidate for Governor; but, alas, he violated his promise and our hopes fled through the night. [Laughter.] He is the source of the opposition to this bill. He has stated, and he has been quoted by the chairman of the subcommittee as having stated, that he does not want this judgeship created because he does not want Franklin D. Roosevelt to have the power of appointment, and that, Mr. Chairman, from the beneficiary of the present President of the United States, who elevated him—and some of us in New Jersey are glad he did so—from the district court to the Court of Appeals. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. COOPER) having assumed the chair, Mr. DUNCAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, pursuant to House Resolution 424, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Massingale amendment establishing a new judgeship in the State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Walter amendment, providing a new judgeship in Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the words "New Jersey" insert "one additional judge for western district of Oklahoma."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK) there were—ayes 89, noes 82.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 192, nays 145, not voting 93, as follows:

GREAT BRITAIN'S DEBT TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, on March 4 I introduced House Resolution 482, looking toward the acquisition of certain British islands, negotiations to be entered into by this country with Great Britain, as partial payment of the war debt which that country owes the United States. A similar resolution was introduced in the other body by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. I am sure I speak for him also when I say we have received splendid support from many sections of the country as evidenced by the editorials and the correspondence which has come to our attention.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include as a part of my remarks at this point three letters supporting this resolution which I believe are typical of the hundreds of communications which both Senator REYNOLDS and myself have received. I trust that the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and Senate will give prompt consideration to what we believe is a worthy proposal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to follow:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 6, 1940.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I would like to see a copy of your bill with reference to the acquisition of Caribbean possessions of the British and French.

When one visualizes a string of islands, partially submerged reefs and banks, with comparatively few navigable passages, stretching from within a short distance of our Florida coast for a distance of some 1,600 miles to Trinidad, off the coast of Venezuela, one has a picture of what might be developed into a most effective barricade against any navigation from the Atlantic into the Caribbean, or from our eastern seaboard into the Gulf of Mexico.

These islands, the Bahamas and the Lesser Antilles, are now in possession of friendly foreign powers, but it is not difficult to imagine developments in Europe resulting in their ownership passing to unfriendly powers. A few strategically located naval and airplane bases would afford a control of navigation to and from the Atlantic that would minimize materially the value of the Panama Canal to the United States and to other American nations not on friendly terms with the new owners.

Knowing the Caribbean, it has long been my conviction that, when opportune, something should be done about this matter, and it appears that you have seen an opportunity in the war-debt situation that might be utilized to this end. I hope so.

Very truly yours,

M. D. CARREL.

NICHOLAS VOLK & CO., INC.,
New York, March 6, 1940.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The resolution to be introduced asking President Roosevelt to negotiate with Great Britain for acquisition of certain Western Hemisphere islands in payment of the war debts is an excellent idea; in fact, it is the very best proposition that we could submit to Great Britain at the present time, and if Great Britain refuses they certainly never intend to honor this debt.

I have spoken with a number of my friends about your resolution and we are all agreed that this is a fair and reasonable proposition to submit to Great Britain, and we hope that your resolution will be approved.

We shall be eagerly waiting to learn the outcome of your efforts and hope that you will be successful, as this certainly is a step in the right direction.

Sincerely yours,

NICHOLAS VOLK.

EAST LYNN, MASS., March 9, 1940.

Representative RANDOLPH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RANDOLPH: In a recent newspaper, I read of your proposed resolution, authorizing the President to negotiate for the acquisition of British islands off the coast of North and South America.

I think that this is the first time that a resolution like this has been asked for in either House of Congress, and I certainly congratulate you on your thought, but think that you should go a step further, if possible, and ask for a law to take them over.

If I owe anyone money on a note, they can sue me for recovery; if I own a piece of land which holds a mortgage and do not pay the interest or the mortgage, the mortgagee can foreclose and take it away from me; if I do not pay taxes on that property, the city can take it away from me.

In this instance, we have loaned Britain, as well as other countries money, and they simply throw up their hands and say, "What are you going to do about it?"

Taking the islands certainly is a logical conclusion to this matter.

Cordially yours,

E. W. WILLIAMS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ALEXANDER, until March 22, on account of official business.

To Mr. DARDEN, for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. MAGNUSON, for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. BOEHNE, for 2 weeks, on account of important business.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I want to wish everybody in the whole world a happy St. Patrick's Day.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House, under its order heretofore adopted, adjourned until Monday, March 18, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MARCH 15, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord, God Almighty, who art of infinite perfection and who amidst the treacherous sands of time standest firm, our Rock of Ages: We turn to Thee from our perplexities and imperfections like men who turn from dusty toil to cleansing streams, for in life's desert places Thou art a spring whose waters never fail. As we pause in silence, let this place be made a holy shrine, a veritable chamber of reflection. We need a peace far deeper than the world can give, for there haunt us at this hour memories of duties unperformed, deeds of kindness left undone, words untrue, acts unworthy, thoughts impure, the stain of which is on us all. Hear us now, O blessed Christ, and as Thou hearest, forgive; appear to our waiting eyes; welcome us with outstretched arms; nor let us go until the sense of unfading light, of spotless purity, of long-suffering love steals upon us, making it possible for us to share in Thy redemptive work. We ask it in Thy holy name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, March 14, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. SHEPPARD, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, presented an announcement, which was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
March 15, 1940.

To the Senate:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the act approved May 17, 1928, I hereby appoint the following members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee to the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress: Senator MINTON, Senator SLATTERY, Senator CHANDLER, Senator GURNEY, Senator THOMAS of Idaho.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Bourse, protesting against the enactment of legislation which might bring further reduction in the amount of unrefined cane sugar entering the port of Philadelphia, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from John D. Harris and Bertha Harris, of Victoria, Tex., relative to their property and certain difficulties with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Polish Relief Committee of St. Hedwiges Parish and Polish societies, all of Manchester, N. H., praying for the enactment of the so-called Dingle bill, to authorize the appropriation of $20,000,000 for the relief of destitution among the civilian population of the subjugated Republic of Poland and the refugees in exile therefrom in other countries, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Chinese University Club of Hawaii, Honolulu, T. H. (whose membership is composed of American citizens), praying for the enactment of the so-called Pittman resolution empowering the President to place an embargo on the shipment of war supplies to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE—AMENDMENT

Mr. DOWNEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3255) to provide for national recovery by raising revenue and retiring citizens past 60 years of age from gainful employment and provide for the general welfare of all the people of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HOLMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 126, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

"For the construction, improvement, maintenance, and operation of a diversion dam and related works on the Sandy River, Oreg., for the conservation of fish in the Columbia River Basin, as authorized by the act of May 11, 1938, $30,000."

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA—PROPOSED LOAN TO FINLAND

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution (S. Res. 246) was read, as follows:

Whereas President Roosevelt has declared that ending of the Russian-Finnish conflict "does not yet clarify the inherent right of small nations to the maintenance of their integrity against attack by superior force"; and

Whereas the United States respects Finland for its heroic stand against overwhelming odds, and declares its condemnation of wanton aggression; and

Whereas the United States views with disfavor the diplomatic exchange by which the Republic of Finland has been forced to yield a substantial portion of its territory to the Soviet Union; and

Whereas the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in the opinion of the Department of State, has failed to abide by the Litvinoff agreements of 1933: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President of the United States should recall the United States Ambassador to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and suspend further diplomatic relations with that country.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho obtained the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator to yield so that I may introduce a bill; and I should like the privilege of having the bill read, because it relates to the subject matter to which the Senator has alluded, and I should like briefly to comment on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield for that purpose?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and read.

The bill (S. 3591) to provide for broadening the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Comittee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the Act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is further amended by adding the following: "Provided further, That in the case of loans to the Republic of Finland which has recently concluded a peace treaty, said bank may make a direct cash loan, unrestricted as to use, of any amount within the limitations as to amount heretofore fixed by the act of March 2, 1940."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to say briefly, particularly for the attention of the Senator from Idaho—because he is about to discuss this subject—that the purpose of this bill is to amend the recently enacted law so that loans may be made by the Export-Import Bank to Finland for any purpose. By that I mean particularly that Finland may obtain a loan in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000, part of which, of course, has already been used, for the purpose of rehabilitating her country, without being required to purchase the materials and commodities in the United States, as she is required to do under the provisions of the present law.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I desire to make a few very brief comments on the resolution I have submitted this morning.

If it is adopted, the effect, of course, will be to advise the President of the United States that it is the sense of this body that diplomatic relations with Russia should be severed. I realize that that is a very serious and important step. I offer the resolution, I hope, without bitterness; but it is my considered judgment that it is not only in the interest of the United States but in the ultimate interest of the entire world that we have no further traffic at this time with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Earlier this year the able and distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] submitted a resolution asking the President of the United States to report to the Senate whether or not the Litvinov agreements of 1933 had been broken by Russia. The Senator from Michigan took the position that the agreements had been violated in the most flagrant manner. Last month the Secretary of State, Mr.

Hull, reported to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee that, in his opinion, the Litvinov agreements had been violated; and the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee had that letter inserted in the RECORD.

In 1933 there was much misgiving about recognizing Russia at all. Indeed, the President had so much fear of doing so that before he would undertake to give recognition to that country he demanded assurances in writing. These assurances in writing were known as the Litvinov agreements, or Litvinov letters, and, among other things, Russia undertook in these agreements to maintain a policy of nonintervention in any internal affairs of the United States. As the senior Senator from Michigan has so well pointed out, those agreements have been flagrantly, openly, and, I might say, almost admittedly violated. Hence the very foundation upon which rested the United States recognition of Russia has now crumbled away; and I think we, as a government, owe it to our citizens, now that Russia has cynically violated its part of the bargain, to withdraw that recognition, which probably never should have been given in the beginning.

Add to that the distressing event of which we read in the press a few days ago: Finland has concluded peace—a tragic peace—a peace that once more destroys every vestige of international honor that may have been left in Europe. Finland chose peace rather than to commit suicide, as Poland had done before her. She chose peace rather than depend upon help that never would have come. She chose peace rather than go further as a bloody pawn upon the chessboard of European power politics. I am glad that she chose it because she has at least achieved a temporary respite. She has at least saved thousands and perhaps millions of her people from useless slaughter. She has at least preserved a semblance of her independence, and she has once more taught the world that the farther removed we can keep from the power politics and the duplicitous treachery of Europe, the better off we shall be.

I am glad she did not carry her trust to the bitter end, as did Poland. But she was made the victim of a wanton aggressor—the victim of a man whose only claim to distinction is the same as the claim which Nero has to distinction. That is why I think our voice should be raised at least in condemnation of this terrible thing which has happened in Europe. I think that the farther we can remove ourselves from Europe the better, and I think that the place to start now is Soviet Russia. I think we should face the issue.

Of course, I realize that the control of the foreign policy of this country is in the hands of the President of the United States, but I also realize that the Senate has the right—and I even think the duty—to express to the President its sense as to what should be done in connection with this foreign policy.

I respectfully urge, therefore, that the Committee on Foreign Relations give this resolution due consideration, that it request an opinion on it from the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, and that it report it to the Senate for action in order that one voice may be raised, amidst, all the international chaos and anarchy, as evidence that civilization still remains.

FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION LOANS IN NEW YORK STATE

AMERICA'S ATTITUDE TOWARD EUROPE—ARTICLE BY J. R. BURROW

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ROLAND HANSON, A MINOR, AND DR. E. A. JULIEN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien.

Mr. WILEY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. WILEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORT OF THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of section 10 (b) (4) of the Railroad Retirement Act, approved June 24, 1937, and of section 12 (1) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the Railroad Retirement Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, together with supplementary information covering the period July 1 to September 30, 1939.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1940.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after "(1)", it is proposed to insert the words "any officer or"; on page 1, line 7, to strike out the word "administrative"; on page 2, line 4, after "(2)", to insert the words "any officer"; and on page 2, line 5, to strike out the word "administrative."

Mr. MINTON obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is not an amendment to the pending committee amendment, is it? It is an amendment to the text of the bill, it seems to me. So that probably under the order heretofore entered, for the consideration of committee amendments first, I doubt whether the amendment is in order at this time. Of course, I do not desire to cut off the Senator from offering the amendment, but it is an amendment to the text of the bill, not to the pending committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana withhold the amendment temporarily?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. I have an amendment which I have sent to the clerk's desk, to which I ask the particular attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add a new subsection to section 12, to read as follows:

(e) The provisions of the first two sentences of section 12 (a) shall not apply to employees in an activity of a State or of a local agency not financed as to such particular activity in whole or in part by Federal loans or grants.

Mr. BROWN. I have sent a copy of the amendment to the Senator from Georgia, who is the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, at the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico. After the Senator from Georgia has read the proposed amendment, I should like to have his attention.

I may say that the amendment refers to the provision in section 12 which prohibits political activity on the part of State employees. In various exchanges I have had with the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from New Mexico, he has indicated to me that he is perfectly willing to make certain that the prohibition should not apply to activities of a State department which are not financed in any way by Federal funds. For example, the office of the secretary of state of the State of Michigan, through a division in his office headed by an executive, and having a number of employees, handles old-age pensions. They are financed in part, of course, by funds from the Federal Government. The Senator from New Mexico has assured me that the employees of the secretary of state whose duties are in connection with matters wholly disconnected from old-age pensions, having nothing to do with old-age pensions, but involving the chartering of corporations, and so on, might possibly be construed to be within the terms of the pending bill, within its prohibitions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have been listening to the Senator and reading the amendment, and, as I understand, it merely states negatively what is already in the bill. I think the amendment is not needed, because the activities which the Senator proposes to take out are not included in the bill.

Mr. BROWN. During the course of the debate the Senator stated, upon inquiry to apply the matter to a highway department, that all of the employees of a State highway department would be subject to the provisions of the bill. He later stated, upon inquiry from me, that he did not think the provisions would apply to employees of a highway department who were engaged in maintenance work, which is not financed in any way by the Federal Government, whereas the construction of highways is financed by the Federal Government.

I contend that the employees of the maintenance department should not in any way be included within the provisions of the bill. Yet there is not a newspaper article I have seen upon the subject which has not stated that all State highway employees are covered by the measure. Therefore I thought that my amendment would quite clearly distinguish those activities which were financed by Federal funds from those which were not financed by Federal funds.

Several references have been made to teachers in various schools. In a university a department of agriculture might be financed in part by Federal funds; but should we attempt by Federal law to control the faculty of the law department in the same university in which agricultural activities are covered? I do not think we should. Therefore I seek to make a distinction, and I fully believe, I will say to the Senator from New Mexico, that unless we insert a provision of this kind there will be serious danger that the general public will feel that the persons to whom I refer are covered by the bill, because of the newspaper publicity concerning this matter, and because of remarks in which Senators on my side of this controversy have asserted that persons are covered by the bill who, in my judgment, are not covered under the most liberal construction of it. Therefore I believe we ought to make plain that the prohibition applies to particular activities financed by Federal funds and not to all activities within a particular department.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for what is possibly an impertinent question?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator referred to the faculty of a law school.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the Senator feel that, if we are to carry out the policy now advocated, we should stop some of the unsound teaching at the law schools and require sound doctrines to be taught or not give them any Federal money?

Mr. BROWN. I would not construe that as an impertinent inquiry, as the Senator indicated it was; but I do not think it has much to do with the particular question before us.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I believe there are a great many employees who are not covered by the bill as it is drawn, and whom I should like to cover, but on account of the limitations of power the bill itself is confined to officers or employees exercising functions in connection with an activity financed in whole or in part by the Federal Government. I think what it means is perfectly clear, and the Senator in his amendment in merely expressing a negative.

Mr. BROWN. I am afraid the Senator does not understand the import of the amendment, because I would write into the law a limitation, which I believe is necessary, particularly in view of remarks which have been made during the debate on the floor of the Senate. The amendment would merely provide that—

The provisions of the first two sentences of section 12 (a) shall not apply to employees in an activity of a State or of a local agency not financed as to such particular activity in whole or in part by Federal loans or grants.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico——

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has done so all through the debate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico that the amendment of the Senator from Michigan is not necessary; but I see no particular objection to it. For instance, in my State, under the food and drug commissioner, who is one of the ablest, most efficient, and most high-minded officials in any State, there are certain activities which are largely financed by the Federal Government to the extent of three or four times as much as the State contributes.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On the other hand——

Mr. BROWN. Let me interrupt the Senator right there. If 25 percent, or even 10 percent, of the funds which are necessary to run that department came from the Federal Government, then clearly the employees should come under the proposed law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was about to say that, on the other hand, the same department has under its jurisdiction a department having to do with the inspection of cosmetologists, to which, as I understand, the Federal Government contributes nothing. The whole food and drug office at the present time is absolutely subject, so far as appointments are concerned, to the Governor, who may prescribe directly or indirectly such political activities as he pleases on the part of employees. The Governor even undertook recently to appoint as the head of that department of the State a woman who was not even qualified under the State law to be a cosmetologist at all.

This amendment would not interfere in any way with any Governor's control of that activity paid for wholly by the State, but it would prevent people receiving all or part of their support from Federal funds engaging in pernicious political activities. I think that is the proposed law as it is at present drawn, and as it has been considered during the past 2 weeks; but I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico accept the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. I cannot accept the amendment. I have no authority to do so. I would rather have it acted upon by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have another amendment along the same general line, which I now offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent:

1. The free expression of opinions on any and all subjects except the making of political speeches in a political campaign.

2. Making voluntary contributions to a campaign committee and to political organizations within the limits fixed by law, provided that this exception shall not apply to persons designated in section 5 of said act of August 2, 1939.

3. Any lawful political activity in an election at which there are no candidates on party tickets representing a party which polled over 100,000 votes in the last preceding national election; nor lawful political activity respecting any issue not particularly identified with any National or State political party, such as revision of the Constitution of the United States or of a State; referendums; approval or disapproval of city or municipal statutes or ordinances, and other issues of similar character.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is this an amendment to the pending committee amendment, or is it a new section to the bill?

Mr. BROWN. It is a new section.

Mr. BARKLEY. To the bill?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not in order now unless it is an amendment to the pending committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest we pass that over until we finish with the committee amendments, which will give us time to read the Senator's amendment and have an understanding of what it means.

Mr. BROWN. I am perfectly willing to have it passed over for the present, but would the Senator from Kentucky object if I made a very brief explanation of it?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; but I wish to say that from a parliamentary standpoint nothing is in order except an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico, because I believe this is an amendment which ought to be adopted, or possibly somewhat modified and adopted.

The amendment arises out of my desire to attempt to define, if I possibly can, what is political activity. I drew a long amendment upon that subject, and I became dissatisfied with it. Like the Senator from New Mexico, I find it most difficult to define "political activity," but I thought we could lay some three or four limitations upon the power of the Civil Service Commission, and with the exception of the last one, the limitations I suggest are identical in substance with the limitations the Senator from New Mexico has approved in his various statements on the floor of the Senate.

I say, first, that the free expression of opinion on any and all subjects, except the making of political speeches in a political campaign, may not be restricted by the Civil Service Commission.

Then my amendment provides that the act shall not be so construed as to prevent the making of voluntary contributions to a campaign committee and to political organizations within the limits fixed by law, provided that this exception shall not apply to persons designated in section 5 of said act of August 2, 1939. That is the section which prohibits voluntary or involuntary contributions on the part of the employees of the W. P. A.

It is difficult for me to see why or how those in charge of the bill can object to either of those provisions, or to having them written into law, because they have repeatedly said on the floor of the Senate that these things may be done under the present rules of the Civil Service Commission. I am unwilling to authorize the Civil Service Commission to make rules of any character which would contravene the right of free speech and which would prevent the making of voluntary contributions. I am not sure that they would make any change, but I think we ought to state what we want done in that respect.

The third provision of the amendment is a limitation which would prevent the Civil Service Commission from interfering with any lawful political activity in a campaign or an election in which there are no candidates on party tickets representing a party which polled over 100,000 votes in the last preceding national election. For instance, in a great many communities in Michigan we have the citizens' ticket and the peoples' ticket—I think that is true in many other States of the Union—and there is absolutely no connection between the Democratic Party and the Citizens' Party or the Republican Party and the Peoples' Party. They relate entirely to local issues, and I do not believe we ought to interfere with the right of any citizen to participate in an election involving a local issue.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], in an aside, has asked a question to which I should like to advert. In the last general election the 4 parties—the Democratic, Republican, Socialist, and Third Party—I think it was called the Third Party—each polled greatly in excess of 100,000 votes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I was getting at was whether the Senator had not excepted the Communists from the operations of the legislation. I do not know how many votes they polled, but I do not think they polled in excess of 100,000 votes in the last election.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know of any Communists, in the State of Michigan, at least, who are on the public pay roll, but I should be delighted to do anything necessary to cover the particular situation referred to by the Senator from Missouri. He understands what I am getting at—local parties that have no connection with national affairs.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I want to ask the Senator from Michigan whether his amendment would protect nonpartisan activities. In many of the States judges are elected on nonpartisan tickets.

Mr. BROWN. It would protect such activity. Nor shall the Civil Service Commission make any rules prohibiting political activity—I want the Senator to understand this—

Respecting any issue—

Not person, but issue—

not particularly identified with any National or State political party, such as revision of the Constitution of the United States—

For example, when the prohibition amendment was repealed the State of Michigan had a State-wide election in which were elected to a constitutional convention 100 delegates, who decided for the State of Michigan whether we would or would not approve the adoption of the amendment which abrogated the prohibition amendment to the Contitution—

Such as revision of the Constitution of the United States or of a State; referendums; approval or disapproval of city or municipal statutes or ordinances and other issues of similar character.

Mr. HUGHES. How about the recall?

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that I included "recall" in the first draft of this amendment, but I struck it out later, because oftentimes recall could become a partisan political issue if there were an attempt to recall a Democratic official largely upon the petition of Republican registered voters, as has been the case in my State in some instances. Therefore I left out the matter of recall.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me his amendment may be open to the same objection that he and others have made against some of the other provisions of the bill introduced by the Senator from New Mexico, in the matter of vagueness of terms, and that is the question of what is a partisan issue. For instance, when the famous court-packing bill was before the Senate it was contended on the part of many of us who were opposed to the court-packing bill that that was in no sense a partisan issue; that it was a fundamental issue that had nothing to do with partisan politics. On the other hand, it was contended very stoutly by the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, by several other Cabinet officers, and by some Senators and numerous other Federal appointees, that it was a partisan issue and that all Democrats were bound to be for it whether or not it was repugnant to all their convictions.

Therefore, it seems to me, the Senator's amendment is rather indeterminate. Who is to decide whether an issue is partisan or not? In the instance I have just cited I and many others very stoutly denied it was a partisan issue, and several members of the President's Cabinet and a number of Senators very stoutly maintained that it was a partisan issue in which Democrats were bound.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly the character and make-up of the opposition to that bill demonstrated that it was not a partisan issue, no matter if the chairman of the national committee did say it was.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is true; but I do not think that district attorneys, or collectors of internal revenue, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to use a specific example, and men prominently connected with the Relief Administration, with the W. P. A., or with the Youth Administration, had any right to go out making speeches over the radio in connection with that sort of issue pending before Congress, and it seems to me that they would be permitted to do it under the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BROWN. That is where my idea and that of the Senator from Missouri meet head on. I think that upon any issue affecting the American people which is not tied up in the partisan politics of the Democratic, Republican, Socialist, or Communist Parties, there ought to be the widest and greatest freedom of speech and freedom of effort on the part of everyone concerned to do what he thinks he wants to do with respect to such an issue.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the Senator permit me again to interrupt him? And then I do not intend to interrupt him further.

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr, CLARK of Missouri. I agree thoroughly, and am willing to go as far as the Senator from Michigan, or anyone else is willing to go, to the farthest limits I can think of, in behalf of free speech. I cited an instance a moment ago when the Director of the W. P. A. suddenly appeared on the radio one night to deliver a flaming oration about the court-packing bill, a subject about which he knew nothing. The next night the Director of the P. W. A. appeared on the radio to deliver a flaming harangue in behalf of the court-packing bill, a subject which had nothing on the face of the earth to do with his department. The next night the Director of the C. C. C., who knew nothing whatever about the court-packing bill, appeared on the radio to deliver a flaming harangue in behalf of it. Reasonable men would conclude that that was not an ordinary free expression of opinion, but that, because they were the heads of the great disbursing agencies of the Government they were using that means to notify their subordinates, who held office at their pleasure, what they wished done about that question.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator that subdivision 3 of my limiting amendment would not apply to the situation to which he refers, because the court issue was not involved in a political campaign at an election. I am referring solely to campaigns at an election, in which there are no candidates on party tickets representing the party. So I do not think it would apply.

Furthermore, I have heretofore said on the floor of the Senate that I do not object in the slightest degree to the Governor of my State, the President of the United States, or any other Government official calling me up and giving me his arguments as to how I should vote on a certain question. I could detail the names of many prominent citizens in the United States holding high official positions, not only in the State, but in the Nation, who urged upon me their views on the court issue. I thought they had a right to express them. I did not agree with any of them. I still persisted in my opposition to the court bill; but I think they had a right to talk to me about it, and I do not want to restrict them in that respect.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say to the Senator that I appreciate what he is trying to do by the amendment, and I really think that very likely under the law none of these things is prohibited. However, I must object to the amendment for several reasons, some of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has mentioned. I am wondering if perhaps the Senator is not restricting the bill. He is restricting it by announcing and writing into the bill certain exceptions. There is a Latin legal maxim, expression unius est exclusio alterius, the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. I do not think we need to be concerned about these things or unduly alarmed about the Civil Service Commission's interpretation of this language. As I have so often said, under the power now given by Congress to the Commission—delegated authority, if we wish to call it such, or the power to define—the Commission has made rules over a period of more than 50 years, and I have heard of no oppression of anyone by virtue of them. I really would not like to see such provisions written into the law, and I will say to the Senator that, for the most part, the activities to which he refers would not be prohibited by the law.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator certainly cannot object to subdivision 1, which relates to freedom of expression of opinion on any and all subjects.

Mr. HATCH. I thought I wrote such a provision into the bill yesterday. I think it is already there.

Mr. BROWN. I do not agree with the Senator. I do not think he has done so.

The second matter relates to the making of voluntary contributions. It will be admitted that the Civil Service Commission may take away that privilege at any time it desires. Certainly the Senator will recall that when he made his opening speech I asked him specifically about school elections, and he stated that he feared that the language of the bill would cover school elections. I want to make certain that it does not. We could certainly cover the rule expressed in the Latin maxim to which the Senator referred to by adding a subsequent section which would say, in effect, that the enumeration of these limitations is not to be considered as exclusive of any other limitations which might be fixed.

Mr. HATCH. We shall have time to discuss the matter further.

Mr. BROWN. I realize, as the Senator from Kentucky pointed out, that this amendment may not be brought up until the committee amendments have been disposed of. I am glad to have had this discussion, and I hope the Senator will look over the proposed amendment and see if he can either accept it or improve it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the approval of section 15 in the committee amendment. I ask that such section 15 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section is as follows:

SEC. 15. The United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to promulgate, as soon as practicable, rules or regulations defining, for the purposes of this act, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns." After the promulgation of such rules or regulations, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns," as used in this act, shall have the meaning ascribed to it by such rules or regulations. The Commission is authorized to amend such rules or regulations from time to time as it deems necessary.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that immediately following the printing of section 15, the explanation of such section 15 found in the committee report be likewise printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The explanation is as follows:

Section 15: This section authorizes and directs the Civil Service Commission to promulgate rules or regulations defining, for the purposes of this act, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns." After the promulgation of such rules or regulations, they will be controlling as to the meaning of such term when it is used in this act with respect to Federal employees as well as when it is used with respect to State and local employees. The Commission is authorized to amend such rules or regulations from time to time as it deems necessary.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in my opinion section 15 attempts to delegate to the Civil Service Commission whatever power Congress has on this particular subject. The Civil Service Commission is composed of three members, appointed by the President. Not more than two members may belong to the same political party. In the original law, creating the Commission, the duties of such Commission were set forth—one duty being—

To aid the President, as he may request, in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, * * *.

Under the Constitution the President, undictated to, has power to make appointments. Under the law the Civil Service Commission is simply an assistant to the President in the making of appointments, the qualifying of appointees, and the controlling of appointees in the Federal service.

Section 15, as it appears in the committee amendment, directs the Civil Service Commission to promulgate rules and regulations. Then the bill sets out what the Commission is to define. Among other things, section 15 directs the Commission to define what is meant by the language "active part in political management or in political campaigns."

Mr. President, as I understand this section it directs the Civil Service Commission to write the law defining what is meant by the language "active part in political management or in political campaigns." To define the language set forth the Commission must go further. The Commission must define what is "pernicious political activity." It must go still further. It must define, by inference, what is "clean politics."

Mr. President, Congress has the power to delegate its power under certain conditions. Article I, section 1 of the Constitution reads as follows:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The Supreme Court has held that Congress may delegate powers by fixing conditions and setting definite limitations.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I may be in error, but I gathered from the votes which the Senator has cast that he does not approve of the pending bill. If I am correct in that assumption, I believe the Senator, as a matter of strategy would be in error. I think section 15 is not only invalid in itself, but it makes the bill invalid, because that part of the bill which prohibits political activity must refer for its understanding to section 15, which is invalid; and I think if section 15 stays in the bill we shall have wasted our time passing it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree entirely with the able Senator from Colorado; but I am not willing that this bill shall become a law without at least stating my objections to section 15. After the discussion we have had for the past 2 weeks, I am not willing that the bill shall become a law and later be attacked in the courts and to have the Supreme Court set the act aside without calling the attention of the Senate to provisions which I think are clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me suggest to the Senator that if we follow the precedent already established by the passage of the Harrison resolution, the report of the committee on the Tobey resolution, and the pending resolution with regard to Russia, when the law gets into court we can simply say that it is the sense of the Senate that the court should do so and so, and that will end it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Nebraska may act upon that theory; but for myself, I am not willing to act upon such an assumption.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand, the Senator proposes to strike out section 15 in its entirety.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The effect of my position would be that the Senate should not approve the section, which would mean that it should be stricken from the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. What effect does the Senator think that would have on the remainder of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I regard section 15 as the heart and brain of the bill. Without section 15 I can see no good purpose in enacting the remainder of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator must remember that in the other sections of the bill there are prohibitions against political activity and political management of campaigns, which provisions would still be enforced. They are not contained in section 15.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill, if enacted, together with the original so-called Hatch Act, will affect literally millions of citizens of the United States. The number has been estimated as high as 4,000,000 Federal and State employees.

Mr. HATCH. I think that number is greatly overestimated.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Let me clear up that situation. I am the Senator who gave those figures, and I think what I said was not taken quite accurately in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I said that 1,200,000 Federal employees were subject to the provisions of the original Hatch Act, and there were 2,600,000 State, municipal, and local employees, many of whom would be subject to the act; but I did not mean to imply that all of them would be subject to the act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is obvious to anyone who understands our system of government that, if this bill should become a law, it would affect a very large number of citizens of the United States.

Mr. President, I desire the RECORD to show, as best I can, the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the delegation of congressional power. Mr. President, I wish to refer to some authorities. I first call attention to a book entitled "Constitution of the United States, Annotated." Under the heading "Delegation of legislative powers," on page 956, we find the following language:

The Congress manifestly is not permitted to abdicate or to transfer to others the essential legislative functions with which it is thus vested.

Undoubtedly legislation must often be adapted to complex conditions involving a host of details with which the National Legislature cannot deal directly.

The Constitution has never been regarded as denying to the Congress the necessary resources of flexibility and practicality which will enable it to perform its function in laying down policies and establishing standards by leaving to selected instrumentalities the making of subordinate rules within prescribed limits and the determination of facts to which the policy as declared by the Legislature is to apply.

The foregoing interpretation is based upon the following citations:

Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (293 U. S. 388).
Morrill v. Johns (106 U. S. 466).
Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States (295 U. S. 495).

Further in the same book we find the following additional paragraphs:

Congress may also, in enacting legislation, provide either that its operation shall be suspended or that it shall go into effect upon the occurrence of certain events, the existence of which shall be ascertained and declared by administrative officers.

Citation: Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark (143 U. S., p. 649); Hampton & Co. v. United States (276 U. S., p. 394).

The true distinction, therefore—is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be and conferring an authority or discretion as to its execution to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law.

Says the Constitution Annotated—

The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

Mr. President, the conditions under which the Congress may delegate its power is discussed at length in the case of the Panama Refining Co. against Ryan, which is to be found in United States Reports, volume 293, beginning on page 388. I shall read some paragraphs from the syllabus:

3. Section 9 (c) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, purporting to authorize the President to prohibit the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and the products thereof produced or withdrawn from storage in excess of the amounts permitted by State authority, attaches criminal penalties to every violation of such an order; and persons who would thus become subject to repeated penalties in carrying on their business are entitled to invoke the equitable jurisdiction to restrain enforcement of the order if found unconstitutional.

Another paragraph from the syllabus reads as follows—it is part of paragraph 4:

The declarations of section 1 of title I of this act are simply an introduction in broad outline, leaving the legislative policy as to particular subjects to be declared and defined, if at all, by subsequent sections. The Court can find nothing in section 1 or elsewhere in the act which limits or controls the authority sought to be conferred by section 9 (c).

I now read from the fifth paragraph of the syllabus:

5. The question whether the delegation is permitted by the Constitution is not answered by the argument that it should be assumed that the President has acted, or will act, for what he believes to be the public good. The point is not one of motives but of constitutional authority, for which the best of motives is not a substitute.

I shall read next from paragraph 7:

7. The principle forbidding Congress to abdicate, or to transfer to others, the essential legislative functions with which it is vested by article I, section 1, and article I, section 8, paragraph 18, of the Constitution, has been recognized by the Court in every case in which the question has been raised.

I read next from paragraph 8 of the syllabus:

8. Congress may lay down its policies and establish its standards and leave to selected instrumentalities the making of subordinate rules, within prescribed limits, and the determination of facts to which the policy, as declared by Congress, shall apply; but the constant recognition of the necessity and validity of such provisions, and the wide range of administrative authority which has been developed by means of them, cannot be allowed to obscure the limitations of the authority to delegate, if our constitutional system is to be maintained.

I next read from paragraph 12 of the syllabus:

12. If the citizen is to be punished for the crime of violating a legislative order of an executive officer, board, or commission, due process of law requires that it shall appear that the order is within the authority of the officer, board, or commission; and, if that authority depends on determinations of fact, those determinations must be shown.

Mr. President, I submit that section 15 attempts to delegate legislative power without laying down any limitations whatever, and to that extent and for that reason the attempted delegation is wholly void and without effect.

Mr. Chief Justice Hughes wrote the opinion in the case of the Panama Refining Co. against Ryan and others, and I shall read a few paragraphs from the opinion of the Chief Justice:

On July 11, 1933, the President, by Executive order, prohibited "the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and the products thereof produced or withdrawn from storage in excess of the amount permitted to be produced or withdrawn from storage by any State law or valid regulation or order prescribed thereunder, by any board, commission, officer, or other duly authorized agency of a State." This action was based on section 9 (c) of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933.

Paragraph (c) of section 9 of the National Recovery Act, in which Congress sought to delegate to the President the power which the Court held had not been properly delegated, reads as follows:

(c) The President is authorized to prohibit the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and the products thereof produced or withdrawn from storage in excess of the amount permitted to be produced or withdrawn from storage by any State law or valid regulation or order prescribed thereunder by any board, commission, order, or other duly authorized agency of a State. Any violation of any order of the President issued under the provisions of this subsection shall be punishable by fine of not to exceed $1,000 or imprisonment for not to exceed 6 months, or both.

That is the end of the power sought to be delegated. It is that section that the Supreme Court held to be invalid and void. The President proceeded to act under this authority and made his rules and regulations, but the Supreme Court held that the rules and regulations made under this so-called delegation of power were void and could not be enforced.

I shall read only a few paragraphs from the reasoning of the Court. From page 414 I read the following:

Section 9 (c)—

That is the section I have just read—

is assailed upon the ground that it is an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. The section purports to authorize the President to pass a prohibitory law. The subject to which this authority relates is defined. It is the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and petroleum products which are produced or withdrawn from storage in excess of the amount permitted by State authority. Assuming for the present purpose, without deciding, that the Congress has power to interdict the transportation of that excess in interstate and foreign commerce, the question whether that transportation shall be prohibited by law is obviously one of legislative policy. Accordingly we look to the statute to see whether the Congress has declared a policy with respect to that subject; whether the Congress has set up a standard for the President's action; whether the Congress has required any finding by the President in the exercise of the authority to enact the prohibition.

Section 9 (c) is brief and unambiguous. It does not attempt to control the production of petroleum and petroleum products within a State. It does not seek to lay down rules for the guidance of State legislatures or State officers. It leaves to the States and to their constituted authorities the determination of what production shall be permitted. It does not qualify the President's authority by reference to the basis or extent of the State's limitation of production. Section 9 (c) does not state whether, or in what circumstances, or under what conditions the President is to prohibit the transportation of the amount of petroleum or petroleum products produced in excess of the State's permission. It establishes no criterion to govern the President's course. It does not require any finding by the President as a condition of his action. The Congress, in section 9 (c), thus declares no policy as to the transportation of the excess production. So far as this section is concerned, it gives to the President an unlimited authority to determine the policy and to lay down the prohibition, or not to lay it down, as he may see fit. And disobedience to his order is made a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment.

I shall read only two more brief sections from the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes.

On page 421:

The Constitution provides that "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives" (art. I, sec. 1). And the Congress is empowered "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution" its general powers (art. I, sec. 8, par. 18). The Congress manifestly is not permitted to abdicate, or to transfer to others, the essential legislative functions with which it is thus vested. Undoubtedly legislation must often be adapted to complex conditions involving a host of details with which the National Legislature cannot deal directly. The Constitution has never been regarded as denying to the Congress the necessary resources of flexibility and practicality, which will enable it to perform its function in laying down policies and establishing standards, while leaving to selected instrumentalities the making of subordinate rules within prescribed limits and the determination of facts to which the policy as declared by the legislature is to apply. Without capacity to give authorizations of that sort, we should have the anomaly of a legislative power which, in many circumstances, calling for its exertion would be but a futility But the constant recognition of the necessity and validity of such provisions, and the wide range of administrative authority which has been developed by means of them, cannot be allowed to obscure the limitations of the authority to delegate if our constitutional system is to be maintained.

On page 433 I read the conclusion.

Says Mr. Chief Justice Hughes:

We see no escape from the conclusion that the Executive orders of July 11, 1933, and July 14, 1933, and the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior thereunder are without constitutional authority.

Mr. President, I submit the case of Panama Refining Co. against Ryan as one of the leading authorities sustaining my objection to the approval of section 15.

In order that the record may be more complete, I submit a case in which the Congress did delegate authority and power to the President, and thereafter the President used the authority delegated, and then still later the Supreme Court sustained his use of such delegated power.

In connection with the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, the Congress delegated powers to the President. These powers are stated in title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act enacted in 1933, and approved on May 12 of that year. I shall read the delegation of authority:

SEC. 43. Whenever the President finds, upon investigation, that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, or (2) action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or (3) an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or (4) an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments, the President is authorized, in his discretion—

To do certain things.

Some of the things authorized to be done, if the President should find certain facts to exist, are set forth, as follows:

(a) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into agreements with the several Federal Reserve banks and with the Federal Reserve Board whereby the Federal Reserve Board will, and it is hereby authorized to, notwithstanding any provisions of law or rules and regulations to the contrary, permit such reserve banks to agree that they will, (1) conduct, pursuant to existing law, throughout specified periods, open-market operations in obligations of the United States Government or corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder, andl (2) purchase directly and hold in portfolio for an agreed period or periods of time Treasury bills or other obligations of the United States Government in an aggregate sum of $3,000,000,000 in addition to those they may then hold, unless prior to the termination of such period or periods the Secretary shall consent to their sale. No suspension of reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks, under the terms of section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act, necessitated by reason of operations under this section, shall require the imposition of the graduated tax upon any deficiency in reserves as provided in said section 11 (c). Nor shall it require any automatic increase in the rates of interest or discount charged by any Federal Reserve bank, as otherwise specified in that section. The Federal Reserve Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Board and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent undue credit expansion.

(b) If the Secretary, when directed by the President, is unable to secure the assent of the several Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to the agreements authorized in this section, or if operations under the above provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the purposes of this section, or if for any other reason additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized—

(1) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued in such amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes, as provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption of funding thereof and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, in the same size and of similar color to the Federal Reserve notes heretofore issued and in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $1,000, and $10,000; but notes issued under this subsection shall be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States: Provided, That when any such notes are used for such purpose the bond or other obligation so acquired or taken up shall be retired and canceled. Such notes shall be issued at such times and in such amounts as the President may approve but the aggregate amount of such notes outstanding at any time shall not exceed $3,000,000,000. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel 4 percent annually of such outstanding notes, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to retire and cancel annually 4 percent of such outstanding notes. Such notes and all other coins and currencies heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts public and private.

(2) By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine-tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

After these several powers were delegated in the language stated, the President made an investigation and issued a proclamation. The proclamation was issued on January 31, 1934. In issuing the proclamation the President recited the authority, and after reciting the authority he made the following finding:

Whereas I find, upon investigation, that the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currencies of other governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, and that an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit; and

Whereas, in my judgment, measures additional to those provided by subsection (a) of said section 43 are required to meet the purposes of such section; and

Whereas I find, from my investigation, that, in order to stabilize domestic prices and to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, it is necessary to fix the weight of the gold dollar at $15\frac{5}{21}$ grains nine-tenths fine.

Then the President proceeds to exercise the authority and reduces the weight of the gold dollar from $25\frac{8}{10}$ grains to $15\frac{5}{21}$ grains of gold nine-tenths fine.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire proclamation of the President may be printed at this point in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The proclamation is as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas by virtue of section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 14, 1900 (31 Stat. L. 45), the present weight of the gold dollar is fixed at 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine; and

Whereas by section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933 (Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.), as amended by section 12 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, it is provided in part as follows:

"Whenever the President finds upon investigation that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, or (2) action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or (3) an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or (4) an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments, the President is authorized, in his discretion—

"(a) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into agreements with the several Federal Reserve banks and with the Federal Reserve Board whereby the Federal Reserve Board will, and it is hereby authorized to, notwithstanding any provisions of law or rules and regulations to the contrary, permit such Reserve banks to agree that they will (1) conduct, pursuant to existing law, throughout specified periods, open market operations in obligations of the United States Government or corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder; and (2) purchase directly and hold in portfolio for an agreed period or periods of time Treasury bills or other obligations of the United States Government in an aggregate sum of $3,000,000,000 in addition to those they may then hold, unless prior to the termination of such period or periods the Secretary shall consent to their sale. No suspension of reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks, under the terms of section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act, necessitated by reason of operations under this section, shall require the imposition of the graduated tax upon any deficiency in reserves as provided in said section 11 (c). Nor shall it require any automatic increase in the rates of interest or discount charged by any Federal Reserve bank, as otherwise specified in that section. The Federal Reserve Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Board and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent undue credit expansion.

"(b) If the Secretary, when directed by the President, is unable to secure the assent of the several Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to the agreements authorized in this section, or if operations under the above provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the purposes of this section, or if for any other reason additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized—

"(2) By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine-tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent. Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight. The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency"; and

Whereas I find, upon investigation, that the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currencies of other governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, and that an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit; and

Whereas, in my judgment, measures additional to those provided by subsection (a) of said section 43 are required to meet the purposes of such section; and

Whereas I find from my investigation that, in order to stabilize domestic prices and to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, it is necessary to fix the weight of the gold dollar at 15 5/21 grains nine-tenths fine:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 43, title III, of said act of May 12, 1933, as amended, and by virtue of all other authority vested in me, do hereby proclaim, order, direct, declare, and fix the weight of the gold dollar to be 15 5/21 grains nine-tenths fine, from and after the date and hour of this proclamation. The weight of the silver dollar is not altered or affected in any manner by reason of this proclamation.

This proclamation shall remain in force and effect until and unless repealed or modified by act of Congress or by subsequent proclamation; and notice is hereby given that I reserve the right by virtue of the authority vested in me to alter or modify this proclamation as the interest of the United States may seem to require.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the city of Washington at 3:10 o'clock in the afternoon, eastern standard time, this 31st day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and fifty-eighth.

[SEAL] FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The foregoing are some of the reasons for my objection to Senate approval of section 15 of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. The vote on the amendment for those who sponsor and those who favor the pending bill would be "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the view of the Chair.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of California was called). The Senator from California is necessarily detained on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senators from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. SCHWARTZ], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on departmental business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay," and the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "yea," and the Senator from Utah would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on important public business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—47

Austin	Frazier	La Follette	Shipstead
Barbour	George	Lee	Taft
Barkley	Gerry	Lodge	Thomas, Idaho

So the first amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 8, line 2, where it is proposed to strike out "States", and the quotation marks and to insert the word "States", and a new section, as follows:

SEC. 15. The United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to promulgate, as soon as practicable, rules or regulations defining, for the purposes of this act, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns." After the promulgation of such rules or regulations, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns," as used in this act, shall have the meaning ascribed to it by such rules or regulations. The Commission is authorized to amend such rules or regulations from time to time as it deems necessary.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send to the desk a substitute for section 15, and offer it as a substitute for the entire section. I may say, briefly, that all the substitute does is to prescribe in the law itself that the present prohibitions against employees in the classified civil service as to political activities shall be the political activities prohibited by the act; that it shall be limited to those interpretations. It does away with the question of the delegation of power, and the other questions about which I realize some Senators have been concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, it is proposed to strike out lines 4 to 13, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 15. The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined to be prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service of the United States by the provisions of the civil-service rules prohibiting such employees from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I understood the clerk to read lines 4 to 13 on page 8. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct, as the Chair understands. The Senator from New Mexico has offered to strike from page 8 lines 4 to 13 and to substitute the language which has been read.

Mr. DANAHER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Does this particular amendment apply to the original text of the bill, or the text as amended?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there seems to be some confusion about the text.

Mr. LUCAS. I understood I had the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has the floor. He yielded to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is some confusion as to the text of the bill. In the copy of the bill I have the Senator's amendment does not apply to the matter on page 8.

Mr. HATCH. I can explain that in a second. The confusion arises from the fact that yesterday or day before yesterday there was a reprint made of the bill containing the amendments which had been adopted. The substitute which I have offered is a substitute for section 15, no matter on what page of the bill it appears.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is at the bottom of page 9 in the text which I have.

Mr. HATCH. In the print of the bill which I have it is on page 8. If the Senator will permit me further to identify it, in the new bill it is in lines 14 to 23, inclusive, on page 9.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico whether or not the amendment which is submitted strikes out section 15?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask a further question, as to whether or not the Senator from New Mexico has heretofore submitted to the Senate, through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or in any other way, to any Members of the Senate this very important amendment?

Mr. HATCH. I have discussed it with several Senators. It has not been printed in the RECORD. I may say to the Senator that I am sure I mentioned it to him. I told him I was going to offer a substitute.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; the Senator mentioned it to me just a moment ago, after I learned for the first time from the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] that there was a possibility of a substitute for section 15 being offered. That was the first time in the 2 weeks of debate that I learned the Senator from New Mexico expected to eliminate section 15 completely, and to offer something in lieu thereof, which, as I understand, he says is constitutional.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes. I do not say that the other section 15 was unconstitutional; but I want to say to the Senator that it has been mentioned on the floor during the debate that the amendment would be offered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this is the first time, I will say to the Senator, I have heard of it. Regardless of what the Senator may say with respect to the constitutionality of section 15, as it is now presented, I am constrained to disagree with him on that point, and I seriously doubt whether there is any other constitutional lawyer who is going to agree with the Senator from New Mexico that section 15 as it is now written is constitutional.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] said a moment ago, section 15 is, in my opinion, the real heart of this legislation. This is the one question in which the Senator has been interested from the beginning to the end, and I say to the Senate that I dislike now to go into a most serious question here in the last hours of the debate, and merely from what I have heard read by the Senator attempt to say whether or not the amendment he now offers is or is not constitutional.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the particular amendment which is now placed before us for consideration in lieu of section 15 could have been given to the Senate and to Senators long before this moment in the closing hours of the debate.

Wednesday a week ago in the Senate I discussed the constitutionality of section 15. No one in the Senate up to this time has taken the floor and discussed that question from that standpoint. All the time we have been engaged in this debate the serious question, the very heart and brain, as the Senator from Oklahoma said, of the entire bill, has been before the United States Senate, and no one has discussed it—not even the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator is a conscientious individual, a man with a great deal of zeal, a man with a great deal of integrity, and according to some columnists practically the only Senator who is conscientious about the legislation before us. Mr. President, I call to the attention of the Senate that no statement of any kind, no brief of any kind, no argument of any kind, has been made up to this hour by the proponents of this legislation that section 15 is constitutional.

I have made an examination of what has happened in the past when important measures of this kind have been before the United States Senate. Oh, some can smile about this measure. Some can say that no one is serious. Some can charge politics. Some can charge this and that, according to their own like or dislike. Some may question the motives of individuals on the floor of the United States Senate, but the Senator from Illinois from the beginning to the end has constantly said that there is a question of personal political liberty involved in this bill which goes deeper than any other consideration so far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned.

Yes, Mr. President; this, in my humble opinion, is a serious question. Other important legislation has been discussed and passed in the days gone by. The N. R. A., the Triple A, the Gold Clause Act, the antilynching bill, and others. But in all that legislation someone in connection therewith took the position that it was either constitutional or unconstitutional. I reiterate that in connection with every important piece of legislation which has been debated on the floor of the Senate or in the House of Representatives since I have been a Member of either of the two branches of the Congress, during the last 6 years, there has always been an advocate for the constitutionality of the act. The unconstitutionality of a measure has always had its advocates. Take the antilynching bill, which Senators have heard discussed on the floor of the Senate in connection with this legislation. Senators will find that the late brilliant Senator from Illinois, J. Hamilton Lewis, made an argument in defense of the constitutionality of that measure. Senators will also find that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] made an argument in favor of the constitutionality of that measure on the floor of the Senate, while others have proclaimed it unconstitutional.

We have been for almost 2 weeks debating this measure. In the beginning of the debate the constitutionality of the proposed legislation was questioned, but no one dared to rise in the Senate at any time to answer the argument I made a week ago last Wednesday. Now at the last moment an amendment is brought in seeking to displace section 15, in the hope that the Senate will forget what has transpired in connection with the discussion of the constitutionality of section 15 and that the measure will go to the other branch of the House in the hope that they can there, perhaps in conference or through their friends, draft the delegation of power which is unconstitutional in this measure.

Mr. President, no one yet has said that this measure as now constituted does not constitute an unconstitutional delegation of power from the legislative branch of the Government to the executive. That is a question in which I have been interested from the beginning of the discussion of this legislation. I have taken little or no part in the debate other than upon this one question.

Mr. President, how was the bill reported out? A subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections handled the matter. The distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], is a great lawyer. He has never made an argument upon the question of the constitutionality of section 15. The distinguished lawyer, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], a member of the subcommittee which wrote the bill, has made no argument upon this bill. I should like for him to reply to the argument of the Senator from Oklahoma or to the argument I made upon the question of delegation of power from the legislative branch to the executive.

Mr. President, I made the argument 10 days ago. There are great lawyers in the United States Senate. None of them has answered my argument. They have remained silent on that one question to this very moment. The argument remains unanswered.

Mr. President, the authorities are all one way on this question. We cannot find a single authority when we construe section 15 as it is now included in the present legislation, which does not say that in these words there is an unwarranted delegation of power from the legislative to the executive branch of this Government.

Mr. President, why all the silence? Why for the first time in the history of a great piece of legislation have we not found someone somewhere in the United States Senate who would get up to defend the constitutionality of the measure? Oh, you can defend it now, but, Mr. President, it comes too late. Where have Senators been for 2 weeks upon this very, very important question? I cannot believe that the United States Senate will send this measure to the House of Representatives in the present form. I cannot believe that the substitute as it now comes to us and proposed by the Senator from New Mexico will serve the proper purpose.

As a Member of the United States Senate, I am not willing to say to the Civil Service Commission, "Take what you have in the way of rules and regulations," without any real investigation of what those rules and regulations are. It is the duty of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to find out about each and every rule and to see whether or not those rules are applicable to political situations, to political management, and political campaigns in every section of the United States. I am told by the Senator from Michigan that there are only 18 rules, and yet by this bill it is proposed to say to the Civil Service Commission, "Take those 18 rules and run the politics of the country." If the Commission follows the course it has pursued in the past, it is not prevented from changing its rules at every whim and caprice, according to the individual notions of members of the Civil Service Commission. In the bill we place no standards or safeguards around the Civil Service Commission. We give them the power, even under the new amendment submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], to do exactly what they have been doing in the past, and that is to make rules and regulations in line with what they conceive to be best. Is that an unlawful delegation of power? There are no safeguards or standards in the bill. There is nothing in line with the Hot Oil case, the Schechter case, the N. R. A. case, and other cases which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] cited in his argument a few moments ago.

Mr. President, as a result of all the amendments which have been discussed, if there ever was a bill which demonstrated implications and ramifications which were never disclosed before the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the time the bill was considered it is this particular bill. Here is a legislative measure dealing with the political liberties of certain individuals. Here is a measure which intrudes itself into the very wellsprings of true democracy. Here is a measure which extends its long and vicious Federal arm into the sovereignty of the States. Here is a measure which exploits the political freedom and rights guaranteed to every man under the Bill of Rights. Here is a measure which curtails participation in political campaigns in every State, the one instrument of free government which holds public policy in a fashion to which the majority agree. Here is a measure which deals a death blow to party responsibility.

Can any conscientious Senator successfully challenge these statements? With all the glaring imperfections in the bill which have been pointed out from time to time, does not the situation with which we are now dealing say to us that the bill ought to be rewritten or restudied in the light of what has been discovered on the floor of the Senate during the past few days? That is especially true with regard to section 15. Is the Senate of the United States willing at this moment, without much study and consideration, to accept the substitute brought in at the zero hour of this battle? I should like to know what the Civil Service Commission is going to say before the committee with respect to political activity, with respect to political management, and with respect to political campaigns in my State of Illinois.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. As I recall, the amendment which is now submitted as a substitute provides that the interpretations of the Civil Service Commission of its own rules as to what constitutes political activity shall be written into the law. My inquiry is, Do we have available to us those various interpretations? Are they codified? Are they available, or are they scattered through the administration of the Civil Service Commission over the period of years since its creation? I am asking whether or not that which we seek to write into the law is available to us, so that we may know today what is the law which we are passing.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that, insofar as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, I have never seen any of the rules and regulations which are to guide the destinies of political parties throughout the United States of America. That is the thing about which I am complaining. I contend that if the Civil Service Commission is to have the authority to define political management and political campaigns; if it is to say what political activity is in the precinct where the Senator from Colorado lives, the Commission ought to be brought before the committee for the purpose of a thorough examination in order that we may obtain the views of the Commission and find out what the regulations are, and whether or not the present rules of the Commission are to be applicable to the broad field to which the bill makes them applicable if the amendment of the Senator should become the law. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. President, I have a right to complain. The situation is serious. The strange thing to me is that Senators on this side of the aisle, fine lawyers, great statesmen, sit idly by and say nothing. Here is my friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. Somebody muzzled him. I do not know who. He is a fine man—a thought-provoking Senator—a man who always adds something to every debate in which he participates. However, from the time he offered his amendment giving to the trench digger on the highway the right of appeal from the action of the Civil Service Commission, he has said hardly a word. That is not like him. He frequently engages in debate, not because he wants publicity and notoriety but because he is a good statesman, and usually has something worth while to offer. From that time on he has been as silent as the tomb, yet I know how he feels down in his heart on this thing. I know how a good lawyer feels with regard to section 15.

Mr. President, no one can tell me that the great Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] would make an argument upon the constitutionality of section 15—not at all. Notwithstanding all this silence, apparently we are ready to pass the bill without sending it back where it belongs for further study and consideration. It seems that the die is cast. I plead with Senators in this zero hour to forget the past for a moment, look to the future, and think seriously of the present. Think what this great deliberative body is about to do.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator would not be of the opinion that perhaps the very able and alert Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] has become a "rubber stamp," would he?

Mr. LUCAS. I would not say that at all about the Senator from Connecticut. I know the Senators on this side of the aisle. They are all my friends and I like them. However, I regret that from beginning of the debate no voice on this side has really, honestly and seriously, taken a part in the debate. If it had been otherwise, we should have had a better bill. Probably we should have had no bill at all.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. In this body some years ago there was a prominent statesman from Virginia who was noted for very pertinent maxims. He is recently deceased. I refer to Hon. Claude Swanson. One maxim he often gave to Senators was, "When you expect to vote wrong, do not make a speech about it." [Laughter.]

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I observe that that rule does not now seem to be in effect in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Colorado; but I am really serious. I am not attempting to be facetious about this matter at all. I say with the utmost sincerity that I regret that the voices of Senators on this side of the aisle have been stilled. I know the power which exists on this side of the aisle with respect to constructive legislation. Senators on this side do not hesitate at times to discuss very important measures of Government. I regret that they did not see fit on this occasion to discuss this very, very important measure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has gone about his task with zeal and industry. In the beginning he was practically alone in his battle. He had no particular help from the individuals who were responsible for helping to report the bill from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was about to make the observation that yesterday I announced that I planned to discuss the constitutionality of section 15, whereupon I was advised that a substitute would be offered for section 15. I examined the substitute section proposed. Today I find that the substitute offered is not the section which I saw yesterday.

Mr. LUCAS. I regret the discovery.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. One further observation. The section which is now proposed in lieu of section 15 as an amendment proposes to make the present civil-service rules the law. This section extends the present civil-service laws to the citizens of the Senator's State and of my State, whose salaries in whole or in part are paid by the Federal Government. This section makes pages 13 to 80, inclusive, in the civil-service acts, rules, statutes, executive orders, and regulations, the law. We are now asked to vote upon one section which presumes to make approximately 80 sections of the existing rules and regulations the law relating to 3,000,000 citizens of the States of the United States.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, that is a demonstration of how futile it is to come in at the last minute upon an important measure of this kind and attempt to legislate by striking at the heart of the entire bill and substituting something different today.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I substituted nothing on yesterday and something different today. I had two amendments drawn on yesterday.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say that the Senator is resourceful.

Mr. HATCH. One of them, which I think I gave to the floor leader and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was broader than the one I showed to them, but I had it prepared. Under the one yesterday, the Civil Service Commission would have had power to continue to define or make rules in the future, and this one today relates the power to the present time.

Mr. LUCAS. Anyway, the Senator admits that the proposal he submitted yesterday was different from the one he submitted today.

Mr. HATCH. I never made any proposal yesterday.

Mr. LUCAS. No. The Senator did not make any to me.

Mr. HATCH. I did not make any to the Senator from Oklahoma or anybody else.

Mr. LUCAS. I misunderstood the Senator, then.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I at this point interject a remark? Yesterday, when I was serving notice that I planned to discuss this matter, I was advised that there was a substitute. The substitute apparently had been drawn by the legislative drafting service. The substitute came from this aisle. The Senator sits in the second seat from that side of the aisle. I did not see the Senator have the substitute, but——

Mr. HATCH. I am sure that was the substitute, but I had not made any proposal. I gave it to the floor leader to be passed around.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. So far as I knew, that was the only substitute which was in existence. I made some comment about that substitute. This morning, when the substitute actually was introduced, I saw it, and it is not the same document. There is nothing wrong about that.

Mr. HATCH. Insinuations have been made that it was wrong; that somebody was misled. That is what the Senator from Illinois was saying. That is what I take objection to and take offense at.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has a right to take offense at that, and if I misunderstood him I apologize. A moment ago I used a word that perhaps was wrong; but what the Senator from Oklahoma did say was that yesterday he talked to the Senator from New Mexico about section 15, and at that time the Senator from New Mexico gave the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is hardly correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator give us the true version of it? I certainly do not want to do any injustice to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I know the Senator does not, and, of course, I do not desire to do an injustice to the Senator from New Mexico.

I learned on yesterday that there was in existence a proposed substitute for section 15. I saw the substitute, not in the hands of the Senator from New Mexico. I procured a copy, and I read it. When I read it I sent it back by a page to the Senator from New Mexico. That is all I know about the substitute yesterday. Today the Senator from New Mexico introduced another substitute. That is the one which is now before the Senate. They are not the same. They do not have the same effect, and the language is not the same.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, do I correctly understand the Senator to say that they do not have the same effect?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; they do not. One is broader than the other.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I may be able to clear up this profound mystery.

Mr. LUCAS. There is nothing profound about it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Just plain mystery, then.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the distinguished leader make it "plain."

Mr. BARKLEY. While I was seeking yesterday to get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on something, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] indicated that he desired to move to strike out section 15 of the bill, which is a Senate amendment now under consideration. I suggested that the same purpose would be attained by simply voting, up or down, the Senate committee amendment. The Senator from New Mexico stated to me that he had drawn a tentative amendment which he hoped would satisfy the Senator from Oklahoma. I obtained that amendment from the Senator from New Mexico, and myself brought it to the Senator from Oklahoma, and he read it; and on the floor, as the Senator will observe in the RECORD of yesterday, the Senator from Oklahoma announced that that amendment was not satisfactory to him.

Certainly the Senator from New Mexico, like any other Senator, has the right to, and frequently does, improve an amendment that he himself intends to offer. I do not think the Senator from New Mexico is to be criticized because overnight he has improved the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I am perfectly willing for Senators to criticize me if they so desire.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that; but there is nothing peculiar about the Senator from New Mexico seeking to perfect his amendment before he offers it. That is done here all the time, and it ought to be done. It is commendable in Senators, when they have an idea, to try to improve it before it is actually offered to the Senate for their consideration. I think the Senator from New Mexico is entitled to the same consideration in that regard that other Senators are.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate what the majority leader has said in connection with the pending legislation, and I appreciate the fact that every Member of the Senate always has the right to improve legislation. That is the reason why from the very beginning of the consideration of the bill, I have attempted in my feeble and limited way to discuss section 15. But now we are right to the point of passing or not passing the bill; and in view of the tremendous importance I attach to that section, I cannot sit idly by. I must make my protest. Now this section may not be important to anybody else; it may not be important to the Senator from New Mexico, as to the constitutionality of section 15, but I have always thought it was an extremely serious matter to pass this kind of legislation, and so made my opposition known some time ago.

Mr. President, with all of the amendments that have been offered; with all of the implications that are in the bill; with all of the ramifications of the bill; with section 15 absolutely and beyond the shadow of a doubt constituting a delegation of legislative authority to the Executive, which cannot be sustained by the court, and that, I submit, also applies to the substitute that is submitted by the able Senator from New Mexico, I contend that this legislation should be returned to the committee for further study and consideration, and at this time, Mr. President, I, therefore, move that the pending bill, Senate bill 3046, be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for further study and consideration, special reference being had to section 15.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just a word or two.

As to section 15——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to retain the floor?

Mr. MINTON. I merely wanted to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he would let me call for a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, it is not necessary. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. I know everybody wants to hear the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator from Indiana, but it is not necessary.

Section 15 has never been, to me, an important part of the bill. I have so stated on many occasions. I stated on the opening day of the debate that probably there would be objections and criticisms, and perhaps imperfections would be found in the bill, so I was not at all surprised when the Senator from Illinois spoke, with his usual eloquence, learning, and ability, directing his charge of unconstitutionality at section 15—a charge with which I do not agree, and upon which I have considerable authority here on my desk if I chose to argue the question of the constitutionality of that section. But, Mr. President, deeming that that particular language was not important, and conceiving that Senators might have an honest doubt as to its constitutionality, that they might have deep and honest concern as to whether section 15 should be enacted in that language, I took the Senators at their word. When they argued here on the floor of the Senate that it was unconstitutional, I thought they meant what they said and that they wanted it corrected. Although nearly 2 weeks have elapsed, not a Senator has come to me, so far as I recall, and certainly not the Senator from Illinois, offering any suggestion for a redraft of the bill or an improvement therein.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. No; I will not yield now. Always he has made his argument to defeat section 15 because it is unconstitutional. Why? Because he objects to section 15. I still give him credit for being honest. I think he did object to section 15 when he made his argument; but, Mr. President, the closing motion he made this day shows what has been throughout the entire debate—not a desire to get rid of section 15 but a desire to kill the bill and everything that is in it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well; I will make this proposition to the Senator: If he will send the bill back to the committee, and bring back section 15 in line with what the majority of the members believe is constitutional, I will vote for the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator that is too high a price to pay for section 15. I would rather see it entirely stricken from the bill——

Mr. LUCAS. Very well; let us strike it out.

Mr. HATCH. Because it is not of enough importance to do either one of those things, and it is not of a great deal of importance whether it remains in the bill or not.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. But what I am objecting to—and I am not yielding now—is offering amendments and making objections and motions to send the bill back—with the utmost good faith, I hope—but the undoubted effect would be to kill the bill.

I have had propositions made all the time. I heard a proposition made on the floor of the Senate, "Let the bill go back to committee." I said, "No; pass the bill. It is going to take weeks and months over in the House. If you want to write a new bill, choose your own committee, and I will work with you day or night, or at any time"; and I will still do it. If this bill is bad, bring in a better one and pass it through the Senate, and you can easily substitute it in the House.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Why does the Senator think Senators serving on the committee would be any more apt to kill his bill now than they were before?

Mr. HATCH. Because almost every move that is possible to be made to kill a bill has been made against this bill.

Mr. MINTON. It has not been done in the committee. What has been done has been done by certain Members of the Senate not even members of the committee.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator could have the bill sent back to the committee, he—very able Senator that he is—would fight the bill in the committee, and he knows he would.

Mr. MINTON. I promise the Senator that.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] would do the same thing.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will yield, the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Tennessee stood alone in the committee. What has happened to our committee since then?

Mr. HATCH. Not a thing.

Mr. MINTON. This bill came out on the floor of the Senate from a committee that the Senator is afraid to go back before with his precious bill.

Mr. HATCH. Afraid to go back after 2 weeks! That would be smart! The Senator from Indiana would do that, would he not? If he had stood up here for 2 weeks, fighting a bill through, when it was right up to the point of passage, would he say, "We will let it go back to the committee, and start the fight all over again"? We would get a great deal of legislation by such tactics as that. The fact of the matter is, We would get no legislation, and that is what is wanted.

I shall not detain the Senate. I say let us vote on the motion to recommit and let us do it quickly. Let the Senate say whether or not the bill shall go back to the committee.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrnes	George	Holman
Andrews	Capper	Gerry	Holt
Ashurst	Caraway	Gibson	Hughes
Austin	Chandler	Gillette	Johnson, Colo.
Bailey	Chavez	Glass	La Follette
Bankhead	Clark, Idaho	Green	Lee
Barbour	Clark, Mo.	Guffey	Lodge
Barkley	Connally	Gurney	Lucas
Bilbo	Danaher	Hale	Lundeen
Bridges	Davis	Harrison	McCarran
Brown	Donahey	Hatch	McKellar
Bulow	Downey	Hayden	McNary
Burke	Ellender	Herring	Maloney
Byrd	Frazier	Hill	Mead
Miller	Pittman	Smathers	Tydings
Minton	Reed	Smith	Vandenberg
Murray	Reynolds	Stewart	Van Nuys
Neely	Russell	Taft	Wagner
Norris	Schwartz	Thomas, Idaho	Walsh
Nye	Schwellenbach	Thomas, Okla.	Wheeler
Overton	Sheppard	Thomas, Utah	White
Pepper	Shipstead	Townsend	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I understand a motion to recommit the bill has been made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. I desire to offer a substitute for the motion, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed substitute.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the bill S. 3046 be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections with instructions to rewrite the bill and report it to the Senate not later than Monday, March 25, and that on Tuesday, March 26, at 12 o'clock noon, said bill be made the special order of business for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to reiterate what I stated about a week or 10 days ago, namely, that I thought the Senator from New Mexico had tried sincerely and diligently to write a good bill and that there was much in it which should be retained. However, I believed that the bill, as drawn, would tend too much to exclude persons rather than to exclude pernicious political activity; that the law ought to be designed primarily to define and outlaw pernicious political activities rather than to exclude persons. There would certainly be no question about the constitutionality of such a law, and, in my judgment, there would be no question about its wisdom. What we are trying to do is to define and make illegal activities by anyone—the President, members of the Cabinet, Members of the Senate, Members of the House, or anyone else—which we all know are in the category of improper political activities.

I am hopeful that if the bill could be recommitted with that idea in mind, and the language modified in some respects, we would have a bill which would be satisfactory to the country and to the Congress.

I reiterate, I do not wish to detract at all from the fine work which the Senator from New Mexico has been doing and attempting to do and sincerely working to do, namely, to make elections more responsive to democratic processes. I have stayed with him in this whole contest, and do not intend to desert him now; but I can see a great deal of room for improvement in the general writing of the bill.

If the bill is merely to be recommitted and to die in committee, that would not be fair. I have provided in my substitute motion that the measure be reported to the Senate on the 25th of March, just about 10 days away, and that it be made the special order of business for March 26, so that the position of the bill would not be lost. I do not think it is necessary to do that, but I am making this motion as one who is friendly to the objectives of the bill, but who doubts that some of the provisions now written are either sound or wise.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate fully the attitude of the Senator from Maryland, and I know he is stating his exact position. However, I feel that any recommitment of the bill will serve the very purpose which he does not want to accomplish. I think it would mean the death of the bill. I feel that to report it back on the day the Senator suggested and make it the special order would mean that everything we have gone through in the past 2 weeks would be lost. We could not possibly get the bill to the House in time for action at this session. If we defeat the motion to recommit and pass the bill and it goes to the House, every good thing the Senator desires to accomplish can be worked out in conference. That is the reason why I do not gladly agree to the motion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is a great deal in what the Senator says, and I know he is sincere and realistic when he says that when the bill goes to the House and is acted on there, and finally goes to conference most of the things in the bill which might be the subject of fair criticism will in all likelihood be eliminated. I think the Senator is sound and realistic in that viewpoint, but I wish to suggest to the Senator that I have seen the same procedure tried before. I saw it tried in the case of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, and most of the friends of that act today believe that if we had tried to write a better act than the one we then wrote, the country, the administration, the party, and labor and capital would have been better off.

Letting things go and working them out in conference is a dangerous practice. The place where legislation should be made as good as we can make it is right here in the Senate of the United States. This is the place to do that. If we let measures go through about which we have serious doubt, there is no guaranty that the provisions about which we have serious doubt will not be in the law after the measure is enacted. I have seen it happen so many times that I am reluctant to see it happen once more without making some effort before it leaves this body to put the proposed law in better shape than as we find it now.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield to the Senator from New Mexico as soon as I have yielded to the Senator from Kentucky, who rose first.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Maryland, whose sincerity about this matter I do not in any way doubt——

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to suggest another objection to his proposed substitute. He would direct the Committee on Privileges and Elections to rewrite the bill. No one knows whether the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which reported the bill, would be able to rewrite it or to carry out the instruction, and I assume, by analogy, that if they could not rewrite the bill they would have to come back with it as it is.

The Senator seeks to make the bill the special order for March 26. In all probability we will be in the midst of the discussion and consideration of the trade-agreements bill at that time. Under the Senator's substitute that would have to be set aside, and we would have to take the pending measure up again, with the probability that every effort which has been made to interfere with its passage now would be repeated then.

The bill has been reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, presided over by the great Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], for whose legal and legislative ability I have as much respect as for that of any other man in the United States, and in whose membership are other lawyers, who have been sincerely seeking to frame legislation which would accomplish a certain purpose. If the Senate does not desire to vote on the bill, as that committee has sent it to the floor of the Senate, and as it has been amended on the floor, let the bill be sent back to the committee, and let us take chances on it. But I do not believe it is fair to the committee itself, or to the Senate or to our legislative program, to say to the committee, "You have to rewrite the bill and bring it back here on a certain day, and on that day it will be the special order, no matter what we are doing."

For these reasons I cannot vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Maryland, or for the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if we should recommit the bill to the committee without some definite day indicated on which it was to return it, every Member of this body knows it would mean the death of the bill. I am not one of those who believe that we should not have some legislation regarding pernicious political activity. I do not at this time wish to review some unpleasant personal history, and I do not care to bring into the debate at this time certain phases of improper political activities which perhaps should be included in the legislation, at least, but I do wish to leave the thought, that insofar as I know, 90 percent of election activities of which the people do not approve come from sources which are not encompassed in the bill.

For example, if I may leave my own State, I do not believe it was proper for Mr. Harry Hopkins to go into a Western State where a Member of this body was a candidate and say whatever he did say, which had the effect of telling the W. P. A. voters to vote for their "friend," when he was the head of the campaign-fund organization. I do not believe that is proper. Yet there is not a provision in the pending bill, so far as I know, which would prevent Mr. Hopkins from taking off the roll those who receive largess from the Government——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think that is rather definitely accomplished already in the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may be, but my reading of it and understanding of it leads me to say that I question whether it is covered.

I shall not offer further illustrations; it is not necessary. They are too recent and too well known to the Members of this body to need repeating. But I believe the criticism which has been directed toward the pending bill, namely, that it goes after the little fellow too much and does not go after the big fellow enough is sound criticism; and while the little fellow, if he does wrong, should be dealt with, I do not like to punish the little fellow and let the big fellow walk out wholly free.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The things the Senator has been discussing have been already accomplished in the law we passed last year, and there is now pending in a committee of the Senate a bill which goes very far in providing against the use of political influence. I do not believe we could go any further than we have already gone. I wish the Senator would examine that legislation passed last year, and if he has an amendment to that measure, I hope he will offer it; and if he will get it out of the committee I will support him. The subject is pretty well dealt with in the legislation already on the books.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not believe it is possible by amendment to give consideration to all the phases of this subject which should be given.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. In just a moment. I do say that the Senator, in his righteous and proper desire to improve the election conditions in this country, has been seeking to exclude political participation by employees rather than seeking to outlaw the pernicious practices themselves, regardless of from what source they come.

I say that to the Senator, and I am going to say further that if the motions to recommit fail, I shall vote for the Senator's bill. I cannot give him any better evidence of my complete good faith and cooperation with him than that. But it would not be fair for him or anyone else to assume that I think that the bill as drawn is the best kind of law we can fashion to deal with this subject. I am convinced that if it goes back to the committee after this debate we shall have a better proposal than the one which is now pending. In past experience too often when we have relied on the other branch and the conferees to clear up imperfections in a then pending measure, we have lived to rue the day, and I think we have reached the time when what may be called resoluting rather than legislating ought to be abandoned.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield once more to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. The point I made did not relate to the pending bill. I wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that in the bill we passed last year all the activities he is talking about are actually prohibited and made violations of criminal law. Some of them were not framed by me. I remember one section was drafted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. But if the law we passed last year does not go sufficiently far, I want the Senator to study it, and if it can be improved, suggest an amendment, and let the amendment go to the committee and be reported. I shall work with the Senator, because no man wants to make it stronger or better than I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure the Senator is absolutely correct in his last statement. I do not question for a moment that he has had other than a single purpose in mind, and that is the welfare of the country at large. I am with him in that respect. I am not convinced, however, that the method he has proposed to accomplish that result is the best method which this body can devise.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not interested in the controversy. I shall vote against both proposals. I disagree with my very distinguished leader the able Senator from Kentucky. If a special order is made the rule, it does not displace the unfinished business. So if next Monday the Senate should be considering the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and we had not concluded the debate, and the bill had not been put on its final passage, the special order would not interfere with nor would it in any way displace the pending business.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in line with what the Senator from Oregon has just said, within my right as the proposer of the amendment, I move to strike out the words "special order" and to insert the words "unfinished business," which would bring the measure before the Senate instantly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no difference between the Senator from Oregon and me. The result would be, of course, that whatever was pending at the time would be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of this bill, if reported back by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. There cannot be any collision between the two orders. Action under the special order comes whenever the opportunity is given.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall surrender the floor, but before I do so I wish to make a brief statement. This is the final word I shall say in defense of my motion to recommit to the committee and require a new report. I want the Senator from New Mexico to listen to me, particularly with respect to this matter, for while the realm of prophecy is a dangerous one, and I am not going to undertake the role of a prophet, I am going to suggest what might be a likely happening. If the bill passes the Senate in the shape in which it now is, it is my conjecture, at least, that it will never become law. It is my conjecture that if it passes the Senate in its present form it will not be passed at this session, unless the Congress stays in session practically the whole year, in which event my conjecture perhaps would not be quite sound.

Therefore, feeling that in its present shape at some place or other along the way it is going to run into difficulty and perhaps be defeated, I made the motion feeling that, if it were acted upon, the worthy ambitions and the work which the Senator from New Mexico has done to accomplish them would not be lost. I am very hopeful that others may see it as I do.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had not quite concluded my remarks. I say I am not interested in the controversy. I think I shall have to make a point of order against the so-called substitute of the Senator from Maryland. A special order requires a two-thirds vote in order to prevail. It is not in the same parliamentary classification as the motion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], which requires a majority vote to prevail. In my opinion, the mere deletion of the words "special order" and insertion of the words "unfinished business" does not change the character of the motion. Therefore I make a point of order against the motion made by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the Chair ready to rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that, under rule X, a two-thirds vote of the Senators present is required for the adoption of the special order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Such a motion is in order, according to the ruling of the Chair, but it would require a two-thirds vote to adopt it. Am I correct in that assumption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Senator is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, just a moment. Let me obtain an answer from the Chair, so I may know what I am talking about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement of the Senator from Maryland is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I were to change the wording in the latter part of my motion to recommit, namely, that the measure be reported to the Senate not later than Monday, March 25, and that on Tuesday, March 26, or as soon thereafter as the then pending business before the Senate shall be concluded, it be made the unfinished business, would such motion require a two-thirds majority for its adoption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be the same sort of motion as a motion to make the measure a special order.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, it would require a two-thirds vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I prefer to let it stand as it is and stand or fall on the two-thirds vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understood the point of order made by the Senator from Oregon, it was that a motion requiring a two-thirds vote could not properly be substituted for a motion requiring only a majority vote, because they are in different parliamentary categories?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland would require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the point of order I made was stated plainly a moment ago. I contend that the motion cannot be in the form of a substitute, since the motion requires a different vote than the one originally offered. For instance, the motion made by the Senator from Illinois requires a majority vote. The motion made in the nature of a substitute by the Senator from Maryland requires a two-thirds vote. Therefore they are not in the same category, and one cannot be a substitute for the other. That is just as plain as anything in the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is correct in his interpretation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, Mr. President, I offer my motion, as follows, under my right to modify it: That the bill S. 3046 be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections with instructions to rewrite the bill and report it not later than Monday, March 25. After that date, of course, it will be in order by a majority vote of this body to take up the bill at any time when the then pending unfinished business is disposed of. There cannot be any question about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on that matter I merely wish to say that if the Senator from Maryland really wants to kill the legislation the motion he suggests is an effective means of doing it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to kill it.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, Mr. President. I know it has been said here often that amendments have been offered in all good faith, and not for the purpose of killing the measure, and I know that the Senator from Maryland feels as he now expresses himself; but if the motion should prevail, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which I happen to be chairman, would be compelled immediately to resolve itself into a session and commence work upon this legislation. Everyone knows that there is pending here and ready to be taken up the agricultural appropriation bill. Because I come from a State which is three-fourths or nearly 85 percent agricultural, I am obliged to give some attention to that measure. I happen also to be a member of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and everyone familiar with the legislative program knows very well that the bill to renew the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act has already been favorably reported to the Senate, and that it awaits action on the agricultural appropriation bill and will be taken up immediately following the action on that bill.

Mr. President, it is hardly possible that anyone familiar with the legislative processes of this body can believe that the two measures to which I have referred can be concluded in time to enable the Committee on Privileges and Elections to do what the motion suggests. Several members of that committee are on the Committee on Appropriations, from which comes the agricultural appropriation bill, and some of its members are also members of the Finance Committee. I think it is known that the chairman of the committee necessarily will be interested in the other legislation pending before this body.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I can simplify the matter if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I will be glad to yield, but I am simply saying to the Senator that what he is proposing is an impossibility.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it is perfectly apparent from the brief discussion which has taken place here, in which very sincere opposition has been manifested by the majority leader, the minority leader, and the chairman of the committee involved, as well as Members on both sides, that this debate is simply wasting time and that the motion which I have proposed in all good faith has not a chance of being adopted. I have no desire to delay the bill, and therefore withdraw my substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to recommit.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to have the motion of the Senator from Illinois read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion made by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The legislative clerk read the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], as follows:

I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for further study and consideration, special reference being had to section 15.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Holt	Reed
Andrews	Davis	Hughes	Reynolds
Ashurst	Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Austin	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Bailey	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Barbour	George	Lucas	Shipstead
Barkley	Gerry	Lundeen	Smathers
Bilbo	Gibson	McCarran	Smith
Bridges	Gillette	McKellar	Stewart
Brown	Glass	McNary	Taft
Bulow	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Burke	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hale	Minton	Townsend

Caraway	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Chandler	Hayden	Nye	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pepper	Wheeler
Connally	Holman	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. On this question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are detained in Government departments.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Maryland, and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "nay," and the Senator from Utah would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is detained on official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—31

Adams	Connally	Hill	Pepper
Bailey	Donahey	Hughes	Pittman
Bankhead	Ellender	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Glass	Lundeen	Smathers
Brown	Guffey	McKellar	Smith
Bulow	Harrison	Maloney	Stewart

Danaher	Holt	Russell	Wiley

NOT VOTING—13

Bone	Murray	Radcliffe	Truman
Chavez	Norris	Slattery	Wagner
Johnson, Calif.	O'Mahoney	Tobey	White
King

So the motion of Mr. LUCAS to recommit was rejected.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I propose an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from West Virginia will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That after 60 days from the enactment of this act no officer or employee of the United States shall pay to any State or any agency or political subdivisions of such State any moneys appropriated by the Congress for payment or allocation to the States or agencies or political subdivisions thereof, nor shall any such officer or employee order or approve the allocation or delivery to any State or agency or political subdivision of such State of anything of value otherwise authorized to be delivered or allocated to States or agencies or political subdivisions thereof, unless such State has in operation a State civil-service plan currently approved by the United States Civil Service Commission (hereinafter referred to as "the Commission").

SEC. 2. (a) A State civil-service plan must—

(1) provide that any person (other than an officer elected by direct vote of the people) employed in a civil capacity, any part of whose compensation is paid from any such moneys or from any fund into which any such moneys are placed, or who is employed in connection with the expenditure or distribution of any such moneys, or whose duties are in connection with the use or distribution of any such thing of value, shall be selected solely upon the basis of merit after an open, competitive, fair, and practical examination;

(2) provide that no such person shall be promoted to a more remunerative position unless he has performed the duties of the position from which he is promoted with a sufficient degree of efficiency to warrant his promotion;

(3) provide that no such person shall be under any obligation to contribute to any fund for political purposes or to render any political service;

(4) prohibit any such person from taking any active part in any political management or in any political campaign;

(5) provide that no such person shall be denied the right to vote as he pleases and privately to express his opinions on all political subjects;

(6) provide that no such person shall be retained in such employment if such person, or any other person who is the husband, wife, father, mother, brother, sister, child, father-in-law, mother-in-law, brother-in-law, or sister-in-law of any such person, is an officer or member of any National, State, county, district, city, or other political committee or any other organization performing substantially the same functions as any such committee;

(7) provide that any officer or employee of the State or any of its agencies or political subdivisions who attempts or is a party to any attempt to coerce the political action of any such person, to collect or exact a contribution to a fund for political purposes from any such person, or to remove any such person from his position or demote or degrade him because of his failure to render any political service or make any such contribution, shall, upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction, be removed from his office or employment and be subject to imprisonment;

(8) provide for such methods of administration as are found by the Commission to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan;

(9) provide that the agency administering such plan shall make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commission may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Commission may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

(10) provide for the establishment by the agency administering such plan, but only after open, competitive, fair, and practical examinations, of registers of persons eligible to fill vacancies in the various classes of positions required by this act to be filled in accordance with such plan and provide that the officer or employee filling any such vacancy shall make his selection from among the three available persons on the register who rank highest in order of merit; and

(11) provide that the agency administering such plan shall be a commission and that the members of such commission shall not all be affiliated with the same political party.

(b) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit any such plan from providing that in the appointment of any such person a preferential allowance may be granted to him on account of his having served in the Army or Navy of the United States.

(c) The Commission shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

(d) In the case of any plan which has been approved by the Commission, if the Commission, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering such plan, finds that the plan has been so changed or is so administered that there is a failure to comply with any provision required by subsection (a) to be included in such plan, the Commission shall withdraw its approval of such plan and shall notify the Governor of such State that its approval of such plan has been withdrawn. Such plan shall not be again approved until the Commission finds that there is no longer any such failure to comply.

(e) The Commission shall cause notice to be printed in the Federal Register of any action taken by it under the provisions of subsections (c) and (d) of this section.

SEC. 3. (a) The application of the provisions of the first section of this act with respect to any State may be suspended until April 1, 1942, by order of the United States Civil Service Commission if such Commission is satisfied, on the basis of evidence submitted to it by or on behalf of such State: (1) That action by the legislature of such State is necessary for the establishment of a civil-service plan which conforms with the provisions of section 2 (a), and (2) that conditions in such State are such that there is in fact substantially actual compliance with the requirements which are specified in section 2 (a) to be contained in a civil-service plan.

(b) Any order of the United States Civil Service Commission issued under subsection (a) may be revoked or suspended by such Commission if, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State, such Commission finds that conditions in such State are not such that there is in fact substantially actual compliance with the requirements which are specified in section 2 (a) to be contained in a civil-service plan.

(c) The Commission shall cause notice to be printed in the Federal Register of any action taken by it under this section.

SEC. 4. (a) The Commission is authorized, upon request from the agency administering a State civil-service plan, to give examinations for the purpose of determining the qualifications of applicants for employment under the provisions of the civil-service laws of such State, to grade the examination papers of such applicants, and to prepare registers of applicants found to be qualified as a result of such examinations.

(b) Expenses incurred by the Commission in carrying out the provisions of subsection (a) shall be reimbursed to the Commission by the State on behalf of which such expenses are incurred. Any sums paid to the Commission under the provisions of this subsection shall be covered into the Treasury and shall be credited to the appropriate appropriation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, during the last 2 weeks the Senate has repeatedly demonstrated its determination to extend to certain State employees Federal protection against the tyranny of unscrupulous politicians and the oppression of ruthless political machines.

In choosing between the toothless bill and the far-reaching substitute before us, let us emulate the wisdom of Lord Chesterfield's famous observation that "whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well."

The bill provides no standard of merit for the selection of State employees. The substitute does. The bill does not even attempt to deliver State employees from the bandits who are pillaging them of 2 percent of their compensation for political purposes. The substitute proposes absolute protection for these plundered victims of State political machines.

If the substitute becomes a law, Federal funds will thereafter be granted to the States only upon satisfactory guaranties that the money supplied will be expended for the benefit of all the people and that none of it will be used to finance the waging of factional warfare or the winning of political battles.

Ample, conclusive, and unquestioned evidence of the extortion of money from State employees in West Virginia for political purposes has been laid before you.

The prevalence of this degrading evil from the Potomac to the Ohio and from the southern border of our State to the Mason and Dixon's line has long been a matter of common knowledge and general condemnation. Until after the Senate began to consider the pending measure no West Virginian was ever foolish enough or base enough publicly to attempt to justify the systematic political highway robbery of State employees that is so notoriously pursued by the operators of the statehouse machine.

But at last the indefensible has a self-constituted champion and defender. The little Governor of West Virginia, who is the titular head of the racketeers who are blackjacking untold thousands of dollars out of those on the State pay roll for political and factional purposes, has rushed headlong into the press in an effort to justify the 2-percent levy which his administration is laying on the pay envelopes of those in the service of the State.

Our little Governor does not attempt to controvert the evidence before us which proves the guilt of the greedy henchmen who are subject to his control. No; the little Governor simply abuses me for having attempted to outlaw his racket. He even charges, in effect, that my efforts in behalf of the pending measure constitute an attempt to destroy the Democratic Party. My reply to this petulant outburst of passion on the part of our irritated little Governor is that my devotion to the principles of the historic and honorable party of Jefferson is such as to impel me to protect it to the limit of my capacity against all who commit intolerable offenses against all the people in its name.

I challenge the little Governor's implied contention that democracy can assure its prosperity by maintaining a partnership with rascality.

Among many other things our little Governor says:

> No one denies that many State employees voluntarily contribute to the legitimate expenses of the party. No one denies that the members of some of the various party organizations have more or less established the sentiment that instead of biennial solicitations for necessary campaign funds just before the elections, it is more practicable for small amounts to be contributed periodically and the thought seems to be that 2 percent of the wages earned is a reasonable standard of ability to contribute.

Does the Senate concur in this opinion? Does it approve the extortion of 7 cents tribute from the man who drew $3.50 pay in a month from the State Highway Department of West Virginia in the case which was recently presented to you?

But are the contributions under consideration voluntary?

I read from a letter dated Parkersburg, W. Va., March 10, 1940. In confidence I invite any Member of the Senate or any official of this body to come forward and inspect it. But the name of the man who wrote it must be withheld because he is today on the State pay roll and he would be discharged immediately if his identity were made known.

The letter is as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR NEELY: As a matter of principle, I would like to give three loud cheers for your action in regard to the Two Percent Club, but as a matter of personal policy, being employed by the S. R. C.—

The State Road Commission of West Virginia—

I feel that I should keep silent, but I cannot resist telling you of a little incident.

On yesterday forenoon Mr. Robert Gover, of Fayetteville, W. Va., who is engineer for this, the third district, called all of the employees into conference. He is about as popular with employees and public as a rattlesnake. He strutted pompously in carrying a morning paper which gave an account of your action before the Senate. He read it with various uncomplimentary remarks, and announced to all assembled, especially those in arrears, that they must come across with their assessment by the 1st of April.

That is a month and 14 days before the next primary election to be held in West Virginia.

He asked them to say nothing about the meeting. They all agreed to this, but I think it safe to say that everyone had murder in his heart at the "must" attitude that was used by Mr. Gover.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Most sincerely yours,

——— ———.

This correspondent's reputation and veracity are above suspicion.

Here is a letter from Belington, W. Va., dated March 12, 1940, addressed to me:

I notice in the paper where you are going to bring charges against the State administration for extortion from the State employees.

Here is a statement I wish to make: Two years ago I was working at the mines. I got laid off. I needed work, so I went to the State road office in Barbour County and asked for work. I was given a few days' work, which I accepted; and when pay day came the boss gave me my check. He said I owed him 60 cents. I asked him what for, and then he explained that I was to pay back so much for campaign funds, which I did pay, and on different times.

* * * * * * *

I am ready to make a sworn affidavit or appear as a witness any time.

Yours respectfully,

G. P. ERVIN, Belington, W. Va.

A merchant in a small town in West Virginia writes as follows:

MARCH 12, 1940.

In regard to your stand and the statements made by you about the Two Percent Club of our statehouse gang, I have had direct knowledge of this ever since it was formed. I run a store at the above address, and I have had to pay this 2 percent, or "flower money," as it is called, for these men working on State highways here, and during the winter these men were not making but 2 and 3 days a month, possibly one check for $3.20, the next for $6.40 per month, and the 2 percent had to be paid, though these men had no other income of any kind.

On several occasions one assistant supervisor * * * has collected this money and did not turn it in, so the men had to pay it again. * * * I am sincerely hoping you can and will help to clean up things like this.

Respectfully yours.

Signed by the man who wrote the letter, who requests that his name be withheld from the public. Any Senator is at liberty to inspect this communication.

Mr. President, thus we fully understand what the little Governor of West Virginia means by "voluntary contributions." He means the 2-percent contribution, which his appointees are, with the indispensable aid of their blackjacks, filching from the pay envelopes of State employees.

It is my hope that, regardless of whatever else the Senate may or may not do, it will express its unmeasured condemnation of the voluntary contributions which are so dear to the heart of the little Governor of West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in the nature of a substitute for section 15.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Hughes	Reynolds
Andrews	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard

Clark, Idaho	Hill	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holman	Pittman	White
Connally	Holt	Reed	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in the nature of a substitute for section 15.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated? I have made a slight modification in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, it is proposed to strike out lines 4 to 13, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 15. The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined are at the time of the passage of this act prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service of the United States by the provisions of the civil-service rules prohibiting such employees from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico a question? How many of those regulations and rules are there?

Mr. HATCH. I am not familiar with them. They have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MINTON. Are they on this card which has been shown to Senators?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; those are the entire rules, as I have been informed.

Mr. MINTON. That is all that the Civil Service Commission has in the way of prohibitions against political activities on the part of those in the classified civil service?

Mr. HATCH. That is my information.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator merely take someone else's word for that?

Mr. HATCH. I asked the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator make some investigation of the matter?

Mr. HATCH. I made some investigation, and am perfectly satisfied to have the list placed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, are the various items 1, 2, 3, 4, and so on, the Senator's interpretation of the rules? Is that the form in which the rules were sent to the Senator by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. They have been condensed somewhat.

Mr. MINTON. I thought so. So if they are published in the RECORD, they are not the verbatim report of the Civil Service Commission, which has put its interpretation of these various prohibitions?

Mr. HATCH. I think there is no question that they cover the entire substance of the rules. I mean it is not possible for anyone to be misled by them in any degree whatever.

Mr. MINTON. At least the Senator says they are not the rules of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. For the most part they are.

Mr. MINTON. But in some part they are not; that is true, is it not? In some part they are not the rules of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. MINTON. In other words, this list is the Senator's version of what the Civil Service Commission's rules are. Is that correct?

Mr. HATCH. It is copied from the rules themselves.

Mr. MINTON. I hold in my hand an official publication of the United States Government, obtained from the library of the United States Senate, called the Civil Service Act. Rules, Statutes, Executive Orders, and Regulations, Amended to June 30, 1939.

The civil-service rules with reference to politics begin on page 13 and extend to and include page 80. Has the Senator investigated the various rules on pages 13 to 80, in the light of the card which he has circulated throughout the country as the official rules of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator finished his question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I have not examined the publication the Senator has in his hand. Of that I am quite sure. I sent to the Civil Service Commission for a copy of its rules with respect to political activity. They had published a digest, a list of those rules, in a separate publication. I thought I had it here with me, but I do not see it at this time. The Senator can obtain it. It is a public document. I will furnish it to him, or he can obtain a copy from the Civil Service Commission. It was from that that the information was gleaned which was placed on this card.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator does not have with him the communication from the Civil Service Commission from which he compiled these rules?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. MINTON. Then there is nothing authentic to put into the RECORD to show what the rules are.

Mr. HATCH. I ask permission at this time to place that matter in the RECORD, and I shall furnish it to the reporters at a later time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

III. PARTICULAR TYPES OF PROHIBITED ACTIVITIES

11. As has been pointed out, it is impossible to make a complete enumeration of all the particular types of political activities in which Government employees may not engage. The general scope of the political-activity rule has been defined in section 2 above. In the following sections some of the types of political activity which occur more frequently are discussed in detail.

12. Activity by indirection: Any political activity which is prohibited in the case of an employee acting independently is also prohibited in the case of an employee acting in open or secret cooperation with others. Whatever the employee may not do directly or personally, he may not do indirectly or through an agent, officer, or employee chosen by him or subject to his control. Employees are therefore accountable for political activity by persons other than themselves, including wives or husbands, if, in fact, the employees are thus accomplishing by collusion and indirection what they may not lawfully do directly and openly. Political activity in fact, regardless of the methods or means used by the employee, constitutes the violation.

This does not mean that an employee's husband or wife may not engage in politics independently, upon his or her own initiative, and in his or her own behalf. Cases have arisen, however, in which the facts showed that the real purpose of a wife's activity was to accomplish a political act prohibited to her husband, the attempt being made for her husband's benefit and at his instigation or even upon his coercion. This may be true of individuals or it may occur among groups of employees' wives, associated for the purpose of securing for their husbands what their husbands may not secure for themselves. In such situations it is obvious that the prohibitions against political activity are being indirectly violated. The collusion or coercion renders the wife's activity imputable to the husband, he being guilty of the same infraction as if he were openly a participant.

13. Conventions: Candidacy for or service as delegate, alternate, or proxy in any political convention or service as an officer or employee thereof is prohibited. Attendance merely as a spectator is permissible, but the employee so attending must not take any part in the convention or in the deliberations or proceedings of any of its committees, and must refrain from any public display of partisanship or obtrusive demonstration or interference. (See secs. 4 and 19.)

14. Primaries—caucuses: An employee may attend a primary meeting, mass convention, beat convention, caucus, and the like, and may cast his vote on any question presented, but he may not pass this point in participating in its deliberations. He may not act as an officer of the meeting, convention, or caucus, may not address it, make motions, prepare or assist in preparing resolutions, assume to represent others, or take any prominent part therein.

15. Committees: Service on or for any political committee or similar organization is prohibited. An employee may attend as a spectator any meeting of a political committee to which the general public is admitted, but must refrain from activity as indicated in the preceding paragraphs.

Whether a committee has an ultimate political purpose determines whether a classified employee may properly serve as a member. Assignment may be to duties which, if considered alone, would seem far removed from active politics, but which, when considered as a part of the whole purpose, assume an active political character. No attempt can be made to differentiate between workers on or under political committees with respect to the degree to which they are politically active.

16. Clubs and organizations: Employees may be members of political clubs, but it is improper for them to be active in organizing such a club, to be officers of the club, or members or officers of any of its committees or to act as such, or to address a political club. Service as a delegate from such a club to a league of political clubs is service as an officer or representative of a political club and is prohibited, as is service as a delegate or representative of such a club to or in any other organization. In other words, an employee may become a member of a political club, but may not take an active part in its management or affairs, and may not represent other members or attempt to influence them by his actions or utterances. (See secs. 4 and 19.)

Section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555), provides in part—

"That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike, or proposing to assist them in any strike, against the United States, having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said Postal Service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service."

Section 9A of the act of August 2, 1939 (Public, No. 252, 76th Cong.), provides as follows:

"(1) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States.

"(2) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person."

17. Contributions: An employee may make political contributions to any committee, organization, or person not employed by the United States, but may not solicit, collect, receive, or otherwise handle or disburse the contributions. (See provisions of the Criminal Code, discussed in secs. 36 to 50.)

18. Meetings: Service in preparing for, organizing, or conducting a political meeting or rally, addressing such a meeting, or taking any part therein, except as a spectator, is prohibited.

19. Expression of opinions: Although section 9 (a) of the act of August 2, 1939 reserves to Federal officers and employees the right to express their opinions on all political subjects, officers and employees in the competitive classified service are subject also to section 1 of civil-service rule I, under which such employees must confine themselves to a private expression of opinion. Nonclassified and excepted employees may not indulge in such public expression of opinion as constitutes taking part in an organized political campaign. (See foregoing secs. 1 and 4.)

20. Activity at the polls and for candidates: An employee has the right to vote as he pleases, and to exercise this right free from interference, solicitation, or dictation by any fellow employee or superior officer or any other person. It is a violation of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act to pay or offer to pay any person for voting or refraining from voting, or for voting for or against any candidate for Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress. It is also a violation of the law to solicit, receive, or accept payment for one's vote or for withholding one's vote. (See U. S. Code, title 2, sec. 250.)

Under the act of August 2, 1939, it is a criminal offense for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote as he may choose in any election of a national character. It is also a criminal offense to promise any employment, position, work, or compensation, or other benefit made possible by an act of Congress, as a consideration, favor, or reward for political activity or for the support of or opposition to any political candidate or party. (See secs. 48 and 50 herein.)

It is the duty of an employee to avoid any offensive activity at primary and regular elections. He must refrain from soliciting votes, assisting voters to mark ballots, helping to get out the voters on registration and election days, acting as the accredited checker, watcher, or challenger of any party or faction, assisting in counting the vote, or engaging in any other activity at the polls except the marking and depositing of his own ballot. Rendering service, such as transporting voters to and from the polls and candidates on canvassing tours, whether for pay or gratuitously, is held to be within the scope of political activities prohibited by the rule, even if such service is performed without regard to political party.

21. Election officers: Service as judge of election, inspector, checker, teller, or as election officer of any kind is prohibited.

22. Newspapers—publication of letters or articles: A classified employee may not publish or be connected editorially or managerially with any political newspaper, and may not write for publication or publish any letter or article, signed or unsigned, in favor of or against any political party, candidate, faction, or measure. An employee who writes such a letter or article is responsible for any use that may be made of it whether or not he gives consent to such use. (See secs. 4 and 19.)

23. Liquor question: Activity in campaigns concerning the regulation or suppression of the liquor traffic is prohibited. An employee may be a member but not an officer of a club, league, or other organization which takes part in such a campaign. The dissemination of temperance propaganda is permissible, but any endeavor for or against the regulation, control, or suppression of the liquor traffic through political agencies is prohibited.

24. Betting or wagering on elections: Betting or wagering upon the results of primary and general elections is penalized by the laws of most States and is improper political activity.

25. Activity in civic organizations and citizens' associations: Activity in organizations having for their primary object the promotion of good government or the local civic welfare is not prohibited by the act of August 2, 1939, or civil-service rule I, provided such activities have no connection with the campaigns of particular candidates or parties.

26. Parades: An employee may not march in a political parade, organize, or be an officer or leader of such a parade.

A Government employee may not take part in the activities of a musical organization in any parade or other activity of a political party.

27. Signing petitions: The first amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." Section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555), provides that "the right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress, or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to any committee or Member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with."

The right guaranteed by the Constitution and the statute extends only to petitions addressed to the Government, or to Congress or Members thereof. It does not extend to petitions addressed to State, county, or municipal governments, or to other political units. A classified employee is permitted to sign petitions of the latter class as an individual, without reference to his connection with the Government, but he may not initiate them, circulate them, or canvass for the signatures of others.

28. Applying for Presidential positions not in the classified service: [1] When a classified employee seeks promotion by appointment or transfer to a Presidential office not in the classified service, there is no objection to his becoming a candidate for such an office, provided the consent of his department is obtained, and provided he does not violate section 1 of rule I, prohibiting the use of his official authority or influence in political matters, and provided further that he does not neglect his duty and avoids any action that would cause public scandal or semblance of coercion of his fellow employees or of those over whom he desires to be placed in the position he seeks.

A classified employee may circulate a petition or seek endorsements for his own appointment to a Presidential position, subject to the qualifications above stated, and he may, as an individual, sign a petition or recommend another person for such an appointment; but he may not circulate a petition or solicit endorsements, recommendations, or support for the appointment of another person to such a position, whether such other person is a fellow employee or one not at the time in the Government service.

When an unofficial primary or election is held for the purpose of determining the popular choice for the Presidential office, a classified employee may permit his name to appear upon the ticket, but he may not solicit votes in his behalf at such a primary or election, or in any manner violate section 1 of rule I. He may vote and express privately his opinions, but may not solicit votes or publicly advocate the candidacy or election of himself or any other person. Although it is permissible for a classified employee, as an individual, to sign a petition or recommend another person for appointment to a nonclassified position, he is not permitted to sign such a petition as a Government employee or in any other way to use his official authority or influence to advance the candidacy of any person for election or appointment to any office. Classified employees are permitted to exercise the right as individuals to sign a petition favoring a candidate for any office, but they may not do so as Government employees or as a group or association of Government employees.

29. Other forms of political activity: Among other forms of political activity which are prohibited are the distribution of campaign literature, badges, or buttons, and assuming general political leadership or becoming prominently identified with any political movement, party, or faction, or with the success or failure of any candidate for election to public office.

IV. CANDIDACY FOR OR HOLDING LOCAL OFFICE—CLASSIFIED AND NONCLASSIFIED EMPLOYEES

30. Candidacy for local office: Candidacy for a nomination or for election to any National, State, county, or municipal office is not permissible. The prohibition against political activity extends not merely to formal announcement of candidacy but also to the preliminaries leading to such announcement and to canvassing or soliciting support or doing or permitting to be done any act in furtherance of candidacy. The fact that candidacy is merely passive is immaterial; if an employee acquiesces in the efforts of friends in furtherance of such candidacy, such acquiescence constitutes an infraction of the prohibitions against political activity.

31. Federal employees holding local office: [2] Persons holding Federal civil office by appointment, whether in the competitive classified service or not, are prohibited from accepting or holding any office under a State, Territorial, or municipal government by an Executive order of January 17, 1873, which is as follows:

"Whereas it has been brought to the notice of the President of the United States that many persons holding civil office by appointment from him or otherwise under the Constitution and laws of the United States while holding such Federal positions accept offices under the authority of the States and Territories in which they reside, or of municipal corporations, under the charters and ordinances of such corporations, thereby assuming the duties of the State, Territorial, or municipal office at the same time that they are charged with the duties of the civil office held under Federal authority:

"And whereas it is believed that, with but few exceptions, the holding of two such offices by the same person is incompatible with a due and faithful discharge of the duties of either office; that it frequently gives rise to great inconvenience, and often results in detriment to the public service; and, moreover, is not in harmony with the genius of the Government:

"In view of the premises, therefore, the President has deemed it proper thus and hereby to give public notice that, from and after the 4th day of March A. D. 1873 (except as herein specified), persons holding any Federal civil office by appointment under the Constitution and laws of the United States will be expected, while holding such office, not to accept or hold any office under any State or Territorial government, or under the charter or ordinances of any municipal corporation; and, further, that the acceptance or continued holding of any such State, Territorial, or municipal office, whether elective or by appointment, by any person holding civil office as aforesaid under the Government of the United States, other than judicial offices under the Constitution of the United States, will be deemed a vacation of the Federal office held by such person, and will be taken to be and will be treated as a resignation by such Federal officer of his commission or appointment in the service of the United States.

"The offices of justices of the peace, of notaries public, and of commissioners to take the acknowledgment of deeds, of bail, or to administer oaths, shall not be deemed within the purview of this order and are excepted from its operation, and may be held by Federal officers.

"The appointment of deputy marshals of the United States may be conferred upon sheriffs or deputy sheriffs. Any deputy postmasters, the emoluments of whose office do not exceed $600 per annum, are also excepted from the operation of this order and may accept and hold appointments under State, Territorial, or municipal authority, provided the same be found not to interfere with the discharge of their duties as postmasters.[3] Heads of departments and other officers of the Government who have the appointment of subordinate officers are required to take notice of this order, and to see to the enforcement of its provisions and terms within the sphere of their respective departments or offices and as relates to the several persons holding appointments under them, respectively.[4]"

32. Interpretation of the order of January 17, 1873: An Executive order of January 28, 1873, as amended by Executive order of August 27, 1933, is as follows:

"Inquiries having been made from various quarters as to the application of the Executive order issued on the 17th of January relating to the holding of State or municipal offices by persons hold-

[1] Appointment is made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to postmaster positions of the first, second and third classes, but these positions are in the competitive classified service under the act of June 25, 1938.

[2] See sec. 35.

[3] See sec. 8.

[4] A Federal employee who resigns at the expiration of his accrued leave may accept a State or municipal position after his last day of active Federal service (16 Comp. Gen. 776, Feb. 19, 1937).

ing civil offices under the Federal Government, the President directs the following reply to be made:

"It has been asked whether the order prohibits a Federal officer from holding also the office of an alderman or of a common councilman in a city, or of a town councilman of a town or village, or of appointments under city, town, or village governments. By some it has been suggested that there may be distinction made in case the office be with or without salary or compensation. The city or town offices of the description referred to, by whatever names they may be locally known, whether held by election or by appointment, and whether with or without salary or compensation, are of the class which the Executive order intends not to be held by persons holding Federal offices.

"It has been asked whether the order prohibits Federal officers from holding positions on boards of education, school committees, public libraries, religious or eleemosynary institutions incorporated or established or sustained by State or municipal authority. Positions and service on such boards and committees, and professorships in colleges [5] are not regarded as 'offices' within the contemplation of the Executive order, but as employments or service in which all good citizens may be engaged without incompatibility and in many cases without necessary interference with any position which they may hold under the Federal Government. Officers of the Federal Government may therefore engage in such service, provided the attention required by such employment does not interfere with the regular and efficient discharge of the duties of their office under the Federal Government. The head of the department under whom the Federal office is held will in all cases be the sole judge whether or not the employment does thus interfere.

"The question has also been asked with regard to officers of the State militia. Congress having exercised the power conferred by the Constitution to provide for organizing the militia, which is liable to be called forth to be employed in the service of the United States, and is thus, in some sense, under the control of the General Government, and is, moreover, of the greatest value to the public, the Executive order of the 17th January is not considered as prohibiting Federal officers from being officers in the militia in the States and Territories.

"It has been asked whether the order prohibits persons holding office under the Federal Government being members of local or municipal fire departments, also whether it applies to mechanics employed by the day in the armories, arsenals, and navy yards, etc., of the United States. Unpaid service in local or municipal fire departments is not regarded as an office within the intent of the Executive order, and may be performed by Federal officers, provided it does not interfere with the regular and efficient discharge of the duties of the Federal office, of which the head of the department under which the office is held will in each case be the judge.

"Mechanics and laborers employed by the day in armories, arsenals, navy yards, etc., and master workmen and others who hold appointments from the Government or from any department, whether for a fixed time or at the pleasure of the appointing power, are embraced within the operation of the order."

33. Eligibles holding local office: Eligibles who are holding a local office not excepted from the prohibitions of the order of January 17, 1873, on selection for and acceptance of any position in the competitive classified service or of unclassified laborer must immediately resign the local office. Such resignation must be effected whether the service in the local office is compensated or uncompensated or whether the employee is on active duty or leave without pay. The holding of a local office not excepted from the prohibitions of the order of January 17, 1873, is an absolute disqualification for appointment, and unless persons otherwise eligible for appointment are willing immediately to resign the local office in the event of selection for appointment, their appointments cannot be approved.

34. Minor local offices which may be held by Government officers and employees: Although the Executive orders of January 17 and January 28, 1873, prohibit generally any person holding Federal civil office by appointment, from accepting or holding an office under a State, Territorial, or municipal government, certain offices of a minor character are excepted from this general prohibition. Among these are positions of justice of the peace; notary public; commissioner to take acknowledgment of deeds, of bail, or to administer oaths; positions on boards of education, school committees, public libraries, and in religious or eleemosynary institutions. In addition, Federal employees are, under certain conditions, permitted to hold other local offices under authority of the Executive orders set forth in section 35. The permission to hold local offices granted by these Executive orders, however, is now subject to the general prohibition of section 9 of the act of August 2, 1939 (see sec. 1), against participation in political management and in political campaigns by Federal employees.

In view of the broad language of section 9 of the act of August 2, 1939, the incumbency by a Federal employee of any elective office whatever under a State, Territorial, or municipal government is prohibited, regardless of whether or not the office is of such character that its incumbency was permitted by Executive order prior to the enactment of the act. The incumbency by a Federal employee of an appointive office under a State, Territorial, or municipal government is permissible, provided such incumbency is specifically authorized by some statute or Executive order. In securing such offices, however, and in the discharge of the duties thereof, Federal employees must not engage in political management.

[5] Includes assistant professorships in a State college, assistant lectureships in an evening school of a municipal university, instructorships in a State college, and similar positions in State and municipal colleges and universities. (Minutes of Commission, August 7, 1937.)

Mr. MINTON. Of course, it will not do us much good to lock the stable after the horse is stolen. It will not do much good to put into the RECORD the rules and regulations we are writing into the statute, if we do not know what they are. No one on the floor of the Senate, not even the Senator from New Mexico, now knows what these rules and regulations are. Yet we are going to write them into a statute. We are going to make them the law of the land, and we are going to muzzle a couple of million employees of the States of the United States on the basis of something which the Senator from New Mexico does not know. He does not have the document here. He cannot tell us what these regulations are? He cannot tell us what the prohibitions are. He cannot tell us what the limitations are. He cannot tell us where the halter is. Yet he wants us to write that into the law of the land.

Take the substitute which he brings out on the floor of the Senate. The Senator makes a motion to delete a section of his bill and submits an amendment by way of a substitute providing that a lot of regulations shall be written into the law, when there is not a Senator who has even read them other than the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator himself cannot tell us what they are, and he cannot put them in the RECORD now. Yet we are supposed to legislate with that kind of situation confronting us. That is what we did when we came to act upon the original Hatch Act. We acted on the representation that we were protecting people on W. P. A., and we stuck our heads in that halter. Without examining the original Hatch Act we passed it, and I am indicting everyone in the Senate, including myself, for that. I did take a little look at it, when it came back from the House, and the Senator from New Mexico flew into a rage because I assumed to look at the bill which came back from the House and to examine the amendments, as if it were something that the Senate was not entitled to take a look at. We adopted the original Hatch Act without reading it. We did not debate it a minute on the floor of the United States Senate. No Senators knew what was in it. Then the newspapers turned on a big campaign and said it was pure. If the label "pure" is stuck on something there will always be people who will work for it.

This was the purity-in-politics bill. That is what the people of the country thought it was, because that is what certain newspapers said it was. Yet there were more impurities in it than there are in the sewers of Washington.

So we accepted that kind of legislation, and down in your beards every one of you is apologizing now for having accepted the original Hatch Act. Down in your beards you are now mumbling that this is vicious legislation; and yet we want to make matters worse by adopting something about which we do not even know the first letter or syllable.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am through swallowing such bills because somebody in whom I have confidence tells me they are pure. I myself shall take a little look in the future into this purity business. Whenever there are brought before the Senate any more bills designed to strangle the voters of the country and brand their activities as pernicious simply because they want to exercise their God-given American rights to vote as they please, voluntarily, without compulsion or coercion or threats, then I want to rise in my place and nail that thing for what it is.

Mr. President, that is exactly what this bill is. What we are now trying to do is to ram something down the throats of the people of this country under the misleading assumption that we are legislating against pernicious political activity, that we have something pure here, and that everyone who is against it is impure.

I am becoming sick and tired of such implications against those of us who happen to be against this proposed legislation, which has occupied the serious attention of the Senate for the first time, it having been debated now for 2 weeks. I am done with accepting such legislation until serious consideration is given to it.

Mr. President, how much consideration was given to the pending bill in the Committee on Privileges and Elections? I am a member of that committee. Forty-five minutes was given to it. That is how much time the committee gave to it, and only a bare quorum was present. Three of us stood up in the committee and objected to this vicious legislation, and pointed out, as well as we could in 45 minutes, some of the unwise things we thought were being attempted by this legislation. We might just as well have been whistling against the wind. Forty-five minutes' consideration was given in the committee to a bill that Senators have now been considering for 2 weeks. And now the Senator from New Mexico wants to take Hamlet out of the bill and to substitute someone else right at the last minute.

We asked him, "Who is this newly adopted child of yours that you want to hang on the tail end of the bill?" He said "Well, it is one of the stepchildren of the Civil Service Commission."

"What is its name?" "I don't know."

"How old is it?" "I don't know."

"Boy or girl?" "I don't know."

"What is the disposition of the child?" "I don't know."

"Black or white?" "I don't know."

Yet we are asked to take that thing, swallow it whole, and write it into the law. Other Senators may be willing to do that. I am not, as much regard as I have for the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], because I think the Senator and I are far apart on construction as to what the bill does and does not do. From this point on, at least, I shall stand on my own two feet and put my own interpretations upon Hatch Acts.

The Republicans have been sitting over there for a couple of weeks expecting us to "lay an egg," and they would hatch it. [Laughter.] We have plenty of time to save this vicious legislation from passing the Senate, if we want to do so. In reply to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] the other day the Senator from New Mexico said: "Oh, no; I could not agree to have the bill go back to the committee. The time is getting short."

What time is getting short? What is the rush about this bill? An election is coming in November. Is that what he is talking about? We have been having elections in November for 150 years. No one on the other side of the aisle ever worried about purity in elections. The party on the other side of the aisle has been in existence for more than 75 years, and it has not brought in any purity-in-elections bill.

In his colloquy with the Senator from Maryland the other day the Senator from New Mexico said that: "Daily there come to my attention things that ought to be corrected, that we do not think of today." He admits that every day he finds something wrong with his bill, something that ought to be corrected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has misconstrued my remark. I spoke of conditions in politics that were developing every day.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is now referring——

Mr. HATCH. I then referred to such conditions.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator then referred and now refers to conditions he expects to get around to. He expects to get around to taking care of those things. He has something that goes with this bill that we have not yet seen.

I am reminded of a story told by Chauncey Depew. When he was a boy he and his brothers bought a dog at a county fair and brought him home. Their father objected very strenuously. They had spent all their money on the dog. They took the dog out hunting the first opportunity they had. It was raining, but they took him anyway. But when they got out in the rain hunting with the dog—a black and white spotted dog—the spots on the dog began to run and fade into the white. So they took the dog back to the man from whom they had bought him, and the man said, "Oh, yes; a slight mistake has been made. An umbrella goes with that dog." [Laughter.]

So the Senator from New Mexico has some other bills which go with this bill before the thing will be fit to take. But certainly the Senator from Maryland did not think the bill was in good shape. The Senator from Maryland said:

> In our efforts to cure this defect we have left the activities themselves untouched by the legislation. We have simply excluded the employee in certain lines.

The Senator from Maryland said:

> I think the opponents have pretty good ground in that they say we are only taking out a few of the persons who occupy smaller positions and letting the heads escape.

So we have reached the point where we cannot get anybody, with the possible exception of the Senator from New Mexico, to admit that the bill is a good bill; and yet we are asked to take it. We are asked to take it blindfolded, and holding our noses, not even seeing what we are taking in the last dose. We do not even know what the last dose is. We are asked to take it on faith.

So, Mr. President, I think we ought to call a halt. I think we ought to have the courage to stand up as Democrats and meet the onslaught of the solid phalanx of the Republican Party from the other side. That exhibition of trained fleas over there for the past 2 weeks has not been equaled in Washington in 150 years. [Laughter.] Of course they are for the bill. Is it not an amazing thing that a bill which has engaged the attention and serious consideration of 40 Democrats on this side of the aisle who are violently opposed to the bill, and who have debated it seriously for 2 weeks, fails to arouse any interest whatever in the Republicans.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is a very natural and understandable situation. How could the Republicans talk about pure politics? They have never had any experience with it.

Mr. MINTON. I think that is correct. They certainly would not be the ones to be talking about pure politics. I see the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. He can hardly sit still. He wants so badly to say something about this vicious bill that he can hardly sit still. He is coming over here with the Democrats to sit down a while. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. Only to bring the average up. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Up to what? The Senator picked out a good place to sit down, if he is averaging. The Democrats could always use a bright, intelligent man like the Senator from Connecticut. We thought we had him for a day or two when we started the consideration of the bill. For 2 days he was "jitterbugging" all over the Chamber. For the first 2 days there was not an amendment he was not exploring from A to izzard. Then something happened. All at once everything that came in met the approval of the Senator from Connecticut. He went right along, hooked up with the rest of the elephants, trunk-to-tail. Down the line they went, and we never heard another chirp out of the keen-minded, alert Senator from Connecticut. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Or grunt.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Texas suggests the word "grunt" as applied to elephants.

I was interested in an article which appeared in the newspaper the other day, which indicated that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] was the mahout or elephant trainer, who hooks them up trunk-to-tail, gigs them a little in the side if they step out of line, punches them, and gets them back into line. If one of them starts to roar and trumpet he smacks him on the trunk and keeps him in line. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, Senators on the other side of the aisle cannot fool anybody in this country about purity in politics. The people of America will never forget—the Democrats will not let them forget—Harding, Fall, Denby, Forbes, Miller,

Daugherty, and all the Ohio gang that was in Washington a few years ago.

I hope the other Ohio gang that is now mustering out on the banks of the Ohio will not be anything to compare with that outfit. The people of this country will never forget that crowd. There was impurity in politics. There was pernicious political activity. There was the expenditure of large sums of money to obtain political results. I should like to stop such things. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] would like to stop them, but he is not ready to start on that line yet. He merely wants to reach the little fellows.

In my State at the same time we had a pretty spectacle. We had a Republican Governor who spent a good deal of time down in Atlanta at the request of the Federal Government after an indictment, the verdict of a jury, and the sentence of a court. The men to whom I shall refer were all Republicans. Pure people. Purity in politics.

His successor, another Republican, the fellow who succeeded the one whom we sent to the penitentiary, came into court and pleaded the statute of limitations to keep from going to the penitentiary.

Then there was the mayor of the great city of Indianapolis, who was indicted and convicted and who served his time. These men were all Republicans.

Then we had a Representative in Congress from the First District of Indiana who was indicted and sent to the penitentiary. To prove that it was not just the officeholders, the Republican State chairman was indicted and sent to the penitentiary.

Purity in politics. If the grand juries had done what they ought to have done, they would have indicted the Republican national chairman, who had $100,000 of Harry Sinclair's rotten, stinking bonds in the box of the Republican National Committee.

So let us not talk about purity in politics. Mr. President, I am ready to vote on the bill. I had hoped that some of my Democratic friends might see the light. I have long since given up any hope on the other side of the aisle. I had hoped that some of the Democrats might see the light, but apparently they have not. We shall have to take the Hatch bill. I suppose in a few minutes we shall close our eyes, hold our noses, and take the last dose, without knowing whether it is ipecac or what it is. I shall not do it willingly. I shall protest to the last minute. However, Mr. President, it seems inevitable. It seems that there is nothing we can do by way of reason and persuasion to bring the prodigals back home. They have wandered away to worship strange gods and have set up their household gods in strange lands. They will come back. They will come back.

Mr. President, we are at the end of our rope. We are about to march the "last mile." I am ready to go. [Laughter.] I thought at one time I should like to see somebody put the lynching bill on the Hatch bill and lynch it; but no, no! I like to think I have a kind heart—and I should not want to do to the Senator's bill what I think he is doing to the Democratic Party.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not be too harsh with the Members on this side who have had to make a choice between following the leader and following the whip.

I have not been here very long, but I was told when I came here that I should follow the leader. The first thing I undertook to do was to find out who the leader was. We had a meeting one day, and I was told that my distinguished colleague [Mr. BARKLEY] was the leader, and they gave the Senator from Indiana a whip. As we come to the end of this debate, with all the lamentations that my friend from Indiana seems to suffer, I lament the fact that he seems to have lost the whip handle; but I hope he will regain the handle when this controversy is over.

Many in their turn before this time have followed what seems now to the Senator to be his solitary way. It may be that in the future each one of us in his turn will have to suffer and take the cup of defeat; but if I correctly understood the Senator yesterday, after he was called to attend a meeting in a white house not so far away, he was the one who promised to come back when the war was over; and those of us who were following the leader were not expected to come back, because we are already there. We expect to welcome the Senator after this bitter cup shall have passed from his lips. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I am delighted to hear from the junior Senator from Kentucky. In fact, I have been wanting to hear from him. You know, Mr. President, there is not anything so impressive, so soul inspiring, as a man hitting the sawdust trail—a man with a humble and contrite heart who going down the sawdust trail to confess his sins on his bended knees.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Book says there is more rejoicing over the one that was lost and has returned than the ninety and nine that did not stray. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. That is true; and we are going to have a little rejoicing, because the one that has returned is the junior Senator from Kentucky; for if it had not been for the genial junior Senator from Kentucky, we should not be here hatching Hatch laws. [Laughter.] So I say it is always an inspiring sight to see a man who perhaps glimpses the light, and follows it on to embrace a great ideal.

I do not know my Bible very well, but it seems to me I remember a story about a man going down the road toward Damascus, and he heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" And he changed around, and, seeing the light, he embraced the opportunity, and followed the light down a new trail which changed the whole course of civilization. And so it is an awe-inspiring thing, it is a beautiful thing, it is a touching thing to see a sinner come to judgment. [Laughter.] We witnessed that spectacle here. Ah! It is well to come to judgment alone, singing "Hallelujah! Praise the Lord!" But how much more joyous it is if you bring somebody with you. [Laughter.] And so we see the junior and senior Senators from Kentucky come in together, arm in arm, and hit the sawdust trail together. [Laughter.]

So I am glad the Senator from Kentucky said what he did, in order that I could pay my tribute to him.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator knows that we are bringing along with us the senior and junior Senators from West Virginia, does he not?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; and that is something to warm the cockles of one's heart. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are also bringing along the entire Republican Party over here, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Yes. We shall have a real, old-fashioned camp meeting. Yes, sir; we shall all hit the sawdust trail together.

You know, the scenes on the floor of the Senate that we have been referring to in the last few minutes are wonderful. They are really inspiring. I suppose there is nowhere else in the world that these things could happen as we have seen them happen on the floor of the United States Senate. So I am glad to see Jonathan and David, Damon and Pythias, coming down the sawdust trail together.

So, Mr. President, we have now reached the end of this long, long trail, and we are about to vote. I accept the verdict beforehand, knowing full well what it is going to be, remembering that the swan, dying, sings; and, having sung, dies.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this time a brief summary of the rules of the Civil Service Commission as applied to political activities of employees in the classified service.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The pertinent language in section 9 is practically a duplication of the civil-service rule prohibiting political activity of employees under the classified civil service.

The section provides in substance, among other things, that no such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

The same language of the civil-service rule has been construed as follows:

1. Rule prohibits participation not only in national politics but also in State, county, and municipal politics.

2. Temporary employees, substitutes, and persons on furlough or leave of absence with or without pay are subject to the regulation.

3. Whatever an official or employee may not do directly he may not do indirectly or through another.

4. Candidacy for or service as delegate, alternate, or proxy in any political convention is prohibited.

5. Service for or on any political committee is prohibited.

6. Organizing or conducting political rallies or meetings or taking any part therein except as a spectator is prohibited.

7. Employees may express their opinions on all subjects, but they may not make political speeches.

8. Employees may vote as they please, but they must not solicit votes; mark ballots for others; help to get out votes; act as checkers, marker, or challenger for any party or engage in other activity at the poles except the casting of his own ballot.

9. An employee may not serve as election official unless his failure or refusal so to do would be a violation of State laws.

10. It is political activity for an employee to publish or be connected editorially, managerially, or financially with any political newspaper. An employee may not write for publication or publish any letter or article signed or unsigned in favor of or against any political party, candidate, or faction.

11. Betting or wagering upon the results of a primary or general election is political activity.

12. Organization or leadership of political parades is prohibited but marching in such parades is not prohibited.

13. Among other forms of political activity which are prohibited are distribution of campaign literature, assuming political leadership, and becoming prominently identified with political movements, parties, or factions or with the success or failure of supporting any candidate for public office.

14. Candidacy for nomination or for the election to any National, State, county, or municipal office it within the prohibition.

15. Attending conventions as spectators is permitted.

16. An employee may attend a mass convention or caucus and cast his vote, but he may not pass this point.

17. Membership in a political club is permitted, but employees may not be officers of the club nor act as such.

18. Voluntary contributions to campaign committees and organizations are permitted. An employee may not solicit, collect, or receive contributions. Contributions by persons receiving remuneration from funds appropriated for relief purposes are not permitted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will yield to an inquiry or two in reference to these summarized rules.

I find in this summary the preservation of the right of employees to express their opinions, but now I find that they are forbidden to write any letter or anything for publication. The Senator thinks, does he, that that is entirely consistent with the right to express their opinions?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; especially in view of some things that developed last year, I think it is really necessary in this bill.

I was going to say to the Senator from Colorado that I merely insert this summary at this time; but I want to say to the Senator from Indiana that the language is practically the exact language of the civil-service rules, or rather the interpretation which has been placed upon them by the Commission. I am quite sure that anyone will understand it with perfect ease.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President will the Senator interpret to my un-understanding mind section 13 of this summary, which says:

Among other forms of political activity which are prohibited are * * * becoming prominently identified * * * with the success or failure of supporting any candidate for public office.

I can understand how one could be disassociated from the success of a candidate, but to be disassociated from failure to support a candidate is a matter as to which I am a little in doubt.

Mr. HATCH. It has frequently happened that a person in the civil service has been penalized for failing to support a candidate.

Mr. ADAMS. For not supporting some candidate?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. I think the rule speaks for itself.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator one other question? These rules apply to civil-service employees with permanent tenure. Now, the Senator has included in the rules a prohibition against candidacy for nomination or election to any office. Is that a fair thing to apply to a man holding a term office?

For instance, a man may be appointed or elected to a 2-year office or a 4-year office. Perhaps I may illustrate. In my State we have certain offices to which a man may not be reelected. There are some other offices to which a man may be reelected. This prohibition would seem to forbid a man who held an office to which he was appointed or elected from seeking reappointment or reelection to that office, or aspiring to a higher place.

Mr. HATCH. I do not quite follow the Senator, but, the way I understand him, I do not think he has the correct interpretation.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator does not think, then, that a man holding an office should be forbidden from aspiring to another office?

Mr. HATCH. I think that when a man is occupying one of these appointive positions, and seeks or aspires to or becomes a candidate for office, he ought to resign from his position, just as we discussed sometime ago.

Mr. ADAMS. Even though it is right at the end of his term? That is, where the man has, say, a 2-year or a 4-year term, and the end of his term is approaching, he ought not to be permitted to be a candidate for another office the term of which does not begin until after the expiration of his term?

Mr. HATCH. I think so; and I am not at all extreme in that view. I do not want to discuss this question, because it would take too long; but I have in mind a very good friend of the Senator's. I wish I had time to tell the story. I will not do it today. I will tell it privately some time, as showing what a real brave Democrat does under such circumstances.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question? Does the Senator mean to say that a man who has been serving a 4-year term as township constable should be debarred from becoming a candidate for a higher office?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; and the question has not anything to do with the bill or with the subject we are discussing.

Mr. GUFFEY. That is the interpretation the Senator is putting on this matter.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will answer it.

Section 7 of this summary says:

Employees may express their opinions on all subjects, but they may not make political speeches.

Would candidates be a subject, if employees wanted to talk about candidates?

Mr. HATCH. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Employees would have a right to talk about candidates?

Mr. HATCH. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I want to ask the Senator about number 10:

It is political activity for an employee to publish or be connected editorially, managerially, or financially with any political newspaper.

What kind of a newspaper is a political newspaper? What is the Senator's definition of a political newspaper? Would an employee be allowed to edit a religious newspaper, or only a newspaper which talked about politics? How would the Senator make a distinction?

Mr. HATCH. I think "political newspaper" means just what the language would imply, just what the Senator would understand from it; and I do not think the Senator would include a religious newspaper.

Mr. McKELLAR. Sometimes even religious newspapers talk politics, as the Senator knows. I have known that to happen.

Mr. HATCH. I should think it would be far preferable for an employee, if he is engaging in a type of newspaper business which is even tinged with being political, to resign his job and run his newspaper.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it were just an ordinary newspaper, he had better let it alone.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have been considerably disturbed in heart by the comments of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] about deserting our leadership and about following instructions.

Mr. President, I had thought I was following my leader, and I had thought my leader had departed from his flock. Simply to justify myself, not in any sense seeking to embarrass anybody else, I want to read a paragraph or two which sank into my political mind when this matter was under discussion in 1938. At that time my leader said on the floor of the Senate:

I myself think it would be most unfortunate if we were to deny to everyone who holds a Federal appointment the right to engage in the activities of good citizenship merely because he is a Federal employee; in other words, if we were politically to sterilize him because he happened to be on the pay roll of the Government.

We cannot reach the State employees in a bill of this kind. There is no power in Congress to prohibit the activities of State employees. We all know that in nearly every State in the American Union there is some form of political machine, which is built up by a State administration, which goes out and actively espouses a cause, or opposes the renomination of Members of Congress, United States Senators, or even opposes candidates for President of the United States; and since we cannot deal with them, it seems to me to be unfair to Federal employees to prescribe their right to engage in making their choice for the nomination of anyone from Congressman to President of the United States. That is my view of the situation.

A few pages further along appears this statement of my leader:

The bill is based upon the theory that every Government employee, whether he is under the civil service or not under the civil service, is more sordid and more selfish than anyone else in the United States, and that he will be actuated in his political conduct by the rewards which come to him in the way of checks from the Government of the United States, or reappointment, or some other political favor which may be conferred upon him by the appointing power. I am not prepared to admit, nor do I believe, that the thousands of Federal employees in the United States are any worse than the rest of our citizens. I have always believed that our Federal employees, no matter by what method they were appointed, were representative, law-abiding, taxpaying, God-fearing American citizens, and the mere fact that they draw salaries from Uncle Sam should not militate against their enjoyment of every right every other citizen of the United States enjoys.

Again my leader said, as appears a few pages further:

I believe this bill is unnecessary. I believe there is no evil which requires the enactment of the bill into law; and because I believe it is an invasion of the right of petition and the right of assembly of the American people in the smallest subdivision of their political system, which is the voting precinct, I am opposed to the bill, and I hope it will be defeated.

I am still following my leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Colorado for paying me the compliment, which he rarely does, of quoting me in support of his own position. The position I took at the time to which he refers was absolutely consistent with the position I now take. One of the main reasons why I objected to the original proposal, as it was offered as an amendment to the relief appropriation bill, was that it set up a special class of Federal officeholders and did not apply the same standard to others.

Regardless of my opinion, at that time, that we could not deal with State officials, because I realized then we had no power to discharge them or to punish them for a violation of the law, it is always in order, whenever a situation which needs correction is before us for attention, to find the necessary ways by which it can be reached. Now that we are undertaking to place all employees who draw their compensation out of Washington on the same basis, I find no inconsistency between the position which I took at that time and the position which I take at this time. I am not in the slightest degree embarrassed by the quotation the Senator has read from the speech which I made in 1938.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, I would not seek to embarrass him. I knew I could not embarrass him. I was merely trying as best I could to justify what the junior Senator from Kentucky rather characterized as a departure from the flock; that is, along with some forty-odd Democrats we wandered off and got out of step with the other 20. [Laughter.] I was merely trying to justify that in a measure, and my mind not being as resourceful as that of my leader, I am rather asking forgiveness, and that there might be some understanding of my evil doing.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not concerned about who is staying with the flock or who is deserting. I have never accused anyone of deserting any flock, or anyone who pretends that he is the head of a flock. I have not in the slightest degree criticized any of my colleagues for the position which they have taken. I have always contended that this is a nonpartisan matter; and while the junior Senator from Kentucky, my colleague, did a while ago refer to the subject which has been discussed here for 2 weeks, in which my name has been bandied about, as the Senator will recall, in the most gracious and friendly way, I have not retaliated in kind, and I do not feel it in my heart to do so, because I recognize the right of every Democrat to vote as he pleases on the pending legislation, as they have been doing for a long time on all other legislation.

I accord to all Democrats the right to vote their own conscientious convictions on the pending bill, as on all other bills, and I do not recall that I have ever, by any public statement, on the floor of the Senate or anywhere else, chastised any Democrat who did not see fit to vote as I voted on numerous measures which have come before us in the last 7 years; and I do not do so now.

Mr. ADAMS. The chastisement came from the junior Senator from Kentucky, who saw fit, very kindly and gently, to chastise those of us who had wandered from the flock.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it was intended as a chastisement in the slightest degree.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The junior Senator from Kentucky made the observation that he was following his leader. Does the Senator from Colorado say that is not correct?

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator make that a little clearer?

Mr. CHANDLER. I made the assertion that I was following the leader. Is that a correct statement, or not?

Mr. ADAMS. There is apparently some confusion as to leadership here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I admit some are running toward the wrong goal; but I am following the leader.

Mr. ADAMS. I am speaking of the leader of the Democratic majority.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am following the leader of the Democratic majority. Is that correct, or not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not being critical of anyone. I am merely trying to defend myself.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the question of whether any Democrat is following the titular or so-called leader of the majority will not enter into the discussion or affect anyone's vote.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator from Indiana, I think we should vote, and whether it means that I am going home or that he is coming home is of no consequence.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, yes; it is of very decided consequence.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all. It is of no consequence to me. The hope I do cherish is that under some roof we will be able to meet. Whether it is my home or his, or whether the next-door neighbor's, makes no particular difference to me.

Mr. ADAMS. We would much rather have the senior Senator meet under the roof over here. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I am still under that roof, and I think that roof is broad enough and safe enough to cover us all, regardless of our differences in this particular.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion of the Hatch bill for some 10 or 12 days. I happen to be one Senator who is familiar with New Mexico; I am of New Mexico; and it grieves me to feel that some folks are inclined to believe that the so-called Hatch law was based upon something which may have happened in New Mexico.

Mr. President, I was born and reared in New Mexico. I did not go there in order to get into the good graces of the people of New Mexico who could vote in order that I might be sent to the Senate of the United States or to the House of Representatives. But things have happened during the debate on the bill of my colleague which appear to have led them to believe that this bill was brought about because of something which may have happened in New Mexico.

Mr. President, I for one am standing here for New Mexico. When the time comes when I am through so far as life is concerned, I shall be buried in New Mexico. I will not be sent to Oklahoma or to New York; I will be in New Mexico.

Mr. President, I know much has been said about so-called W. P. A. matters. I know much has been said by many with reference to what brought about the so-called Hatch bill. I know much has been said, and that there have been political implications, as to why the bill was brought forward. But I am here today to say that for one, I, who will be buried in New Mexico, desire to state that New Mexico has been true blue, and has not been responsible in any way, shape, or manner for trying to prescribe what should be good political manners in Uncle Sam's country, whether it be New Mexico or elsewhere.

I have read the headlines; I have listened to the so-called radio news, with reference to New Mexico in this particular. I am going to talk for New Mexico. My kith and kin have been in New Mexico for a long, long time. My kith and kin have been there for hundreds of years. My kith and kin did not go there in order to get into the good graces of the people of New Mexico in order to be sent to Congress. My kith and kin are willing to stand up before the world, before the Stars and Stripes, and say, "We are going to do what is fair and just in Uncle Sam's country in the interest of the entire Nation."

Irrespective of news items, irrespective of whatever may have happened in 1939 concerning W. P. A., I, for one, deny that New Mexico and its people were guilty of any infraction which may have impelled my colleague to bring about the enactment of the so-called Hatch law.

There is before the Senate and the Congress the report of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who investigated what were supposed to be activities which may have in any manner, shape, or form interfered with free government, with free politics, during the 1938 election. Did you hear New Mexico mentioned in that report? You did hear about Kentucky; you did hear about Pennsylvania; you did hear about Tennessee; but New Mexico, which has only one Representative, had to be the guinea pig.

Very well. I admit that, notwithstanding that the free men, the free citizens, of my State, our own peers, decided that there was nothing involved in those transactions which violated the law; there was some evidence that poor citizens, citizens who were so poor that they had to eat a free meal at the Masonic Temple at Albuquerque in order to get any sustenance, had sold some tickets for 25 cents, but they were declared to be not guilty. Have you heard one thing about the dollar and a half in Pennsylvania, or something else in Tennessee, or something else in my leader's State, the State of Kentucky?

Mr. President, I am defending the citizenship of my State. I am defending those people who dare to go before their peers to be judged. I am defending those who dare to go before a United States court and lay their liberty before the court, and go before a jury of their peers and have the jury pass on the question of their guilt.

Mr. President, certain statements which have been made concerning my State make me angry. I believe that my vote is just as good as that of my leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I think my vote is just as good as that of my colleague the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. I believe my vote is as valuable as that of my neighbor, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I become angry when I think of my State being held up as a horrible example. Forty-eight of my friends in the State of New Mexico were accused and indicted, for what reason? Not for taking one penny of the Government's money, but for the reason that supposedly they had used their efforts to advance the cause represented by our side.

I say to the Senate in all sincerity that there is not one Member of the Senate who is as poor as I am, but I pay my debts. I have not taken one penny from a soul in all my days. I have not sold a gallon of gasoline in my State. I have not ridden on a railroad pass. I have not sold any railroad equipment or highway equipment. But I stand before the Senate in all honesty of purpose, representing those persons in my State who sent my colleague and me to the United States Senate, and say that they are not guilty of the things of which they are accused.

I want Senators, both Republicans and Democrats, to know that I have a 59-year-old sister who lives in my State. She is as poor as a church mouse. She is dependent on her other brothers and sisters and on me for her livelihood. But she is a Democrat, bless her soul. She is that kind of person who, if she had 25 cents, would buy a soup bone and make soup and distribute it around the block to her neighbors. She goes to every wake. She goes to every wedding. She goes to every mass. That lady was accused of pernicious political activity. She was so accused while persons in Kentucky and in the State of Pennsylvania and in other States were permitted to engage freely in political activities. She was accused of having a political meeting in her house. It was charged that she said to someone "I wish to hold a political meeting in my home." She has had political meetings in her home and always will have them. She has had such meetings in the cause of the President. She has had them in the cause of my colleague. She has had them in my cause, as well as that of New Mexico's Representative in the other House. That was the crime of which she was accused.

Mr. President, I want the people of the United States to know that we are not begging for mercy, not by a great deal, not in any way whatsoever. If we violate the law, we expect to take the consequences. But we do not want to have Mr. Harry Hopkins, on the same night he makes a political speech in Los Angeles, Calif., telegraph to New Mexico and discharge our responsible men in W. P. A. and say, "You are interested in political matters."

Mr. President, I also want to say to my colleagues that I am one of that type who does not care a dime for political consequences. In my State it would be to my interest now to say, "Let us keep the local politicians out of this proposition." But I am one of those who believe in Americanism from every point of view and in every meaning of the word. I am not one who believes that every Government employee needs legislation passed by Uncle Sam in order to keep him going straight. I am not of the type of those who feel that State employees who are paid in part through the Federal highway money need Federal legislative action in order to make them behave themselves.

Mr. President, I hope I shall always continue to feel that my neighbors and my fellow countrymen are honest until they are proven not to be—I would rather think of them in that light—and that they do not need to have Federal legislation enacted to make them behave themselves. I am one of that type who feels that every man is honest until I know he is not. I am one of those who believe that every Government employee is trying to do what is right. If it is necessary to pass a law in order to make him behave himself, in my opinion it is just as necessary to pass a law to make Senators and Representatives behave themselves.

We have heard a great deal about "honesty in government"; we have heard a great deal about "honesty in politics"; we have heard a great deal about "clean politics." All Members of the Senate believe in those things. But I, for one, deny that it is necessary to pass a Federal law in order to make clean a poor woman who works as a charwoman in a Federal building, or collectors of customs or United States attorneys, whose appointment the Senator from Arizona or the Senator from Texas may have dared to recommend.

I prefer to think that everyone is kind and honest. I shall believe they are until I know otherwise.

Mr. President, New Mexico is just as good and just as bad and just as indifferent as any other State. We have people in our State who are good; we have those who are bad, and we have the indifferent kind. Let no one rise here and say that New Mexico is bad and that it is necessary to have national legislation in order to make its people behave. Anyone who makes such a statement does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. President, we in New Mexico are kind-hearted. We trust people and believe in them. We believe in my colleague, and we will send him back to the Senate. We trust him so much that once in a while folks elsewhere may think that we are easy marks, and that everything is wrong in New Mexico. Nothing is wrong in New Mexico. It is not different from any other State.

So far as the W. P. A. cases are concerned, we were a "bunch of pikers" compared to those in Pennsylvania and Kentucky. [Laughter.] Our only trouble and our only sin was that we had only one Representative. Had we had eight or nine Mr. Hopkins would have forgotten about the matter.

Mr. President, I do not attempt to say that what was done in New Mexico and what was done in Kentucky and what was done in Pennsylvania were right. We never wanted anything in New Mexico in connection with the W. P. A. to be wrong.

I do not mind telling my colleagues that, so far as the junior Senator from New Mexico is concerned, he never tried to coerce a soul in his State.

My campaign expenses have never amounted to as much as $1,000. But I do love that old cowhand, and the little girl with the shawl over her head who has trusted me. I would rather have her trust than a $5,000 or $10,000 campaign contribution any day in the week.

We have tried to clean up W. P. A. politics in New Mexico. I was one of those who did not approve, in the effort to have some particular W. P. A. project approved, telling one of our officials about it, and then having the official go over and tell the people of the particular community, "I got it for you." I knew differently. Other Senators have worked, and I have worked, in order to secure appropriations which would bring the things we desired to our States, give work to our people, and cause such construction to be undertaken as would be permanent and in keeping with good American morals and good American philosophy. Irrespective of what may be the opinion of so-called enforcing officers, they can say about the Senator from New Mexico that he loves his relatives, and he does. They can say that he is a Democrat, and he is. They can say that he is for Roosevelt, and he is. But they have not once said that he has taken one penny from anyone. So far as the junior Senator from New Mexico is concerned, he can say that there is not a State in the Union which has better political morals, higher ideals concerning the American system of government, and more real honesty and sincerity of purpose and clean politics than has the State of New Mexico. But because we believe in clean politics, because we do believe in getting away from a system under which the State governments are controlled, we maintain that the way to do it is the American way of doing such things, and if someone violates the law in the State of Arizona, if someone violates the law in the State of West Virginia or in Mississippi, that any action to be taken should be taken by the people of those individual States.

I do not have anything in common with the powers that be that collect the kick-back from my State. It would be to my political interest to vote for my colleague's bill. I have nothing in common with our State Government. I do not believe in some ways of doing things, but they are done. It is thought to be right. The political complication with reference to this particular matter does not affect my State at all, but I am against this particular bill. I am against it because I think it is un-American. I think it is not in keeping with what my colleague has in mind trying to correct. I think it is not in keeping with those things we hold sacred.

I know it is popular, even back home, to talk about clean politics. But I know that the folks who really want to clean up politics are not the folks who say, "All right. You give me the contract to publish the sample ballots for the Democratic ticket and I will be strong for you." I know there are some folks in my State who are very strong for the bill, but if you ask them to be for or against a candidate they will say, "Give us $350 and we will be for him." I do not believe in such things. I may be for the Senator from Kentucky, or the Senator from Arizona, but I do not think that should be dependent upon whether or not I receive the contract to print the sample ballots.

Please do not treat New Mexico so badly. We are too good. We take folks in from other States. We love them and elect them to the Governorship, to the Supreme Court, and to other offices. We are good to them, but we are not crooked. I still maintain that if one looks at the Sheppard report New Mexico will still seem pretty good.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, at this time I offer an amendment for the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Further amendments are not now in order. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico as a substitute for section 15 is pending.

Mr. STEWART. I thought we were about to vote on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] as a substitute for the committee amendment in section 15 is pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would it not be in order for the Senator from Tennessee to offer his amendment and let it lie on the table, and speak to it now if he so desires?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be in order.

Mr. STEWART. I misunderstood the parliamentary situation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Will not the Senator permit us to dispose of the pending amendment? The Senator may then be recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Hughes	Reynolds
Andrews	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Bankhead	Frazier	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	George	Lundeen	Smathers
Barkley	Gerry	McCarran	Smith
Bilbo	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Bridges	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Tydings
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Van Nuys
Chandler	Hayden	Nye	Wagner
Chavez	Herring	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holman	Pittman	White
Connally	Holt	Reed	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] as a substitute for the committee amendment in section 15.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] offers the following substitute for section 15:

SEC. 15. The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined are at the time of the passage of this act prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service of the United States by the provisions of the civil-service rules prohibiting such employees from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to make a few inquiries of the Senator from New Mexico and to make a suggestion to him.

Late last evening I submitted an amendment covering the classes of State and municipal employees who are to be covered by this proposed legislation. It was then suggested that the amendment lie over until the following day so that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, could have an opportunity to examine it.

This morning I presented an amendment restricting the Civil Service Commission in certain respects. It was suggested that that amendment lie over for a few hours so that it might be considered by the chairman of the committee and the Senator in charge of the bill.

I wish to say that I seriously object to voting upon or considering the pending substitute for section 15 without having an opportunity to know what the rules of the Civil Service Commission are. I think it is an entirely reasonable request to ask the Senator from New Mexico and the majority leader to have those rules—not a summary of the rules, such as the statement which was sent out under the frank of the Senator from New Mexico, not a statement of what the rules mean, but the rules themselves—before the Senate of the United States.

What are we doing? We are making those rules statute law.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. In just a moment. I decline to yield at present.

Those rules are to have the effect of statute law. The Civil Service Commission, under the amendment which is the pending question before the Senate, may not change those rules in any particular whatsoever. They must remain as they now are. Remember, those rules were established, constituted, and made up to cover Federal employees, who are paid their entire salaries by the Federal Government and are not by any stretch of language employees of a State government. Those rules do not apply to State officials. They were not intended to apply to State officials. They can apply to State officials only by implication, by applying the situation of a State official to the rules. I say it is very careless legislation in effect to write into statute law 62 pages of civil-service rules and interpretations by the Civil Service Commission, without knowing what we are doing.

The Senators to whom I refer made a request of me respecting my first amendment, which was contained in six or eight typewritten lines. The other amendment, relative to the exceptions that I thought should be made with respect to the application of the rules, was contained on one short sheet of typing paper. If the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, needed time to understand the implications of my two amendments, both of which they concede have considerable merit, is it unreasonable for the Senator from Michigan to ask to be advised what the civil-service rules are before he votes on the pending measure, the substitution of a new section 15 which none of us knew anything about until the present hour?

I am not disposed to prevent a vote on this bill. I am ready to agree to any sort of unanimous-consent request that will bring about a vote on this bill either Saturday or Monday; but I think the Senate is entitled to know what these rules are before we write them into the statute. It will be admitted by the Senator from New Mexico that the statement he made on the back of a franked card which was sent out through the country on August 5, 1939, is the only information we have as to what the rules are. I submit to any Senator who reads the so-called rules that he will find that they are not rules. They do not read like rules. One says:

Betting or wagering upon the results of a primary or general election is political activity.

The people of the State of Michigan do not need any legislation from the Congress of the United States to prohibit betting. We prohibit it now. Perhaps we do not enforce the prohibition in all cases, but it is now prohibited. You may go down the line, and you will find that practically everything that is prohibited in the 18 statements of rules which the Senator from New Mexico sent out under frank, and the purpose of which obviously was to tell people that they could make voluntary contributions to campaign funds, is already prohibited by the statute law of the State of Illinois, the State of Michigan, the State of Indiana, and the other States of the Union. We do not need that type of legislation.

I am willing that political activity shall be defined in the manner the Senator has pointed out; but I want to know what the definition is before I place my stamp of approval or of disapproval upon it. Perhaps I shall find that the definitions laid down by the Civil Service Commission are entirely satisfactory to me. Should I be compelled by the Senator from New Mexico to decide that question when there is not a single rule in the entire 18 which in my judgment is in the language of the rule that the Civil Service Commission has established?

I ask the majority leader, is that, or is it not, a reasonable request on the part of a Senator representing a great State? Am I entitled to know what the rules are before they are written into the statute law of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I doubt whether I am in a position to determine the reasonableness or the unreasonableness of the request. I do not know what the request is, unless it is, by implication, to let the bill go over and not vote on it today.

Mr. BROWN. No; I am perfectly willing to go on with the two amendments which the Senator from Virginia has, the several amendments which the Senator from Indiana has, and the three amendments which I have. I am perfectly willing to go on this afternoon and discuss those amendments; but I ask—and I think it is a reasonable request—that the leadership on the Democratic side, responsible for legislation, join me in making some arrangement in order that we may know what the civil-service rules are; not what the Senator from New Mexico says they are in a digest he has made, and I say it was obviously made for the purpose of letting the Government officeholders throughout the United States know that they could make voluntary political contributions. It is very obvious that that was one of the prime purposes of the card.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator as to that and some other things he has said.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the Senator from New Mexico sent around this printed, franked card for the purpose of creating the impression that the card contained the substantive legislation that would be included in this bill, if it should be enacted.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has already asked that the card be printed in the RECORD to show what is contained in these rules.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was under the impression that from time to time the Senator from New Mexico has had printed in the RECORD various documents and pamphlets showing what the rules of the Civil Service Commission are.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had that impression from the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BROWN. My authority is that the Senator from New Mexico told the Senator from Indiana—and the Senator from Indiana is here and listening; I listened to the statement very carefully—that he did not have with him here today the rules which defined political activity.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I myself prefer to answer, if the majority leader will let me, when the Senator from Michigan gets through.

Mr. BROWN. I am willing to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I would rather speak in my own time, in view of the accusation the Senator has just made.

Mr. BROWN. I will continue my inquiry, if the Senator does not care to answer now.

The rules we make by the enactment of this bill will become part of the law of the United States. We will write them into the United States Code, and they cannot thereafter be changed by the Civil Service Commission. I ask if it is unreasonable in me, as representing my State of Michigan, to ask my leader—and he is my leader—to join in a request that we lay aside this amendment, consider the other amendments, and have the civil-service rules which apply to this amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that we may know what they are?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to temporarily laying aside the amendment now pending in order that the rules may be brought here and put in the RECORD, if that will not delay a vote on the bill.

We know that the amendment put in the bill by the committee provided that the Civil Service Commission might make rules hereafter. Certainly we were up no greater blind alley in the consideration of the substitute than Senators contend we were in leaving this whole situation to future regulations of the Civil Service Commission. While I think it may be said that none of us is always meticulously or accurately informed as to what the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission are, they are always available to us; and, as between the original proposition and the Senator's substitute, from the standpoint of those who have opposed the legislation and opposed section 15, I think we are infinitely better off with the substitute than we are with the original language of the bill.

I should like to hear what the Senator from New Mexico has to say with respect to what efforts he has made to familiarize the Senate with these rules and regulations before I pass on the reasonableness of the request of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The reason why I desired to take my own time in replying to the Senator from Michigan was the very gratuitous, wholly unfounded, and, to me, offensive remark that I had prepared this card for the purpose of sending out information that employees could voluntarily contribute to political campaigns.

Mr. BROWN. That is what the Senator's card says in section 18.

Mr. HATCH. It is one of the things stated on the card, because that is what the Civil Service Commission has ruled; but it had nothing whatever to do with my purpose. The reason why I prepared that digest was that the so-called Hatch law had just been passed; I had said on the floor of the Senate when the bill was being considered that it used the exact rule of the Civil Service Commission; and people were writing to me and writing to Colonel Halsey on the subject. I remember that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] was perplexed at the time that statement was put into the RECORD. He said, "Just what does that mean?" So, as best I could, I digested, not the rules—I am going to tell the Senator about the rules in a minute—but all the holdings that had been made by the Civil Service Commission during the years, using the exact language of the Commission, and prepared this card at some effort, some work on my part, simply in order that Senators as well as others might have the benefit of that information. The Secretary of the Senate was the man who requested me to do it; and why the Senator threw in the statement that the digest was prepared for the purpose of sending it out for campaign contributions is as ununderstandable to me as some of the abuse which was heaped on me during the remarks of the Senator from Indiana a while ago.

Mr. BROWN. While the Senator is on that point let me say that those of us who, with the best of intentions, have opposed this bill have been continually charged with being political spoilsmen, with being in favor of corrupt elections. The Senator knows that is not the fact.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. And I do not know why he should be credited with being so sincere, while we are charged with that sort of thing.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico has never made that charge against anyone.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator's newspaper supporters have.

Mr. HATCH. I never have referred in debate to the motives of an individual Senator except to praise him for them and to acknowledge that he could have views entirely different from mine and be thoroughly honest in those views. I accord that courtesy to every Senator, and I expect to continue doing so. I regret that some Senators have not accorded me the same courtesy and the same treatment.

Mr. President, there is but one rule of the Civil Service Commission. I have it here. I have obtained it since the colloquy between the Senator from Indiana and myself; and I will read the rule of the Civil Service Commission into the RECORD:

> No person in the executive civil service shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. Persons who by the provisions of these rules are in the competitive classified service, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

As I have so frequently said over and over again, that is almost the exact language of the pending bill and the exact language of the law that was passed.

Mr. BROWN. But where——

Mr. HATCH. Let me finish. Under that rule, which has been in existence for more than 50 years, the Civil Service Commission has made certain definite findings that this thing is political activity within the meaning of the rule, or that something else is not; and those are the interpretations which are included on this card.

Mr. BROWN. Let me interrupt the Senator. I ask the Senator if his substitute for section 15 relates to the interpretation of the rule?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. Does it say so?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it says that the provisions of the act shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of the persons affected by it as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined are at the time of the passage of the act prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service, limiting it to that particular time.

Mr. BROWN. Then, Mr. President, we not only are writing the rule into the statute——

Mr. HATCH. But we are writing into the statute the intepretation of it.

Mr. BROWN. But we are writing into the statute the interpretation of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; exactly.

Mr. BROWN. So I say that there is greater need than I expected there would be. I thought we would have some 67 pages of civil-service rules. Now we come to the proposition that we have to take the many interpretations which heretofore have been made by the Civil Service Commission. I say that before we make those interpretations in effect the statute law of the United States by writing them into the law we ought to have those interpretations of this one rule before us, because, as the Senator says, it is not only the rules but it is the interpretation of the rules that become part of the statute law of the country.

Mr. HATCH. And those are the interpretations which appear on the card.

Mr. BROWN. There are 18 statements of interpretation besides 6, 7, or 8 exclusionary statements as to what is covered and as to what is not covered.

Mr. HATCH. The first ones—A, B, C, and so forth—relate specifically to the act that was passed.

If the Senator will yield to me once more, let me say that I made this argument on the floor of the Senate last summer when the former bill was being considered: I said, "We have adopted the civil-service rules, and, under a well-known rule of law, when we adopt, for instance, the statute of a sister State, we adopt the construction the courts have placed on that statute"; and my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] rose and rather severely criticized me——

Mr. ADAMS. Not severely—never.

Mr. HATCH. Because it was not certain that these interpretations would be applied. The proposal seemed to meet with general approval, if Senators but knew that the rule would have the same interpretations, and that those construing it would not go off on some side road. I am endeavoring to have all employees put under exactly the same rule, and it seemed to me to be very wise not to give the Commission any more power to interpret further in the future.

Let me say to the Senator that I have no objection at all, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated he has not, if it will not delay a vote, if there is some other amendment to be taken up, to doing what is suggested. I want to go ahead to a vote this afternoon, if possible, and I shall take every possible means to get a vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I do not believe we should do so, with respect, at least, to section 15. Let me say one word, and then I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

As the Senator from Illinois well put it earlier in the day, there is a great difference between section 15 of the committee amendment, which delegated all the authority, I think, without proper constitutional limitations, to the Civil Service Commission. Regardless of whether I favor the bill in the end or not, I might be much better satisfied, as I think I will be, with the proposed substitute for section 15, than with the original section 15, because I think that the proposed substitute is much more likely to come within the constitutional power of the Congress than was the original section 15, which, I think, in agreement with the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Oklahoma, and others, was unconstitutional.

How am I intelligently to vote upon the substitute for section 15 unless I know what is in the proposed substitute? And no one knows what is in it, in detail and in substance, as he should know before voting.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wanted to make this observation, to which I think the Senator from Michigan will agree, that there are probably as many interpretations of this section read by the Senator from New Mexico as there have been cases before the Civil Service Commission upon which it had to pass.

Mr. BROWN. In other words, the Senator thinks that the Civil Service Commission has been somewhat inconsistent.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I think that the question of political activity depends upon the facts in every single case. For instance, if because a rural mail carrier on his route has talked to some patron about a political situation, and someone gets a notion that he has been perniciously active politically, and files charges against him and they are investigated, there must be an interpretation of his acts in connection with the rule in order to determine whether he has been guilty of pernicious political activity or not.

Undoubtedly there are thousands of such cases, and in each one there is probably a separate interpretation. Some of them may fall in a certain category with others, so that we might group them, but if we are to delay consideration of the pending bill and the substitute until we can get all the interpretations which have been placed by the Civil Service Commission upon this language, and then discuss them here on the floor, and determine whether we agree with the interpretations or whether we want them to be a guide to the Commission in the interpretation of this law, we can never come to a vote.

I would say to my friend from Michigan that I think it would be unreasonable to ask that the Senate do that, because the rule itself is very simple. It may be that the interpretations are complicated, depending on the facts in each separate case.

Mr. BROWN. That is exactly my point; if we confined ourselves to the rule, the Senator would be right, but we are not confining ourselves to the rule. We are asked to fix into hard and fast statute law every interpretation which has heretofore been made. Not a single one of those interpretations may be hereafter changed, no matter how wrong, no matter how far out of line those interpretations may be. We are making not only the rules, but we are making the interpretations, statute law. It would be as if we took a decision of the Supreme Court under a particular statute and bound the courts thereafter to follow the interpretations which they had theretofore made. In other words, there could be no building up of a body of judicial interpretations which might hereafter change. It would be hard and fast. So I think we ought to know what those interpretations are before we write them into the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. There will be found an interpretation and a statement of fact and a decision by the Commission on every single case which has come before it. It may be that in the administration of the act there would never be a case which would be altogether on all fours with some case they have had before them, and, of course, they would have to interpret the new case according to the facts developed.

Mr. BROWN. However, they would have to follow the interpretation they made, no matter how wrong the first interpretation may have been.

I suggest this to the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Kentucky: What is wrong with taking the rule of which the Senator has spoken, and the 18 interpretations which appear on the card I have before me, and letting the committee work out a provision which will contain the language of the 18 interpretations which appear on this card? That is the proper way to legislate; not to legislate with respect to something which no one in the Senate now fully and completely understands.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have consulted some of the records of the Commission in order to enlighten myself, and I find that in 1939 the Civil Service Commission issued Form No. 1236, which they entitled "Political Activities and Political Assessments of Federal Officeholders and Employees." This pamphlet consists of 25 pages. I have not had an opportunity to go through everything in it, but I notice in the other publication, from which the Senator from Indiana read, that there are a large number of citations at the bottom of each page—citations to Supreme Court decisions, Attorneys General opinions, citations to two or three rules of the Commission—which merely read:

Minutes of Commission July 19, 1937. See pages 152 and 154.

Then—

Minutes of the Commission September 7, 1920.

They would apparently be included in what we adopt if we agree to this amendment. We will have to go through the minutes of the Civil Service Commission for the last 50 years and find every minute of the Commission which they have ever written into their book.

Mr. BROWN. I presume they will be considered interpretations by the Commission.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Then I notice that they have different rules for the regular rural carriers and the substitute rural carriers. A substitute rural carrier can participate in politics to a somewhat greater extent than a regular carrier can.

I notice that upon recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War the Commission may, after necessary investigation, permit Government employees in military establishments to participate actively in local elections affecting their material welfare. That is Executive Order 3158. Citizens of certain towns in Maryland—there seem to be about fifteen or twenty of them—and four in Virginia are excepted from the provisions of the regulations of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator understands that he would be writing into the statute law all the facts to which he has been referring in his remarks. Am I not right?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion to the Senator from Michigan and also to the Senator from New Mexico?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Personally, I do not think it is very material whether we attempt to freeze all the determinations heretofore made by the Civil Service Commission in this proposed statute. So far as I am concerned, it would seem to me to be sufficient if, in attempting to define the political activities we are trying to prohibit, we say that they are the same sort of political activities which are prohibited in rule 1, section 1, of the Civil Service Rules on political activity, and so forth. I would suggest this language, if it would meet with the approval of the Senator from Michigan, and also the Senator from New Mexico:

> The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as are prohibited in section 1, rule 1, of the regulations of the Civil Service Commission, pertaining to political activities.

That is a definite reference to the language of the rule and not to any interpretation of it.

Mr. BROWN. Are we not right back to the same proposition? We might just as well say, then, that political activity and political management should be prohibited because that is all that rule 1 covers. It provides:

> No person in the executive civil service shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof.

That is familiar language. That is the identical language found in the pending Hatch bill. The next phrase is:

> Persons who, by the provisions of these rules, are in the competitive classified service, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, shall take no active part in political management or political campaigns.

That is the identical language of the Senator's measure, and there is no necessity for section 15 at all, if we take that view.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator has put his finger on the very thing we should do—to strike out section 15. That is what the leader has suggested in substance.

Mr. BROWN. I think it would be a splendid idea to strike out section 15 and have no section 15 at all.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt?

Mr. BROWN. Just one word and then I will immediately yield to the Senator from Georgia.

The suggestion which the majority leader makes is that we write into section 15 what we have already said in section 12. Yet we are told in section 12 to go to section 15 to find out what section 12 means.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator has objected to section 15 in substance——

Mr. BROWN. Strenuously.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the ground that we undertake to write into law all the hundreds and thousands of interpretations of the Civil Service Commission on all the cases they have had before them. In order to meet his objection, as I thought, I was suggesting that we do not write into the law their interpretations but write into the law their rule, which is almost identical with the rule which we set up in the law itself, but, by identification and recognition and connection, link the two provisions, to mean practically the same thing.

Mr. BROWN. I know the Senator is trying hard, but it seems we are running right around in a circle and getting back to the proposition that political activity is prohibited.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I feel that I must yield to the senior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no question.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator knows that I do not mean to cut off any debate, but does he think it would be possible that we might get a vote on the bill this afternoon if we would eliminate section 15?

Mr. BROWN. That is a hard question to put up to me. So far as I am concerned, I see no reason why, if we eliminate section 15, we could not rapidly get through the other amendments. But I cannot give the Senator an answer for everyone. I can for myself.

Mr. HATCH. As I stated before, I have never attached very great importance to section 15, either the substitute or the original provision. I have never thought it made a great deal of difference. I would be perfectly willing right now, looking to the end of the debate, and possibly a vote this afternoon, at this time to withdraw the proposed substitute, or let it be laid aside temporarily, rather, and proceed with the other amendments; and if that is the only thing preventing a vote this afternoon, we can take that course.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator ask the withdrawal of his substitute?

Mr. HATCH. That it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BURKE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BURKE. A yea-and-nay vote having been ordered on the substitute, can it be laid aside other than by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that when the yeas and nays have been ordered it can be laid aside only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the Senator withdraw his substitute and let us vote now on section 15 as it is in the bill; and if the Senator from New Mexico is indifferent about it, I am willing to join him in eliminating it now, and not waiting.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am not exactly indifferent about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not mean that the Senator is indifferent, because I do not think the Senator is indifferent about anything which he advocates. But if it is of no great consequence, if it is not vital to the bill, I myself see no objection to eliminating it, because the measure does in other sections define what can and what cannot be done.

Mr. HATCH. It is not vital, but it would be a help in the general enforcement of the act.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Mexico says that section 15 is not vital to the bill. Who is going to enforce the provisions of section 12 in the event section 15 is eliminated?

Mr. HATCH. Each department that loans or grants funds then would have to enforce its provisions, just as they now enforce the provisions of the act passed last summer. Of course, they are enforcing it in many places.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even the elimination of section 15 would not eliminate the provision that the Civil Service Commission shall make an investigation and report.

Mr. HATCH. No. That provision would still remain.

Mr. BARKLEY. And then it would be up to the agency or department in question whether it would take action necessary to correct the situation.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, if section 15 were eliminated, do I understand that the Civil Service Commission would still have the power under this bill to make investigations throughout the country upon complaints that have been legitimately filed with them?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that provision appears on page 5 of the reprint of the bill. The Civil Service Commission's power in that respect would remain the same. All that section 15 does relates to the definition and the issuance of rules and regulations.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator from New Mexico point out to me what part of the bill particularly designates that the particular departments shall enforce the law, in the event section 15 is eliminated?

Mr. HATCH. I think the obligation would still rest on the Civil Service Commission. The departments would report to the Civil Service Commission, just as they now do, under the bill, and the Civil Service Commission, upon the receipt of that information, would make the investigation and give notice to the States and the employees, all of which is provided in section 12 rather than section 15. Section 15 relates only to the issuance of rules and regulations, and to the power to define the term "active political management," and so forth.

Mr. LUCAS. If the last interpretation of the Senator from New Mexico is correct, he now says that section 15, after all, is mere surplusage and that the act can function and will function without it.

Mr. HATCH. I did not say that it is mere surplusage. I think it has a very definite value. But I think the act can function and will function without section 15. That is quite true.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me further?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator is correct, then, without section 15, if I understand the statement of the Senator correctly, the act will function just as though section 15 were in it?

Mr. HATCH. I did not say it that way, but I will say that it will function. Section 15 gives the Commission power to define the term "political management and political campaigns" and the power to issue rules and regulations. If that section is stricken out, the Commission will not have that power. In my opinion, it could function without section 15, but not as well.

Mr. LUCAS. Not as well, but under other sections they would still have the power to do what they are presumed to do under section 15.

Mr. HATCH. No; I would not make any such statement as that.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico for a moment. I have reached the point where I am satisfied that the Senate is going to pass the bill. Therefore I feel that we must improve the bill as much as we can. It is very evident that the Republicans have decided to take the dose of castor oil that we administered to them yesterday. So I want to make the bill a good one. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Illinois that it is a great deal better to have the rules and regulations enforced by one commission rather than by any one of 50, 60, or 70—I do not know how many there are—agencies which would administer it if section 15 were eliminated. I think the Senator has designed his bill in a logical manner in that respect, and that there ought to be one body administering the law.

I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Mexico and to the Senator from Kentucky. I handed the Senator from New Mexico an amendment yesterday. I do not suppose he did me the honor to read it.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes; I did.

Mr. BROWN. It is a three-page amendment, in which it is provided—

That the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns," as used in section 9 of said act—

And in section 12 of the pending bill—

is defined as follows:

Then I took each item in the 18 statements as to rules, contained on the franked card sent out by the Senator from New Mexico, and I used substantially the same language, trying to put it in a little more lawyerlike phraseology than appears on the card, in defining the term "political activity." I also placed in it the limitations. The amendment which I proposed could very well be considered, redesigned, and reshaped by the Senator from New Mexico, and be back here tomorrow morning. If we are going to pass this bill, as I think we are, I think we can state the civil-service rules in the law. I think we can state the several important interpretations that have been made and make them the statute law in this measure. That is the lawyerlike way to do this thing, rather than to leave it to the Civil Service Commission, or to their former interpretations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Recurring to what the Civil Service Commission can do if section 15 is eliminated, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bill provides, under the amendment which has already been agreed to, section 12, that whenever there is cause or reason to believe that any officer or employee has violated the law report shall be made to the Civil Service Commission. The Civil Service Commission makes an investigation. It reports back the facts in the matter to the agency having in charge the employment of the offender. Those things are done under the direction of the Civil Service Commission; and there is a provision for withholding certain funds unless the situation is corrected.

In the same amendment, on page 8, the Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section.

In other words, in order to carry out the functions of section 12, which have already been adopted by the Senate, the Commission is authorized to adopt rules and regulations governing the performance of its functions.

Section 15 does say that they can make rules and regulations interpreting political activity. I do not know whether or not the Civil Service Commission has made rules that govern every case that may arise in the future. I doubt it, because each case depends upon the set of facts developed in connection with it.

I agree with the Senator from New Mexico in the statement that the Civil Service Commission can function under the general authority given it in subsection (d) of section 12 to make rules and regulations governing the performance of its duties in the matters that do not originate with it, but which are referred to it for investigation, and upon which it makes a report to the agency employing the offender.

So I do not think that the Senator from New Mexico is going awry in suggesting that under the language already agreed to in section 12 the Civil Service Commission can function and make its rules for procedure in each case as it may arise.

Mr. BROWN. I agree quite generally with what the Senator from Kentucky says. First, I think it is better to have administration by the Civil Service Commission, and I think that that could be done under the pending bill. But the Senator from Kentucky will agree that no definition is provided of the term "active part in political management or political campaigns."

Mr. BARKLEY. No; and I will say to the Senator that, so far as I recall, Congress has never attempted in any of its civil-service laws to define what is pernicious political activity, for the situations are so variable, the facts are so different. Rarely, if ever, are the facts in two cases precisely alike. So I do not know how far Congress could go, or how wise it would be for Congress to define what is pernicious political activity. It is not like defining a corporation or a person. It is not like defining a utility or many other things which we do define by law. This is such a flexible term, depending on the facts in each case, that I believe Congress by undertaking to include certain things, might not include many other things which ought to be included, simply because of inability to think of all of them at once.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if the Senator will agree to write into section 9 of the Hatch law and into section 12 of the Hatch bill the substance of what has just been said, I will withdraw my opposition to the bill. The Senator was not talking about political activity. He continually used the words "pernicious political activity." I would not want any definition of "political activity." We would not need it if we had the word "pernicious" in the statute. But we are not talking about that kind of a statute. We are talking about a statute which condemns all political activity which has heretofore been considered entirely legitimate, and when we do that I want to define what the political activity is that must be proscribed by the statute.

Write the word "pernicious" in the measure, and I think right now the opposition to the bill would fall.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The whole philosophy of this bill is that all political activity engaged in by certain individuals is pernicious.

Mr. BROWN. I do not agree with that philosophy, and I do not think the Senator from Washington agrees with it. Does he?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is almost as difficult to write a definition of "political activity" as "pernicious political activity." Suppose, for instance, a city mail carrier in the Senator's home town or in mine delivers a package of mail to a business house and somebody says, "Who do you think is going to be elected Governor, or Congressman, or Senator, or sheriff?" and he says, "I think Bill Jones is going to be elected." Is that political activity? Is the mere expression of his opinion that someone is going to get a majority of the votes, political activity, or would it be pernicious political activity? Or suppose he were asked, "Have you heard anything about how they are going to vote in the Ninth Magisterial Precinct in McCracken County?" And he would answer, "I have heard that John Smith is going to carry that precinct." Is that political activity, or pernicious political activity?

Mr. BROWN. If we write in the provision that is contained on the franked card sent out by the Senator from New Mexico, which I have written into the following suggested amendment:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the free expressions of opinions on any and all subjects except in the making of political speeches in a political campaign.

That would cover the situation to which the Senator has referred. I think a great deal of the opposition to the bill would disappear if that language were written in it. I think the Senator's statements on his franked card should be written into the law. That is what I am asking for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose it covers the case I have cited, of a man who is asked a question and expresses an opinion.

But suppose, instead of that, he is going around electioneering, advocating the election of somebody, but is not making political speeches. How would the Senator cover that situation?

Mr. BROWN. I am positive that that is covered in one of the rules on the Senator's card.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment. I will yield to the Senator while I am looking for that statement on the card.

Mr. STEWART. I call attention to section 3 on the card, which says:

> Whatever an official or employee may not do directly he may not do indirectly or through another.

It seems to me that covers a multitude of things.

Mr. BROWN. Also section 8:

> Employees may vote as they please, but they must not solicit votes; mark ballots for others; help to get out votes; act as checkers, marker, or challenger for any party, or engage in any other activity at the polls except the casting of his own ballot.

I think that would pretty well cover what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. In just a moment.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to inquire what a checker is, since we are going into these things. I am familiar with the game of checkers.

Mr. BROWN. We have Checker cabs in Michigan. A checker might be some gentleman like Mr. Du Pont, or Mr. Pew, or some of the others who write enormous checks for the Republican National Committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, yesterday, relying upon the card which the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has issued, I think I made a misstatement, which I wish to correct.

Section 12 on the card says:

> Organization or leadership of political parades is prohibited, but marching in such parades is not prohibited.

That rather amused me. However, I find that the Senator from New Mexico did not correctly digest the rule. The rule in the book provides that no employee may march in a political parade. He may not play in a band in a political parade.

Mr. BROWN. Perhaps it is a little better to make a complete prohibition than a partial one. I referred to that case the other day. Assuming that section 12 of the statement sent out by the senior Senator from New Mexico—and not the one to which the Senator has referred—is the correct rule:

> Organization or leadership of political parades is prohibited, but marching in such parades is not prohibited—

Might we not find a situation of this kind? Suppose the Senator and I, as Federal officials in the city of Denver, were marching in the second rank of the parade, and suddenly the two gentlemen in front of us should happen to step out of line for some purpose or other: Then the Senator and I would be leading the parade and would lose our jobs as Federal employees. That is the real effect of section 12.

Mr. ADAMS. I was particularly concerned with the fact that if one were a Federal employee, he could not play nights in the band or play for political parades.

Mr. BROWN. If the cornetist leads the band, and the tuba player is at the end of the line, the cornetist violates the law because he is in front, but the tuba player and the drummer at the end are perfectly within the law.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The word "leadership" is contained in rule 12. How many leaders does a parade have? How would the Senator know? Is the fellow with the baton the leader; or are the first four, six, or eight the leaders?

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator would have to send a communication to the Civil Service Commission in Washington and obtain a ruling from the Commission as to whether the baton wielder or the cornetist is the leader of the parade.

Mr. HILL. Suppose it should be a very hot day in July or August. If the leader of the band, in front, should faint and fall down, and happen to be taken out of the parade, then the other fellow, who did not mean to be the leader, would suddenly find that he was automatically made the leader. Would he violate the law and lose his job and never again be eligible for that job?

Mr. BROWN. Never again. He never again could take that job. That is the situation to which I referred when I placed the Senator from Colorado and myself in the parade in Denver.

Mr. HILL. There is another rule which has given me much trouble. It says that employees may not write for publication, or publish any letter or article——

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator give the number of the rule?

Mr. HILL. It is the second sentence of No. 10:

> An employee may not write for publication, or publish any letter, or article signed or unsigned, in favor of or against any political party, candidate, or faction.

If someone writes a letter and does not sign it, how are we to catch him? How are we to enforce the law? How are we to take his job away from him and make him ineligible for the rest of his life? Suppose he does not sign his name. We have a practical problem. We, as legislators, have to look down and see the administration of the law. In the fair, equitable, and just administration of the law, how are we to catch the fellow who does not sign his name?

Mr. BROWN. We shall have to hire J. Edgar Hoover and join him with the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HILL. I see.

Just the other day the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which I happen to be a member, reported a resolution to investigate wire tapping. Of course, if we are not to have wire tapping, we could not use that method to find this fellow, could we?

Mr. BROWN. No.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have a really serious problem to present.

Yesterday we talked about educational institutions. During the past few years there has been built up in the educational institutions of the country the very delightful custom of having beautiful young ladies as drum majorettes to lead the university bands at their football games, and so forth. If one of these beautiful young ladies who is skillful as a drum majorette happened to be receiving money from the National Youth Administration, or happened to be in a school which received money from the Federal Government, I inquire whether or not she would be denied the opportunity of being a drum majorette.

Mr. BROWN. It would depend on whether she led the parade or marched in the ranks.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. She would lead the parade as drum majorette.

Mr. BROWN. Then surely she would be condemned under the Hatch Act, and she never again could receive any money from the N. Y. A.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of all the questions which have been raised about the band, would it not be proper for the members of the band to come to Washington and submit themselves to the Civil Service Commission before they started out?

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. LUCAS. One other question, which is really serious:

Getting back to section 15, it is my understanding that the Senator from New Mexico is about ready to abandon section 15, because he believes that under the provisions of the bill the Civil Service Commission can function practically as well under paragraph (d) of section 12. Paragraph (d) of section 12 says:

> The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. Any determination made by the Commission under this section shall be final—

And so forth. Does the Senator agree with me that from the standpoint of the delegation of power from the legislative branch of government to the executive branch, section 12 is even more vulnerable than section 15?

Mr. BROWN. I will ask the Senator what power is delegated in section 12.

Mr. LUCAS. I read:

> The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section.

In other words, the Commission has full power to do the very thing provided for by section 15, to lay down rules and regulations, governing what? Political activity, political management, political campaigns, pernicious political activity, and all other types of politics involved in the bill.

Mr. BROWN. In other words, the Senator believes that section 15 is superfluous, and that if we strike out section 15 everything proposed to be done by section 15 could be done under the powers conferred in section 12?

Mr. LUCAS. That is the position which the Senator from New Mexico is taking; and I agree with him, except that I say that from the standpoint of delegation of power from the legislative to the executive branch of the Government, section 12 is even more vulnerable than section 15.

Mr. BROWN. Everything the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] have said as to the unconstitutionality of section 15 would apply to section 12 if it were used as the basis for the power of fixing and establishing rules and regulations.

Mr. LUCAS. There can be no question about that in my mind; and the only reason why the Senator from Illinois never referred to section 12 was because if section 15 is unconstitutional, as we contend it is, the same argument automatically pertains to other sections dealing with section 15. In other words, we must construe the statute as a whole; and section 12 would be construed by a court along with section 15 in determining whether or not the act is constitutional.

Mr. BROWN. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from New Mexico that I think everything the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Oklahoma have said about section 15, and its now apparent application to section 12, would be eliminated if the Senator from New Mexico, the Senator from Georgia, and the subcommittee should write a new section 15 which would define political activity and fix its limitations.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. So far as I am concerned, I very frankly say to the Senator from Michigan and to all other Senators that I will agree to have nobody write the definition; nor will I be a party to writing a definition which is intended to emasculate the whole philosophy underlying the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Has the Senator read the amendment which I offered?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I have read it.

Mr. BROWN. Is there anything in that amendment which is not contained in the statements made on the franked card of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have not been interested enough in it to compare it with anything else; but I wish to make my position clear. I will not be a party to the complete emasculation of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator consider that we cannot write a definition of political activity?

Mr. GEORGE. I consider that every man who raises any question about what political activity means knows exactly what it means. It has been defined over and over and over again by the Civil Service Commission and other agencies of Government. I consider also that the difficulty is not in defining it. Everybody knows what it means and what is intended to be prohibited by such language.

Mr. BROWN. Then why is the Senator unwilling to write into the statute law the definition which the Civil Service Commission has made? That is what I am asking this afternoon.

Mr. GEORGE. Substantially all the definition is in the bill. Let us be clear about it. It is very well to profess friendship for the bill. I do not care whether or not Senators wish to engage in a filibuster. That is immaterial to me. However, I wish to say that the thing which lost the Democratic Party seats in the House and Senate in 1938 was the fear and feeling throughout the country that we were willing to use Federal funds in Federal agencies to affect elections. Go on into the campaign of 1940 with the conviction that the Republicans are deliberately playing a game against the Democratic Party and see what consolation can be obtained from that attitude.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I still say to the Senator——

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator asked me a question and I wish now to answer him.

Mr. BROWN. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. There is not any difficulty about the language of this bill. There is not any real difficulty about the construction which would be put upon the bill by the courts, the Civil Service Commission, or any other department of the Government. The difficulty is that the construction is known by everybody who wants to know what the law means. The courts and every agency of the Government which has had anything to do with the matter have repeatedly said exactly what this bill would be construed to mean.

Mr. BROWN. Now, let me read to the Senator what the Civil Service Commission said:

> Definition of political activity: It is impossible to give a complete list of the particular activities in which an employee may not engage.

Mr. GEORGE. Why, certainly it is, just as the courts throughout the ages have refused to define fraud, because they could not imagine every conceivable circumstance under which a practice would be fraudulent or in good faith. They knew very well that when they did define it, those who wanted to defraud would take advantage of the definition and get around it; so the courts have always said that no absolute, rigid, exhaustive, and exclusive definition of fraud could be made. They have put it upon the ground that all men might well understand—to wit, that the moment they defined fraud, the man who wanted to commit it would find his way around the definition.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator, splendid lawyer that he is, compare the term "political activity" with the term "fraud"?

Mr. GEORGE. No.

Mr. BROWN. I was not quite sure. I am yielding to the Senator, but I think he ought to yield to me to make my statement.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has been speaking most of the afternoon.

Mr. BROWN. No; I have not, I will say to the Senator. I started about 4 o'clock.

Mr. GEORGE. I should not have interrupted the Senator if he had not asked me a direct question.

Mr. BROWN. Let me finish my point. The Senator cannot compare the perfectly legitimate and proper term "political activity" with the term "fraud," which has an entirely different meaning in English common law.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not saying that the words are synonymous; but I am saying that any American lawyer who wants to know what political activity is can find it out, because upon that question there is no reasonable doubt.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is not going to.

Mr. GEORGE. However, I have a few words to say.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. A great deal has been said here about what the Republicans were doing; that they were voting solidly. I have never considered this a political issue. I do not consider the freedom of elections in America a political issue; and I exceedingly regret to learn that any Democrat will consider the freedom of elections in America a political issue or a political question.

We must know, if we exercise the slightest reason, that this bill has not been aimed at any particular State; that it has not been aimed at anything that was done in the campaigns of previous years. I myself have refrained from speaking on the bill because I did not want to inject into it a single thing that would partake in any manner, even remotely, of a political discussion, particularly of things that may have happened in my State or in any campaign in which I have been engaged.

Now I come to this point, and it is the basis of this legislation: The bill does not invade States' rights, and it is not intended to invade States' rights. It is intended to protect the States, but it is intended to protect both the State governments and the General Government, because it is intended to preserve freedom in elections; and without the free election there is no democratic process as we know it, whether in the State or in the Federal Government.

Within the past 7 and a fraction years, under our party, there has been the most rapid concentration of power in the Federal Government that has taken place at any given period of time in our whole history. In order to relieve many of the conditions which we found in 1933 to be intolerable, in order to relieve conditions which we as Democrats knew should be relieved, we found it necessary to appropriate the largest sums of money that have ever been appropriated by our Government in peacetimes.

We found it necessary to create in the country the vastest army of Federal officials that we have ever had in peace or in war; and included in that army are also State officials and employees who are really and in truth engaged in administering Federal funds.

If no abuse had arisen in any American State, if there had been no suspicion that the W. P. A. was being used for political purposes, if no charge had been made that there was any abuse of Federal activities in any State, or any abuse on the part of those who were administering Federal funds, whether they were denominated State officials or Federal officials, let me say to my party that the moral obligation would have rested upon the Democratic Party to follow these large appropriations of funds from the hands of Federal officials down into the hands of every official of the State and of every employee in the State, and to safeguard those funds as far as humanly possible against their misuse for political purposes in any circumstances.

Not only that, Mr. President, but my distinguished friend the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], in the most engaging and entertaining and enlightening address—as his addresses always are—reminded us that this was an attempt to have the Federal Congress say to the States upon what condition they could have Federal appropriations.

Mr. President, with the profoundest love for my friend, let me say to him now, and to all here, that we have made appropriations to be used in the States in increasing numbers since the Democratic Party came into power; and those appropriations will be continued throughout the years. They will go to the farmers. They will go for many activities within all the States that are not now even directly supported by Federal funds. We are not going to discontinue that practice altogether. Some of us may desire to see it discontinued, but it will not be discontinued, and in my opinion it cannot be wholly discontinued.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want to get away from the thread of my remarks now, but I will yield to the Senator in a minute.

What does it mean? It means that the State must assent to the conditions under which it receives appropriations.

What does the bill propose to do? To give to the Federal Government power to impose conditions upon the States? Not at all. It is a simple and feeble attempt to write one prohibition against further Federal imposition of power upon the States. We say that whatever the Federal Government may do about funds that are going to be sent into Virginia or into Georgia, funds shall not be sent down there to be used for political purposes; that we will not permit the political use of those funds in the States to corrupt the elections in those States.

We have gone further. We have said that if a State wants to have Federal money, and desires to administer it through a State agency, through a State official, a State employee, we, the Federal Government, will say to the States, and to their agents, that they cannot misuse, for the purpose of controlling an election, the fund sent there for the purposes for which the Congress deems wise to send the money into the States.

At the bottom of the democratic process, aye, at the bottom of free government as we know it in the United States, is the free election. The enormous concentration of power, the appropriation of enormous funds, puts the burden upon every man who votes for those funds, and especially upon the party which has voted them, to safeguard elections, not because we wish to take any liberties away from the little individual citizen who is working on W. P. A., not because we wish to restrict his freedom, but because we wish to restrict the power of the Federal Government through its officers and of the State government through its officers to coerce that citizen, and we want to leave him free to vote as he pleases, and even to express his opinion.

It is true that in order to make effective the provisions adopted for the safeguarding of the enormous sums of money which we are appropriating to the several States and for the use of the general Government, we must say that certain political activities must cease within these organizations, whether they are Federal or whether they are State. But the purpose of the proposed legislation, let me say to the Democratic Party, is to preserve freedom of elections.

I voted against the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], not because I would oppose the amendment upon principle, not because I did not think he would vote for the bill even if that amendment were adopted—and he very frankly said he would not—but we were not by this legislation, and are not now, attempting to correct all the abuses of politics, we are not attempting to destroy all the pernicious practices which have grown up in American politics; we are not attempting to purify American politics in the broad sense, or in the restricted sense in which that word has been used here.

We are merely undertaking to do one thing; and is not the Democratic Party willing to do that? We are saying that we recognize as basically true that elections must remain free, that they must not be controlled by the Federal Government, or by State officials who are administering Federal funds. We are saying that we do not care what party is in power, we ourselves as a party have made these great contributions to human welfare, to the betterment of the condition of our people within our States, and we recognize the undoubted moral obligation, as well as the political obligation, resting upon us to safeguard elections, not only against what is involved in the pending measure, but of course anything else which may threaten to destroy the freedom of elections.

Mr. President, need I remind the Senator that the Democratic Party will not live if Aubrey Williams addresses the workmen, who are receiving Federal funds, with the declaration, "Vote for those who gave you this money"? The Democratic Party will not live if such practice is indulged; it will not live on that kind of platform, and it will not live on that kind of philosophy.

The invidious distinction has been drawn here repeatedly that 40 Democrats were standing against this measure and a handful of some 20 standing with the majority leader, and opprobrium has been heaped upon the majority leader because the Republicans have been voting with the minority of the Democrats under his leadership.

Mr. President, that argument has saddened me. I am a Democrat; I have always been a Democrat, and expect to remain a Democrat. No one can drive me out of my party under any circumstances, so long as the party stands for any Democratic principles. I am not concerned, indeed I am not even voting in connection with the proposed legislation, because of anything done in my State. I am not even critical because the leader of my party, the President of the United States, entered my State in my last campaign. It is inevitable—and that is the argument I am trying to make—that when any political leadership, whether Democratic or Republican, whether Socialist or Communist, or what not, is given the great power we have seen fit to bestow on the Federal Government at the hands of the Democratic Party during the last 7¼ years, when such vast powers, I repeat, are given to any political party in power, and such vast sums of money are given, to be spent in all the States for various human activities, most of them good and desirable and even necessary, it is unavoidable that sometimes the head of that political party will make use of that power and will make use of that money in an attempt to control the organizations which have been built up on the money. To argue otherwise is childish, in my humble judgment. At least no argument to the contrary has ever addressed itself to my intelligence, or ever will.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator do me the honor of listening to me for awhile, as I have to him?

Mr. GEORGE. I will be through in just a moment, and then I will listen to the Senator.

So when the Federal Government has been compelled to follow the course of action which the Federal Government, under the leadership of our party, has had to follow, it has been inevitable that these abuses would arise.

I do not blame the President of the United States. I do not even blame Mr. Hopkins. If he had not been at the head of W. P. A., someone else would have been, and he would have been human, and in the excitement of a political campaign would have used his vast power. Other representatives of our party will use it, and representatives of the Republican Party will use it when they come into power. Make no mistake about that. But that is beside what I have tried to say: That whenever we find it necessary to create such vast power in the Federal Government, and especially to accumulate and to appropriate such vast sums of money, the undoubted moral obligation rests upon the party which must do these things, whether from choice or necessity, or both, to safeguard every vital activity of democracy which may be adversely affected by the use of such power and the use of such tremendous sums of money.

First and foremost is the election, which must remain free from the coercive control of any vast governmental machinery in possession of enormous sums of money into whatever political hands that machinery may be for the time entrusted, because it is perfectly obvious that human beings, in order to perpetuate themselves in political power, will first of all abuse the power which they have been given for a good purpose, out of weakness, if for no other reason, and try to influence and control an election which may be regarded as vital to themselves.

Mr. President, I am not going to criticize any Senator because of the way he votes. But under my conscience I would not take the responsibility of saying that upon any ground whatever I should refuse to follow and safeguard the vast sums of money that have been appropriated and will again be appropriated, and which will go down into our States, through the hands of officers of the States, and through those of Federal officeholders, through the hands of employees of both the Federal and State Governments. I would not assume the responsibility of saying that I would not safeguard those things which are vital in our life, the freedom of humble men and women to walk uprightly to the polls, to vote without fear of molestation, to vote without any thought that their jobs are in the balance.

Mr. President, I need not tell Senators that already there have been some abuses. The Senator from West Virginia has brought some things to the attention of the Senate, as have other Senators also. But even if no abuses had occurred up to this time, we all know that they would ultimately appear in our body politic. We cannot escape the conclusion that they would ultimately manifest themselves.

So I shall not be deterred by any thought that perhaps I am taking away from the American citizen a little bit of his privilege to engage actively in a political campaign, when the large army of civil-service employees for 50 years have been denied that privilege. Nor shall I concern myself about the rights of the States, because I know the States are receiving the money and will continue to receive the money. And today there is not a solitary restriction upon the Federal power, when it offers money to the State of Georgia, or Virginia, or North Carolina.

I want the legislation to contain provisions by which we shall try to safeguard the elections and keep them free. I do not say "pure." I know very well that the use of large sums of money is a corrupting influence in a political campaign. I know very well that certain types of organized voting are directly against the democratic form of government. I can appreciate that. All those abuses cannot be corrected immediately. Certainly we cannot correct them all in a bill which takes—not a drastic, but rather a feeble step, although it is the very best we can do now—a very limited step toward the preservation of free elections as against the influences that would be built up around enormous sums of Federal money, unlimited grants of Federal power handled by men not always deeply and piously devoted to the American principles of government, both State and Federal.

I am not critical of the President. I want to repeat that. I never have cared because he went into my State and made an attack upon my public record. That did not matter. The people of my State answered that. But they answered it, let me say to the Senator from Michigan, whom I respect, and to all my able colleagues—they answered it because there is a free election in Georgia.

If freedom of election shall ever be destroyed through the enormous power of the Federal Government, linked perhaps with the activity of a State administration that is willing, as some may have been, to sell their own States down the river for a mess of Federal pottage; if the time ever comes when, because of the enormous power lodged in the hands of the Federal Government through great armies of men and women who must labor for a living, and who are grateful for the opportunity to earn even a subsistence wage on any kind of Federal activity or project, the freedom of election is destroyed, then what happened in Georgia in 1938 will be only a memory.

Let me say, in conclusion, that our whole political system depends upon free elections, plus the freedom of the American press. I have seen many things which to me looked discouraging, but I have always been heartened when I have seen how willing the people were to try to keep elections free, so men and women could express themselves without fear, and without coercion, and without compulsion, and I am heartened because the American press, by and large, almost without exception, has been willing to seek the truth upon many vital questions.

Although my good friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] spoke of one newspaper which had been supporting our distinguished friend the author of this bill, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], let me say to the Senator from Indiana that there are many other newspapers in the United States which are supporting the bill not because it is perfect, not because one cannot find things in it which ought to be corrected, not because one cannot find things in it which will be corrected next year and the years after that—not by any means—but they have supported it because they sensed precisely what I have been trying to say, that the freedom of elections in America is involved, and they desire to prevent the slightest coercion, or opportunity to coerce, the voters who happen to hold Federal offices, or who occupy positions under a State administration, because of the influence of the money in the hands of the Government. They have sensed, as I have said, the vital purpose of this bill to do that, and to do exactly that.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator from Georgia. I wish to say to Senators that I do not want to yield for a few minutes, and I hope the Senator from Georgia will sit in his seat and turn around and look at me, so he can give me the same attention I have given him.

I have always looked upon the Senator from Georgia as one of the great statesmen not only of the Senate but of the entire American Nation. I have sat with him in subcommittees as a minor member of his committee. I have sat with him in the Finance Committee during the 4 years that I have been honored by being given the privilege of representing the State of Michigan in the Senate of the United States. I not only admire and revere him as one of the elder statesmen, but I have an uncommon affection for the Senator from Georgia.

The Senator from Georgia says he is a Democrat. I, too, am a Democrat. As the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] can testify, I have been a Democrat through all the mature years of my life, in a State of the American Union where it was a little harder to be a Democrat than it was for the Senator from Georgia to be a Democrat in his State. He lives in a State where to be a Democrat means certain election to public office, once the nomination is received. I come from a State where, until 1932, it meant certain defeat to be a candidate on the Democratic ticket, as I was, in election after election, for Member of the House of Representatives, judge of the supreme court, and other offices.

I will say to the Senator from Georgia that at one time I was the only Democratic prosecuting attorney in the entire 83 counties of my State of Michigan. I have heard gentlemen from the South talk about the torn and tattered army which marched home after Appomattox. We Democrats in Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indiana are the torn and tattered army of Democracy. It has been hard for us to adhere to a party which has met defeat after defeat. Each election was another Appomattox.

Mr. President, in 1924 my party was defeated by a majority of 800,000. The Senator never adhered to a political party like that in the State of Georgia. If he is entitled to the honor of being a Democrat when he has been affiliated with a party whose constant rule is success, then I say that those of us here in the back row, who came to the Senate somewhat more recently, are entitled to the same honor for adhering to the Democratic Party through all the lean years of its existence in our States.

The Senator from Georgia would not be chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections if he depended upon the Democratic Party south of the Mason and Dixon's line. He is chairman of that committee because we carried the flag for years and years in Michigan, Indiana, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, and other States which made the Senator from Georgia the chairman of this committee in 1932.

Let no man from Georgia tell me that his Democracy is any better than mine. I think my record in that respect fully measures up to his.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator wishes me to interrupt him.

Mr. BROWN. I did not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wish to say that I was not comparing the votes during the past 2 weeks with a group of Republicans and a mere handful of Democrats. That comparison has been made by others.

Mr. BROWN. I take it that the Senator was proving that he is a Democrat, because he went through the fires of the election in Georgia in 1938, in which I was with him 100 percent, as he knows. I was calling his attention and the attention of the Senate to the fact that I, too, have a record in democracy which entitles me to defend my vote as a Democrat in this body, just as he is defending his vote.

Mr. President, I do not wish this question to be decided upon the basis of personalities. The Senator says I have been conducting a filibuster. I am the only Democrat on this side, with the exception of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has proposed amendments to which the Senator from Georgia has agreed and to which the Senator from New Mexico has agreed and to which the Senate has agreed in an effort to help the bill. I have not conducted a filibuster. I have tried to obtain a definition in the law which ought to be written into the law.

Now we come down to another question. The Senator from Georgia says that free elections are what we need in this country. I do not know what the Senator means by that statement. For 150 years we have been operating without the Hatch law—either the present existing law or the provisions of the pending bill—and I defy any man under heaven to deny that elections in America have been substantially, essentially, free elections. No country in the history of the civilized world has advanced as far as has the United States of America in giving democracy to the people and giving the control of their Government to the people. We do have free elections.

But, Mr. President, there are provisions in the Constitution of the United States which are just as important as free elections. Let me digress to ask the Senator from Georgia, chairman of the committee which reported the bill, whether he thinks he would have free elections in Georgia if we followed the implications of the bill to their logical conclusion. I was thinking about that question last night. If we have the right to say that certain individuals shall not electioneer at the public polling places, have we not the right to say that, instead of the citizens of Georgia counting the ballots which are cast in Georgia for the office of President of the United States, the citizens of Michigan, chosen as Federal officials, shall go down into Georgia and conduct elections in Georgia? I am sorry to say that some of the citizens of Michigan, not with pen and ink, but with bayonets dripping with blood, once conducted in the State of Georgia elections which were not free elections. I say, if the implications of the bill are carried through to their logical and final conclusion, the Federal Government of the United States will determine who shall count the ballots—not merely the men who shall go from door to door ringing door bells; not the men who shall go from man to man and say, "Will you vote for the Democratic ticket?" or "Will you vote for the Republican ticket?" No. If we follow logically the legal propositions which the distinguished Senator lays down, then I say that federally appointed men from Michigan and Illinois and Indiana will be counting the ballots in Georgia, and federally appointed men from Georgia may be counting the ballots in Michigan cast for the President of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I refuse to yield. I did not interrupt the Senator. I decline to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, if the Senator does not want to be interrupted. I merely wanted to remind him that already there is written in the Constitution a single provision which would protect the States as to the time and place of holding the elections, and every other principle involved in it might well be enacted.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I am not going into another subject along that line, and I hope he does not provoke me to going into it——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not trying to provoke the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS and other Senators. Regular order!

Mr. GEORGE. But I have never been frightened by any threat to do something to my State.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I demand the regular order in this debate.

Mr. BROWN. I wish the Senator from Illinois would not do that. I want to be courteous to my friend from Georgia. I revere him now as much as I did before he made what I consider a rather bitter attack upon me. I still think as much of him as I ever did.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not mean to make any attack on the Senator personally.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator charged me with being insincere in my advocacy of this position.

Mr. BURKE. No, no.

Mr. BROWN. I beg to differ with the Senator from Nebraska, who says, "No," "No."

Mr. GEORGE. I did not intend——

Mr. BROWN. I decline to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not intend to make the slightest unkind reference or implication as to the Senator personally; not at all.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator for that; and I do not mean to be unkind to him. We are debating here a fundamental, a deeply important principle of American liberty. I go back to the proposition upon which I started. The Senator talk about free elections. Let the people be free and your elections will be free. I say that when the Senator, by the passage of this bill, lays these prohibitions upon a man who is not a Federal official, but a State official so remotely connected with the Federal Government that no one could find that connection except through the trickling of perhaps 10 cents a day out of the Federal Treasury, we will say, into the salary of a professor in my University of Michigan—a man who must hold his job in order to live and support his family—the Senator takes away from him that which was guaranteed him by the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, written by one of the demigods of early American politics. He denies to that man freedom of speech just as effectively as if he wrote into a statute a statement that a professor in the University of Michigan should not be permitted to open his mouth upon a subject of political contention throughout the United States.

Why do I say that? The most powerful of all compulsions upon people are not the gates that close the prison walls. The most powerful compulsions in American public life are economic compulsions. When we say to the teacher in the University of Michigan: "You shall not talk about the tariff; you shall not talk about President Roosevelt; you shall not talk about or condemn ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG or PRENTISS M. BROWN, unless you give up your means of livelihood, unless you give up the means by which you live and support yourself by giving up your salary as a teacher in this university," I say we are placing upon him a much more powerful and potent compulsion than if we sent him to the county jail of Washtenaw County, Mich., for 30 days. He would rather serve those 30 days in the interest of human liberty than to lose the means by which he supports himself, his wife, and those who are dependent upon him.

That is the kind of liberty I am pleading for in this case. The Senator from Georgia, because of his unfortunate experience, because of an experience in Georgia with political manipulators that I condemn and am willing to condemn upon this floor, an unfair use of Federal money, assumes from that that all men who are connected with the Government of the United States, be they employees of the Department of the Interior, be they minor officials in the office of the Secretary of State administering old-age pensions, are so certain to attempt to corrupt elections in the United States that neither they nor any of the total of all twelve hundred thousand Federal employees may enjoy the constitutional privilege of free speech that is guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

That is one thing I am fighting for. I am fighting for another thing; and these are the two fundamental points that affect me in this bill. Let me remind the Senator from Georgia that I was with him and with the Senator from New Mexico upon the first two vital votes, on the Miller amendment and the Adams amendment, because I wanted to retain section 9 of the law if I could, but not to impose upon my State and the Senator's State the onerous provisions of section 12.

But I do not want to be diverted. My second point—and it is an important point—is that any individual, be he a State employee, be he a Federal employee, or what not, in connection with the Government of the United States or of any State, has a right to know, not from a Civil Service Commission but from the Congress of the United States, through the imposition of its statements of law—not speeches, not rules and regulations, but statute law—what is a violation of the law. Am I wrong about that?

No citizen in my State should be bound by a Federal statute which merely says that he may not engage in political activity. He has a right to know what political activity is to be condemned; and the storm which we have had in the late hours of the afternoon was caused by a simple request upon my part that the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senator from Georgia accept the amendment I proposed, which, line for line and sentence for sentence, takes everything that is in the franked card that the Senator from New Mexico mailed, and says, "These things you may not do."

That is what my people back in Michigan want to know: When will they be engaged in political activity, and when will they not be engaged in political activity?

I am fighting for just two things: First, the right of all citizens to the fundamental privileges of free speech for which our forefathers fought and died, and which they wrote into the first amendment to the Constitution; and, second, an absolute, certain statement as to what constitutes the kind of political activity which Congress seeks to condemn.

I beg the pardon of the senior Senator from Georgia if I have exhibited some undue heat here this afternoon. I think he likewise was somewhat earnest in his argument. I say now that I extend the right hand of fellowship to him. I have the same warm admiration for him I had before he said anything upon this bill. I consider him one of the great Senators in this august body. A few weeks or months ago, when someone sent out a list of the 10 greatest and most influential Members of the Senate of the United States, he made a grievous error when he did not place the senior Senator from Georgia among the first of those Senators.

Mr. President, we are all the victims of our circumstances. Our mental processes are affected by those things which happen around us, and that, I am sorry to say, probably affects most of us in the Senate. I may be selfish in my attitude toward the pending bill. If so, I am not conscious of it. My conscience is clear. The Senator from Georgia may be affected by the circumstances surrounding his election in 1938. I do not think he is conscious of that fact. But, as I have stated, we are all victims of the circumstances which surround us, and if the Senator from Georgia implies that I am interested in the bill in the manner in which I am, I want him to accord to me the same high motives in my opposition to the bill which I accord to him in his advocacy of the bill.

Mr. President, I renew my request that the majority leader, the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senator from Georgia—although the Senator from Georgia started out by utterly refusing to do any such thing—consider the proposition of nominating in the bond, of naming in section 15, to be added to the statute, the pernicious political practices which they wish to condemn.

Senators, I ask nothing more, and in behalf of the people of my State I think I am entitled to ask that that matter be given consideration during the evening hour, and that tomorrow the committee endeavor at least to write into the statute law the particular, certain, and definite things which they seek to deny by way of political activity to all the Federal and State employees who are subject to the onerous and heavy provisions of the law and this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in the nature of a substitute for section 15 of the law. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. NORRIS' name was called). The senior Senator from Nebraska is absent on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senators from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN], the Senators from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE and Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "yea," and, if present, the Senator from Utah would vote "nay."

I also announce the pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea" and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and in his absence I cannot vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea." I am informed that if the Senator from Virginia were present and voting he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—42

Austin	George	McCarran	Thomas, Idaho
Barbour	Gerry	McNary	Thomas, Utah

So Mr. HATCH's amendment in the nature of a substitute for section 15 of the law was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to see if we cannot come to an understanding about procedure in the immediate future. Many Senators have urged that we continue in session tonight and try to conclude action on the bill. I am entirely willing to do that, or I am entirely willing to see if we can arrive at an agreement for a vote tomorrow. I do not know how the Senate feels about continuing in session tonight. I do not wish to force Senators to remain here unless they are willing to. In fact, I could not do so if I wanted to. So I shall see if we can arrive at a unanimous-consent agreement to fix the time for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian calls the Chair's attention to the fact that there still is another vote necessary with respect to section 15, the committee amendment as amended. The last action was on a substitute.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am perfectly willing to have the Senate dispose of that.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have a suggestion to make in reference to that matter. I do not want to take more than 2 or 3 minutes of the Senate's time to express my views.

I am very much in accord with the premise which I understand was laid down by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I differ with that of the Senator from Michigan. The original Hatch Act provided that—

> No officer or employee * * * shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

That language was in the original act without definition. It seems to me that the wise thing to do is to allow those words to stand in the supplemental bill as they stand in the original act.

I think we will make a mistake if we adopt section 15 in any form. As the Senator from Georgia has said, there is not a Senator, there is hardly a citizen, who does not have a very clear understanding of what is meant by "political management and political campaigns," and if we forbade those things in terms, I think the act would be more flexible, I think it would be easier to enforce than if we were to attempt to lay down, as the substitute proposes, a series of unchanging definitions. The substitute lays down definitions of things which have arisen in the past. From the standpoint of the purpose of the Senator from New Mexico, I think it would be a mistake to put into the bill a series of definitions based upon regulations of the Civil Service Commission. Therefore it seems to me much wiser to have section 15 go out of the bill, and leave stand its positive declaration, as we find it in the original Hatch Act. As the Senate knows, I concurred in that argument. I am anxious to see the bill, if it is to be enacted, in understandable and proper form.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I voted for the substitute for section 15 in the bill. I desire to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado. I am anxious to see section 15 go out, but I thought that the substitute just offered an improvement over the committee amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that in order to complete the present parliamentary situation the vote is necessary on the amendment as amended, I shall desist from making any effort in respect to a unanimous-consent agreement until that matter is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment as amended by the last amendment of the Senator from New Mexico. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a division.

On a division, the ayes were 40, the noes 31.

So the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now ask unanimous consent that not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate shall proceed to vote on the bill and all amendments and all motions pertaining thereto; that no amendment shall be offered which has not been read for the information of the Senate by 4:40 p. m. tomorrow; and that this agreement shall be null and void in the event the antilynching bill is offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In order that we may try to complete the consideration of the pending measure at this time, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, to be known as section 16, as follows:

> Provided, That the words or phrase "in part" heretofore used in sections 2 and 12 in this amendment, as amended, with reference to loans and grants made by the United States to any State, county, or municipality, shall be construed to mean a major part of such loan or grant.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inasmuch as objection was made to my request a moment ago, I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of the consideration of the bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto, with the proviso that if the antilynching bill is offered as an amendment to the bill that limitation shall not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky submits the unanimous-consent request that throughout the remainder of the consideration of the bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto, provided that if the antilynching bill is offered as an amendment to the bill the unanimous-consent request shall be voided. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I did not hear what was said. Does the unanimous-consent request mean that we shall now adjourn?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know. I cannot say.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will add to his unanimous-consent request a provision that we go over until tomorrow immediately upon the adoption of the unanimous-consent request, I shall not object. I wish to say to the Senator that after having been on the floor since 11 o'clock this morning, and having taken a more active part in the consideration of the bill during the past 2 weeks than I have done with respect to any other measure, I think it is unfair to those of us who have been carrying on the battle to ask us to stay here until a late hour this evening.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I entertain the hope that the Senator from Oklahoma will withdraw his objection to my former request, which was that we vote not later than 5 o'clock tomorrow, and that no amendment shall be taken up which is not read for the information of the Senate not later than 4:40 o'clock, and that in the event the antilynching bill is offered as an amendment to the pending bill, the unanimous-consent agreement shall be void.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, we have had a great many amendments voted on, and on all the substantial amendments there has been a majority to sustain the philosophy of the bill. We have just had a very decisive vote. It was my understanding, and perhaps my hope, that the remainder of the amendments could be passed upon quickly, and that when we should conclude today the bill would have been passed. However, if that is seemingly out of the question, of course, the reasons for my objection disappear, and I am glad to withdraw my objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have tried to be wholeheartedly cooperative. I am advised that a number of Senators who would like to be present at the time of final passage of the bill will be absent tomorrow on important business. I suggest to the able Senator that he make the date Monday at 4 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty about that is that two or three proposals have been suggested to me, including the one now suggested by the Senator. We all know that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is anxious to take up and dispose of the agricultural appropriation bill, and we are all anxious to assist him. To fix the hour of voting at 5 o'clock, or even 4 o'clock, on Monday would practically consume the entire day of Monday, although, so far as I am concerned, I do not know that 1 day makes much difference. So far as I am individually concerned, with the understanding that we can dispose of the bill, and that if an agreement is entered into we shall recess from now till Monday, I am willing to modify the agreement so as to apply to Monday instead of tomorrow, except that the hour shall be 4 o'clock p. m. instead of 5 o'clock.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am not sure that I understood all of the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. The request, as modified, is that not later than 4 p. m. on Monday the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and all amendments and all motions relating thereto.

Mr. RUSSELL. Why does not the Senator from Kentucky wish to have a session tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to have a session tomorrow, and I made my original request for tomorrow; but it seems that I cannot obtain an agreement for tomorrow, on the ground that some Senators will be absent from the city. With important legislation like this on the calendar and under consideration, and with a vote almost arrived at, I do not quite understand why Senators feel that they can absent themselves tomorrow because it happens to be Saturday. However, I do not wish to quibble. I am perfectly willing to let the bill go over until Monday. I will cooperate with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] to the extent of my ability.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky has been willing to have the agricultural appropriation bill come up, but I have felt very keenly the fact that on Monday of this week, for the first time in my experience, the Senate voted down a motion to consider a general appropriation bill on the assumption that the pending business would take only 1 or 2 days. We are now approaching the week end. I regard it as vitally important that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill at the very earliest possible date.

It may be truly said that the action of the Senate could well be taken at a later date; but the effect of delay on the agricultural appropriation bill is certainly not to strengthen the chances of the Senate committee amendments being finally enacted into law. What I am seeking to promote is the final passage of the bill through all the ramifications of the legislative process, rather than mere approval by the Senate.

I hope those who have objected to the unanimous-consent request for tomorrow will withdraw the objections. It would not seriously hurt the Senate to work a while on Saturday, and I think it would promote the chances of the agricultural appropriation bill not to delay it until next week.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I fully appreciate what the Senator has in his mind, and I am sympathetic with his viewpoint; but I do not believe a delay of 1 day will affect that situation. I do not believe the delay up to the present time has affected it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish I could share the optimism of the Senator from Kentucky. I regretted that I could not share his optimism on Monday that the consideration of the pending bill would be concluded by Tuesday afternoon at the latest. I have already heard of movements under way, as a result of this delay, which are likely to impair the chances of the Senate amendments to the agricultural appropriation bill when that bill reaches the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator will not object to this request.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky make the hour 3 o'clock, so that we may make some progress on the agricultural bill? The Senator well knows that if we are to vote at 4 o'clock on the pending bill the Senate will not make any progress with the agricultural appropriation bill on Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I believe the agricultural appropriation bill can be passed in 1 day. Perhaps I am more optimistic than is the Senator in that hope.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope the Senator is correct. I am inclined to share that belief.

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe we can finish the agricultural appropriation bill on Tuesday. I am now ready to vote on the pending bill, as the Senator knows, and any hour tomorrow or Monday will suit me; but I am trying to obtain an agreement.

Mr. RUSSELL. Could not the Senator make the hour of voting 3 o'clock, so that we may start on the agricultural appropriation bill on Monday? The Senate can meet at 11 o'clock on Monday and have just as many hours to consider the pending bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to fixing the hour at 3 o'clock, and I so modify my request.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the request is made to go over until Monday because some Senators will be away tomorrow, and want to vote on the bill. I have been waiting all the week to vote on the bill, as I have to go away tomorrow, and will not be here Monday. Therefore, I feel constrained to object to a unanimous-consent agreement fixing an hour to vote on Monday. I think it would be very much better to stay here now and finish the bill before we adjourn.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Am I to understand that the Senator from Oregon will object to my original request to fix a time for a vote tomorrow?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, personally I have wanted to vote on the bill since the day it was read by the clerk, and I think that is the attitude of the other Republican Members of the Senate. A number of Members some time ago accepted engagements to speak before patriotic societies on the occasion of the anniversary of the birth of St. Patrick. These engagements were accepted some weeks ago, and Senators are unable to break them at this time. I cannot see any reason why 1 day should have a material bearing on this matter; and I prefer either to vote on Monday or to go forward tonight. So I shall object to fixing an hour to vote on Saturday.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am going to speak for only a very few minutes on this amendment. The amendment has to do with the portion of the section which reads:

> Any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States—

And so forth. These words are substituted for the portion of the section dealing with the same subject. I ask that the amendment be stated from the desk, since the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has interrogated me about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill, as a new section, the following:

> SEC. 16. Provided, That the words or phrase "in part" heretofore used in sections 2 and 12 in this amendment, as amended, with reference to loans and grants made by the United States to any State, county, or municipality shall be construed to mean a major part of such loan or grant.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the reason why I offer this amendment—and, as I say, I desire to speak for only a moment or two on it—is because I make this distinction:

The bill introduced by the Senator from New Mexico provides that the employees of the States, counties, and municipalities which have been granted or loaned money by the United States Government shall be subject to the provisions of this act, and that the control of the Government shall continue over these employees whether the grant is 1 percent, 10 percent, 50 percent, or 100 percent. I think a distinction should be made. I mean that since it is impossible to fix a degree of control over the political activity of an employee of a State government or of a county or municipality, this statute should fix some amount or some portion of an amount which should control. The same control over the employee is retained to the United States Government by the bill as it stands whether the Government contributes the entire amount to the particular project or whether it contributes only 1 percent.

I have some figures which I will not tire the Members of the Senate by undertaking to read, because I said I was going to speak for only a moment; but I want to refer to one or two instances of Government grants, loans, and so forth, which would be affected by this measure.

For instance, in the case of old-age pensions the Government, I believe, contributes 50 percent. The remainder is made up by the States, and sometimes a portion of it is made up by the counties within the States which participate. I think there should be a considerable difference between a case in which the Government contributes 50 percent or more to any particular project or activity, and one in which, as in many instances like the game and fish department, perhaps, or the health department, it contributes a much smaller amount. So I believe this amendment to be a good one, because no degree of control can be fixed by reason of the percentage or portion of the grant or loan which the United States Government makes to the State, or to the county, or to the particular municipality.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STEWART. I yield; yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the amendment of the Senator apply in the case of a loan or grant with respect to a construction project under P. W. A., or does it apply to the portion of the Federal loan or grant which is devoted to the payment of the compensation of the employee?

Mr. STEWART. I simply undertake to add a new paragraph to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico as it has been amended, so as to provide that before the act shall apply, a major part of the loan or grant must have been made by the United States. I do not undertake to change the wording or the meaning of the law at all. I merely want the Hatch Act to apply only in cases in which the United States Government contributes a major portion of the fund by way of grant or loan.

Mr. RUSSELL. Whether it is applied to a construction project, as in the case of a P. W. A. grant, or whether it is applied to the payment of compensation of employees selected by the State, as in the case of those who administer the Unemployment Compensation Act?

Mr. STEWART. In any instance in which the Hatch Act otherwise would apply, I do not want it to apply unless the United States Government contributes a major portion of the amount of money which is directed to the particular project.

Mr. RUSSELL. In other words, the contention of the Senator from Tennessee—and it seems to me to be a reasonable one—is that the Federal Government should not undertake to control those who are State employees in cases in which the Federal Government contributes less than one-half of the compensation which goes to those employees?

Mr. STEWART. That is the distinction I am endeavoring to make; and I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In the beginning of the debate upon this bill I cited this example, which is apropos the amendment now being debated by the Senator from Tennessee.

Take the example of the highway department in Illinois. If we obtain from the Federal Government a grant of $50,000, and that $50,000 is thrown into a general fund of $10,000,000, and the $10,050,000 is used in the construction of highways, in every foot of highway some part of that $50,000 is lodged, and every individual engaged in employment upon the highway would be subject to the Hatch bill as it is now written.

I think the Senator's amendment is a good one. It does seem to me that where a major portion of the money is being furnished by the State, the Federal Government should not step in and have anything to say about the political activities of the individual who happens to be the beneficiary of that fund.

Mr. STEWART. I thank the Senator, and I remember very well in the early days of the consideration of the pending bill the Senator contributed that idea.

The argument has been presented by the proponents of this measure that the United States Government had the right to control the political activity of those engaged in enterprises financed in whole or in part by the United States Government in any State, county, or municipality.

As the law now stands, to repeat what I have already stated, if the United States Government should contribute only 1 percent to a particular project in an affected area, it would mean that every employee, everyone engaged in work on that particular project, would be affected by the provisions of the proposed law, and if the argument is good, that the United States Government has the right to invade the States because of the fact that it contributes money for the upbuilding of the States, then it seems to me just as reasonable to insist that the question might be asked, How much money do they contribute?

The Government contributes to each and every State of the Union, as I understand, 50 percent of the old-age pension money paid to pensioners throughout the country. Yet, if a contribution is made toward the erection of a schoolhouse in some county or municipality in any part of this Nation, under the present law the limit which might be paid by the Government toward the erection of that schoolhouse is, I believe, $52,000. Suppose the building cost $500,000; there would be a contribution of about 10 percent which the United States Government would make toward the cost of the entire project, but they would exercise the same control over those actively interested and engaged in the project as they would in instances where the Government contributed 75 percent, or contributed the entire amount, to any particular project.

I think it is interesting in this connection—and I do not think it has yet been pointed out—to learn of the number of people there are in the United States who are employed in government. I have here a copy of the National Municipal Review for March 1939, and at page 204 of that issue of the magazine, under the title "1 in every 9 works for the Government" it is pointed out that in 1937 there were employed in government, that is, by the United States Government and the governments of the various States of the Union, the counties and the municipalities, about 3,800,000 public servants.

Out of that number, 1,200,000, I believe, are employed by the United States Government. This number has been constantly increasing, as we know, because by comparison with the figures for the 2 years just prior to the issuance of this magazine, we find there has been an increase of about 600,000 people on the public pay rolls of the Nation. This does not include W. P. A. workers and those on relief. I am speaking of those employed and actually at work in various departments of the Government. So we find 1,200,000 at work for the Federal Government, and the remainder, or about 2,600,000, at work in county, State, and other types of government.

All the employees of the Federal Government, the 1,200,000, are affected by the Hatch Act.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. How many State employees are shown in that estimate?

Mr. STEWART. In 1937 there were 1,202,000 Federal employees, there were 367,000 State employees, 697,000 city employees, 298,000 county, township, and minor unit employees, and 1,200,000 employed in public education.

Mr. BROWN. What is the total for State, municipal, county, and city employees?

Mr. STEWART. Let me read one paragraph, which I want to have in the RECORD, anyway:

> The latest comprehensive estimate of Government employees, published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in its study of national income for 1937, places the number of persons working directly for State and local governmental units at 2,600,000.

Mr. BROWN. That is the figure I was trying to reach. I may say to the Senator that I was and am chairman of the special committee created by the Senate to investigate the matter of reciprocal taxation of State and Federal employees, and in the hearings which we held last February the testimony was to the effect that in 1937 there were 2,600,000 State and local employees who would be subject to the Federal income tax.

I do not mean by that to imply that they would all be taxable, but there are that many State and local employees, and, as the Senator has said, a million two hundred thousand Federal employees. So we can call it 4,000,000.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; approximately 4,000,000. All the Federal employees, the 1,200,000, are affected by the existing law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it merely applies the provisions of the Hatch Act to cases where the Federal Government furnishes a major portion of the funds.

Mr. STEWART. A major portion of the money contributed to a particular activity.

Mr. BROWN. I did not understand it was the major portion. I think that if the Federal Government contributes 10 percent, or 5 percent, or 1 percent, the evil, if it be an evil, permeates all of the employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is under the Hatch bill, but I am talking about the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BROWN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McKELLAR. His amendment changes the Hatch bill only to the extent of making it apply when the Federal Government supplies a major portion of the money expended in an activity, as I understand.

Mr. STEWART. That is correct. In other words, the portion of the bill to which this amendment would apply would read, if the amendment were adopted:

> No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or the major part of which is financed by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency—

And so forth. To repeat, if I may, just for the purpose of emphasis, it has been argued, and there is, of course, good sense in the argument, that if the United States Government contributes money to my State of Tennessee, or to any other State of the Union, they probably might have a right—and it is claimed by some that they do have a right—to control the political activity of those who benefit directly, as employees, from the money that is sent into the State by the United States Government. If that is reasonable, it seems to me it is just as reasonable to say that a certain amount or a certain percentage of the contribution should be fixed by this measure, and not permit the United States Government to control the activity of a group of persons employed on a project to which the Government itself contributes only 1 percent, or perhaps 10 or 15 percent, or some other small amount.

I have provided in this amendment that the Federal Government must contribute a major portion of the cost of the particular project or activity before the employees who benefit from the Government money shall come under the Hatch Act.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. In other words, the Senator thinks that if the Federal Government is going to control the expenditure of its money, the State has a right to control the expenditure of its money. The Federal Government is not furnishing all the money; therefore, it does not have the right to dictate the whole policy. It is the Senator's contention that the State has something to say with respect to policy.

Mr. STEWART. To answer the question with respect to State rights, it seems to me that if the State contributes, say, 75 percent of the cost of a project, and the United States Government contributes only 25 percent, the United States Government should not have a right to dictate to those who are employed on the project.

I said I did not want to talk at length about this matter, but I am in earnest about the amendment. I believe it is a common-sense amendment. I believe the Hatch law will be much more workable and will have a much more salutary effect if passed with my amendment in it.

Mr. President, I do not think it is right for the United States Government to claim that it has the right to control every project in every town and in every county in every State of the Union simply because it contributes a small percentage of the total cost of the project.

I have a good many ideas on various other phases of the bill, but I do not care to discuss them now. I should like to have the amendment acted upon, and if it seems to the Members of the Senate that it is a common-sense provision, I should like to see it adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Lee	Russell
Austin	Donahey	Lodge	Schwartz
Barbour	Ellender	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Frazier	McCarran	Sheppard
Bridges	George	McKellar	Stewart
Brown	Gerry	McNary	Taft
Bulow	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Burke	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Hill	Neely	Townsend
Chandler	Holman	Nye	Tydings
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pepper	Van Nuys
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Danaher	La Follette	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES and Mr. SMITH], the Senators from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY and Mr. MILLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senators from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE and Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senators from Montana [Mr. MURRAY and Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are unavoidably detained.

I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] would vote "yea."

I am also advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]. If present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "yea" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea" and the Senator from Montana would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If the Senator from Vermont were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from South Carolina were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If the Senator from California were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from Utah were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If the Senator from New Hampshire were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from Illinois were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. If the Senator from Maine were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from South Carolina were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. If the Senator from Minnesota were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from Virginia were present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If the Senator from Michigan were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from Alabama were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCNARY. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are both necessarily absent. If they were present, they would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—21

Adams	Donahey	McKellar	Schwellenbach
Brown	Ellender	Minton	Stewart
Bulow	Harrison	Pepper	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hill	Pittman
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Russell
Connally	Lucas	Schwartz

NAYS—38

Austin	Frazier	Lodge	Taft
Barbour	George	McCarran	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gerry	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Gurney	Maloney	Townsend
Burke	Hatch	Mead	Tydings
Capper	Holman	Neely	Van Nuys
Chandler	Holt	Nye	White
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Danaher	La Follette	Reynolds
Davis	Lee	Sheppard

NOT VOTING—37

Andrews	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Ashurst	Gillette	Miller	Tobey
Bailey	Glass	Murray	Truman
Bankhead	Green	Norris	Vandenberg
Bilbo	Guffey	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Bone	Hale	Overton	Walsh
Byrnes	Hayden	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Caraway	Herring	Shipstead
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Slattery
Downey	King	Smathers

So Mr. STEWART's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on Monday next the Senate shall proceed to vote on the pending bill and all amendments and all motions relating thereto; that no amendment shall be voted on that has not been read for the information of the Senate not later than 2:40 o'clock p. m.; that this agreement shall be null and void in the event the antilynching bill shall be offered as an amendment to the pending bill; and that the requirement of the rules for a quorum call at this time shall be waived.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Would an amendment be considered as having been read that has been printed and is lying upon the table?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I should so consider it. I am willing to include that in the agreement, if it is necessary.

Mr. MINTON. I just want an understanding that an amendment which has been printed and lying on the table shall be considered as having been read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Any amendment which has been offered and printed and is lying on the table shall be considered as having been read.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may we have the request stated by the clerk?

Mr. BARKLEY. The request is that we shall vote not later than 3 p. m. on Monday, with the other conditions that have been attached to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, this is a request to vote at 3 p. m. on Monday?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. When the request was presented some time ago, I objected, for this reason: It seemed to me that we should stay here tonight and finish the bill and meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock and take up the agricultural appropriation bill and pass it before adjourning. It appears that in all likelihood neither of those things can be brought to pass. I find it necessary to leave Washington tomorrow night to return to Nebraska; so if the agricultural appropriation bill cannot come up in any event before Monday, I lose something of my interest in staying here tonight. Further than that, I have been supplied with a live pair, one which will not be transferred to anyone else. Under those circumstances, I do not object to the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read, printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, in line 22, after the word "campaigns", it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma and add "or directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any officer or employee embraced by this section to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, as no other amendment is pending, I ask that that be the pending amendment when the Senate reconvenes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment will be the pending amendment when the Senate reconvenes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

CENSUS OF 1940

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have a letter from Mr. Clark Tibbitts, director of the Horace H. Rackham School of Graduate Studies of the University of Michigan, in which he urges upon the Senate the retention of the present rules and regulations and questions relative to the census.

The Rackham Foundation is a foundation established by a gift from Horace H. and Mary A. Rackham, residents of the city of Detroit, by which they donated the sum of $12,500,000—

For such benevolent, charitable, educational, scientific, religious, and public purposes as will promote the health, welfare, happiness, education, training, and development of men, women, and children, particularly the sick, aged, young, erring, poor, crippled, helpless, handicapped, unfortunate, and underprivileged, regardless of race, color, religion, or station, primarily in the State of Michigan and elsewhere in the world.

I read that statement merely to show that the Rackham Foundation is vitally interested in obtaining answers to the questions which are asked citizens of the United States and persons living in the United States with respect to their financial condition. The letter from Mr. Tibbitts, the director of the Rackham Foundation, requests that the Congress keep the present questionnaire without change.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN,
INSTITUTE FOR HUMAN ADJUSTMENT,
Ann Arbor, March 9, 1940.

The Honorable PRENTISS M. BROWN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to urge that you use your influence to defend the proposed 1940 census schedule in its present form. I have been a consistent user of census data as well as other data for research and other activities designed to throw light on problems of social welfare and thereby to better the status of the people of our community. I believe that one of the most important items of information we need in Michigan is that of income. It is basic to an understanding of virtually every welfare program operated or considered.

For the past 10 years I have been intimately acquainted with the work of the Census Bureau. I know that every question which appears on its schedules has been carefully considered in the light of the needs of the greatest number of potential consumers of the data and from the viewpoint of the welfare of the people of the United States. I am impressed by the fact that no outstanding business or research group has been cited as opposed to the questions which appear on the present schedule. On the contrary, I know that such groups are almost uniformly desirous of having the data.

Nor am I disturbed about any possibility that this information will be misused. To the best of my knowledge the Census Bureau has never violated the confidence of those of us who give information, and I am not afraid that it will do so in the future. In 1935 the Michigan census of unemployment called for and received information on the wages of more than 300,000 people in this State. That was 5 years ago, and no one has suffered yet. The statement that the census is discriminatory, because it has a number of questions which are to be asked of only 10 percent of the population is nonsense. The sample is to be chosen in such a way that every member of the population will have an equal chance of having to answer these extra questions. This is certainly not discriminatory.

I have had a great deal of experience with house-to-house canvasses seeking information similar to that of the population census. I am strongly convinced that most people will answer any questions asked of them, provided they are convinced of the seriousness of the undertaking and provided the interrogator makes a good, businesslike impression on them. The real problem in connection with such an undertaking seems to me to be to select supervisors and field workers primarily on the basis of their ability to do the work and their interest in it and then to train them properly not only in the technical phases of the job but also in how to approach the informant. The fact, however, that there is political preference in the selection of employees in connection with the forthcoming census is no reason to oppose it; there has been similar preference shown in every population census.

Sincerely yours,

CLARK TIBBITTS, Director.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alva M. Beers to be postmaster at Alburtis, Pa., which had been adversely reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that this nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the other nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 18, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 18, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful God, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and hast promised forgiveness to all those who confess and forsake their sins: We come before Thee realizing our unworthiness, acknowledging our manifold transgressions, and beseeching Thy mercy and pardon. Grant us Thy grace and protection for the ensuing day; keep us temperate in all things, and diligent in our service to our country; help us to be true to our ideals and upright in our dealings with each other, full of compassion and ready to do good to all men according to our abilities and opportunities.

Incline our hearts to keep Thy righteous law; and in every decision that we shall be called upon to make in these momentous days, in the strife of truth with falsehood, grant that we may never betray, deny, or forsake the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord, whose cross of love alone can save a sorrowing, sin-sick world, and in whose name we offer up these, our imperfect prayers. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day, Friday, March 15, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

LOTS IN HARDING TOWN SITE, FLORIDA—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 164)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 538, a bill for the relief of certain purchasers of lots in Harding town site, Florida.

It is the purpose of this bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to any person who, as a result of an auction sale of lots in Harding town site, Florida, conducted during February 1924, agreed to purchase a lot in such town site and who (1) prior to the date of approval of this act, has paid to the United States 75 percent or more of the agreed purchase price of such lot, or (2) within 12 months after the date of approval of this act makes payment to the United States which, together with payments previously made, amounts to 75 percent of the agreed purchase price of such lot.

Approval of the bill would relieve the purchasers of 71 lots in the Harding town site of paying into the Federal Treasury approximately $52,000, representing the final installment due and payable more than 10 years ago. When the 133 lots in this town site were offered for sale in 1924, 128 were purchased. None of the purchasers paid in cash. All elected to pay one-fourth of the bid price in cash and the balance in three equal installments, 1, 2, and 3 years after the date of sale. The purchasers of 57 lots have completed payments aggregating $179,770.

While the appraisal for these lots in 1924 was only $59,000, the purchasers entered into binding contracts for paying to the United States a sum several times more than the then appraised value. It is to be assumed that the purchasers had assured themselves that the lots were worth the amount they contracted to pay. The controversy concerning this legislation led the Secretary of the Interior to have the property reappraised by three local independent appraisers. This new appraisal made as of May 5, 1938, less than 2 years ago, placed the fair value of the 128 lots at $575,800. According to this appraisal, the 57 lots were valued at $297,150, and the 71 lots affected by this bill were appraised at $278,650, as compared with a purchase price of $208,775. Thus according to this appraisal the value of the lots on which payments are due is $69,875 in excess of the contract price.

While it is true that some of the purchasers who have not made full payment for their lots contracted to pay more than their value as indicated by the 1938 appraisal, a substantial majority of the purchasers who still owe balances on their lots will, according to the same appraisal, have a value greater than the contract price, even though the full amount is paid. In some instances the appraised value is three or four times greater than the contract price. Moreover, approval of this bill would discriminate against those who have paid the entire contract price on their lots and in favor of those who have been delinquent.

No good reason appears for relieving the purchasers of the obligations which they assumed many years ago. They have not been required to pay interest on the deferred payments, and it is my understanding that no taxes have been collected on these lots.

In the circumstances, I am compelled to withhold my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 18, 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ENFORCEMENT OF CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION LAWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act to provide better facilities for the enforcement of the customs and immigration laws," approved June 26, 1930, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

ACTS OF THE LEGISLATURE OF PUERTO RICO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a certified volume comprising the acts of the second special session of the Fourteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico, 1939, which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the convention of the California State Council of Carpenters at San Jose, Calif., protesting against the continuation of public-building projects under the supervision of the W. P. A. rather than under the P. W. A., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the president of the board of directors of Cameron County Water Control and Improvement District, No. 6, Los Fresnos, Tex., praying for the enactment of the so-called West bill, for the conservation of flood waters of the lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a regional conference of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota and North Dakota at Grand Forks, N. Dak., favoring peace and keeping the United States out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Social Justice and Civil Liberties Council of the Community Church, of Boston, Mass., and the Fourth Annual Conference of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born, held in Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of pending antialien legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Union Chapter, No. 525, State, City, Municipal Workers of America, of the Bronx, New York, protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Southern California District, No. 4, Maritime Federation of the Pacific, San Pedro, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation to authorize the Secretary of War, in the interest of the national defense, to make a survey of the proposed T-tunnel as a means of communication between San Pedro, Wilmington, Terminal Island, and Long Beach, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of the West Virginia Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the proposed construction of dams at Letart, W. Va., and Greenup, Ky., and also the installation of hydroelectric power facilities at these sites, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition of the post officers' area conference of the American Legion, Department of West Virginia, meeting in Sistersville, W. Va., representing Wheeling, Moundsville, McMechen, Weirton, Cameron, New Martinsville, Wellsburg, Follansbee, Benwood, Pine Grove, Hundred, Weston, Buckhannon, Clarksburg, Lumberport, West Union, Shinnston, Gassaway, Salem, Parkersburg, Spencer, Point Pleasant, Glenville, Middlebourne, Elizabeth, Sistersville, St. Marys, Grantsville, Pennsboro, Ripley, and Ravenswood, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation to acquire additional ground for the national cemetery at Grafton, W. Va., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PROPOSED EQUAL-RIGHTS AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. BROWN presented resolutions adopted at the Women's City Club, Detroit, Mich., which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY PASSED ON FEBRUARY 15, 1940, AT THE WOMEN'S CITY CLUB, DETROIT, MICH.

Whereas in the State of Michigan there exist several laws which discriminate against women in the economic, political, and civil fields; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that such restrictive legislation for women, alone, does not violate the Constitution; and

Whereas it is necessary to tirelessly fight proposed legislation which discriminates against women in every session of Congress and the Michigan Legislature, while the equal-rights amendment is buried in the Judiciary Committee of both the Senate and House of Representatives; and

Whereas the only permanent vehicle to prevent such invasions of fundamental rights is a constitutional amendment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Michigan branch of the National Woman's Party demands as a simple matter of justice to the women citizens of the United States that the equal-rights amendment be favorably reported immediately to both Houses of Congress and by them submitted to the people of the country for ratification; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent by the Michigan branch of the National Women's Party to the chairmen and the members of the Judiciary Committee of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, and to the Michigan delegation in Congress individually.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6480) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1325) thereon.

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 3368) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1326) thereon.

Mr. MEAD, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5784) to provide for the conservation and transfer of accumulated sick leave and vacation time due classified civil-service employees who succeed to the position of postmaster, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1327) thereon.

REPORT OF AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF (S. DOC. NO. 165)

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the report of proceedings of the Thirty-first meeting of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, held at Berkeley, Calif., June 18 to 20, 1939, reported it with the recommendation that it be printed as a Senate Document; and, on motion by Mr. HAYDEN, it was Ordered, That the report of proceedings of the thirty-first meeting of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, held at Berkeley, Calif., June 18 to 20, 1939, be printed as a document.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Roulhac Gewin, of Alabama, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Henry C. Walthour, of Georgia, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John E. Sloan, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the western district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

S. 3618. A bill making appropriation for additional research in respect to the effects of the present wars upon agriculture, for the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. 3619. A bill relating to changes in the administration of the National Guard of the United States bearing on Federal recognition, pay, allotment of funds, drill, training, and so forth; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. J. Res. 232. Joint resolution to determine the feasibility of extending the activities of the Bureau of Reclamation to the Southern States; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

BRANCH BANKS AND OFFICES OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to restrict the establishment of branch offices by financial institutions, and so forth, and request that a statement accompanying the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3605) to restrict the establishment of branch offices by financial institutions chartered or insured under the laws of the United States, was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and the statement above referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The bill does not interfere with the legal branch banks that are now in existence but does prevent the organization or establishment of any other branch banks. It preserves the status quo of such existing institutions. The bill, if enacted, will prevent the establishment of any branch offices hereafter by all financial institutions chartered by or pursuant to any law enacted by the Congress, or any financial institution whose shares, accounts, investments, or deposits are insured to any extent by the United States or any agency or instrumentality of the United States.

The bill is designed to protect the existing banking system and to preserve the independent bank as a vital force in our economic system. The present trend toward branch banking is pronounced. In 1920 only 4 percent of all banking offices belonged to branch systems, as compared with 24 percent in 1938.

On April 29, 1938, the President of the United States transmitted a message to the Congress in which he recommended the strengthening and enforcement of the antitrust laws. In that report, at page 8, he said:

"It is hardly necessary to point out the great economic power that might be wielded by groups which may succeed in acquiring domination of banking resources in any considerable area of the country. That power becomes particularly dangerous when it is exercised from a distance and notably so when effective control is maintained without the responsibilities of complete ownership."

It is thought by many citizens that it is necessary to stop the trend toward branch banking, and this bill is designed for that purpose; but it will not disturb the operation of the banks now in existence.

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of March 16, 1940, relative to the regulation of investment trusts, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess last Friday the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] had offered an amendment and asked that it be pending. The Senate understood that the Senator's amendment was pending. The Chair understands that the Senator's amendment is to an amendment which has been adopted by the Senate. In order to consider that amendment to the amendment which has been adopted, the Senator must get unanimous consent to offer the amendment, or a motion must be made and carried to reconsider the amendment adopted by the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in order to avoid the difficulty stated by the Chair, I offer my amendment as a new section and number it 12½. In the circumstances, neither reconsideration nor unanimous consent will be necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator offers his amendment as a new section.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask that it be reported by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be stated as a new section.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 12½, to read as follows:

No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any officer or employee embraced by this section to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, by virtue of the Bankhead amendment, we have protected the wealthy against all demands of the politicians for campaign contributions in excess of $5,000.

The pending amendment, if adopted and enacted, will completely protect all employees who are within the purview of the bill against the State machines which are now plundering them of a part of their compensation for factional and political purposes. It will deal a death blow to the indefensible 2-percent political clubs of West Virginia. Under their operation an employee who has earned but $3.50 in a whole month is compelled to pay 7 cents tribute to the State political machine in order to obtain his check.

If the Senate adopts this amendment, it will thereby assure the relief which I seek to obtain for the people of West Virginia, and the request for a vote on my proposed substitute for the bill will be withdrawn.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. I was absent from the Senate most of Saturday afternoon. Is there a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at a specified time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will vote at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I desire to be heard on the amendment briefly. I have been voting against amendments because I felt the Senate was fairly evenly divided on what I believed to be a filibuster against the bill, and while I have no fault to find with those who engage in filibusters, because I have often been guilty of it myself, however, when I was on the side trying to break a filibuster, there were two things I considered very important. One was to keep quiet and compel the others to do all the talking. The second was to vote against any amendment which might be offered.

Candidly, I confess I did not give the consideration to some of the amendments offered to the pending bill which I would have given to amendments under any other circumstances. But now we have agreed to vote at a specified time, and I feel just a little different about amendments. It cannot be charged that one is filibustering, and in the nature of things a filibuster cannot exist where a definite time has been fixed for a vote.

I cannot see anything wrong with the amendment just offered. In fact, it seems to me to be a good amendment. It seems to me that it strikes at one of the evils which we desire to cure, and I do not see why anyone who is in favor of the pending legislation cannot conscientiously vote for the amendment. I feel like voting for it unless some good reason can be given why I should not. I wonder whether the Senator from New Mexico is opposed to the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia, he is really trying to carry out the fundamental purposes of the measure now before us.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. HATCH. As I have understood the amendment from his explanation of it, it is my intention to vote for the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk which I ask to have reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following new section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 16. All officers and employees of the United States affected by the provisions of this act, as approved August 2, 1939, and by this or any amendments thereto, shall, on the date of the approval of this act, be covered into the civil service, and entitled to all the rights, privileges, immunities, and safeguards now accorded by law to officers and employees of the United States now in civil service.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the amendment which I have sent to the desk proposes a new section to the bill, to apply only to Federal employees affected by the Hatch Act, or any who might be affected by the pending amendment to the Hatch Act. It merely provides that from the date the amendment shall go into effect all Federal employees affected by the so-called Hatch Act and the proposed amendment shall be covered into the civil service, and shall enjoy all the rights, privileges, and safeguards of the civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many employees would be affected?

Mr. MINTON. I am advised there are about 271,000. It must be remembered that those who are affected by the Hatch Act, and who would be affected by the amendment now pending, if any would be caught under the amendment—a matter as to which I cannot state definitely—are denied the right to take any part at all in politics, and fight for the jobs they hold, while someone on the outside who might want one of the jobs, who might want the political party in power to fail, is at liberty to do anything he desires to do, in a political way, in order to get one of the jobs, or to defeat the party in power. The amendment I have offered would merely provide that those, who have had taken away from them the right to participate in politics at all, shall have the same safeguards the civil-service employees have.

We have heard much about the civil-service employees in the course of the debate and how they have been under the ban not to take part in politics. What I am seeking to apply to those who come under the Hatch Act is the same thing the civil-service employees have been under for 50 years. If it is good for them to stay out of politics, and be rewarded by being secure in their jobs, not being kicked out without a trial, and having pensions provided for them, then, since we take away from those who are affected by the Hatch Act the right to participate in politics at all, why should we not give them the same safeguards we give those who are in the civil service, provide that they may have their jobs for life, except, of course, as they may be removed for cause, and that they cannot be removed unless they have a trial, just as anyone in the civil service is entitled to a trial. After they have served their time and have given their lives to the service, they should be retired with pensions, just as are the others in civil service.

Will some Senator stand on the floor—and I will yield in my time, brief as it is—and tell me why, in justice and fairness, those who are placed under the ban of taking part in politics under the Hatch Act should not have all the benefits of the civil service which the civil-service employees, who are under the same ban, now have? The Senator from New Mexico is simply applying the civil-service ban to those who are in politics, taking them out of politics; but he is not giving them any of the safeguards employees in civil service have enjoyed for 50 years. So I say that in fairness to those who are being muzzled, in fairness to those from whom is being taken the right to participate in politics, we should give them the same so-called safeguards which are given other employees in civil service.

Mr. President, that is all there is to the amendment; and I should like to hear any Senator give a good reason why these employees should not be under civil service. There is not a thing to it except an attempt to be fair to employees to whom the act is to be applied, to be as fair to them as to other "dehorned" employees in the civil service. They cannot take any part in politics, but they get a benefit in the way of security of position, in the way of pensions, and all that sort of thing. There is no use taking the time of the Senate in further discussing the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is pretty good for the Federal employees, but how about the State employees? What is the Senator proposing to do for them?

Mr. MINTON. That is a bigger problem, and it was a little too difficult for me to reach with a simple amendment. I do not know whether they can be reached or not, but if that problem is to be reached, it would have to be reached by an amendment which would require a great deal more study and consideration than I was able to give to the matter. But the amendment I have offered is a simple one.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The House of Representatives has passed a civil-service bill providing that certain employees not now in the civil service shall be qualified for the civil service, and I am told that that bill is being considered by the Senate Committee on Civil Service, or will be within the next few days. It seems to me that any measure covering a great many employees, hundreds of thousands of them, into the civil service, should receive the consideration of a committee which is familiar with the subject. It seems to me that one of the troubles is that attempting to reach this question by an amendment to the pending bill, without any consideration being given it by the committee charged with the consideration of that kind of legislation, is more or less like going up a blind alley on this subject. It might include many employees the Civil Service Committee would never report as being entitled to go under civil service. If such legislation is to be given the careful consideration it should receive—and I am sympathetic with it, I will say to the Senator—I doubt whether it should be attempted as an amendment to the pending bill. I should like to know the Senator's reaction to the situation, in view of the fact that the Committee on the Civil Service is considering a bill involving a kindred subject.

Mr. MINTON. This amendment is quite simple. These employees are now being told that they shall not take part in politics. I am proposing to put the employees affected by the Hatch Act under the same ban, to put the same muzzle on them that applies to employees in civil service and which has applied to them for 50 years. It is a simple matter. The Senate has been discussing it for 2 weeks, and everyone understands it. We know exactly what we would be doing to these employees. We would be extending to them the same provisions which have governed the civil service for 50 years, and if we have been doing it that long, merely increasing the number should not make any difference.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we put these employees under civil service, would we not remove practically all temptation to engage in politics?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. When most of them engage in politics they do so in order to get a job or to hold a job. If we make them secure in their jobs, they will not be very active in politics. Many of them do not desire to be, anyway. If one of them can get a job and hold it, he will forget all about the man who helps him get the job.

Mr. MINTON. If we are going to dehorn them, we should take them away from the longhorns. We should put them in the same category with the employees who have these safeguards, because we are putting them under the same ban which applies to the civil-service employees.

Simple as this proposal is, I cannot see how anyone can resist it. It cannot be said that it would emasculate the bill; it cannot be said it is an attempt to defeat the bill, or destroy it. This certainly must be in consonance with what the Senator from New Mexico is trying to do. He is trying to protect people from the vicious thing known as politics. He wants to get the employees out of politics. He certainly wishes to treat them fairly after he gets them out. If he is to put a civil-service muzzle on them, he should put a civil-service leash on them. They should have the same protection in all respects as the other employees enjoy.

There is no reason why this matter should go to the Committee on Civil Service. It is merely a question of whether 271,000 more should come under the protection and safeguards of the civil service when a civil-service muzzle is put on them. They are being prevented from taking any part in politics, and they should be safeguarded against the things which will happen to them in politics.

How long would these employees last in their jobs if someone came along who was unfriendly to them in politics? They cannot do anything to defend themselves; they are helpless. They go out if they do anything to try to protect themselves. So in all fairness we should give these employees the same safeguards we give the civil-service employees. It is a simple proposal, and it will not do, it seems to me, for the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Kentucky to say, "Well, I am going to consider this thing later on. I have been considering a bill which the Committee on Civil Service, or some other committee, has," when the matter is as simple as this amendment is.

The time is getting short, as the Senator from New Mexico said. It is getting very short for those opposed to the bill. We have to vote at 3 o'clock, and we want this amendment adopted now, in order that those affected by it may be protected, in order that they may have the shield about which the Senator from Kentucky talked a few days ago.

I want to shield these people. I do not want to see them knifed. I do not want to see them caught on the sword. It is evident that they are in the same class as civil-service employees, but they do not get the benefit of civil service. By this simple amendment we want to bring them in and give them the benefit of civil service.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the other day the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] made a speech on the subject of processes of democracy. He took occasion to point out that the pending bill, in its operations, following the appropriation of Federal money, would invade the rights of the States. This morning I noticed that the press contained the startling information that a district Federal court in Georgia had ordered the arrest of the Governor of Georgia. I am not familiar with the details of the fight in Georgia, but it seems that the Governor had some difficulty with the highway department, and in the exercise of his authority as Governor he called out the troops; he ejected the chairman of the highway commission, and locked up the office.

Mr. President, I thought that if there was a matter which was wholly within the jurisdiction of a sovereign State it was the State's internal improvements. It seems that the Federal judge in question, in the exercise of the new power and the interpretation of States' rights extant today, enjoined the Governor from exercising his power to call out the troops and to declare martial law for a certain district. Along came the Federal judge and enjoined the Governor. The Governor paid no attention to the injunction, but did that which we have heretofore been taught to believe was his right. The Governor of a sovereign State was arrested by order of an inferior court because the Governor, in his sovereign capacity, exercised the function of Governor of a sovereign State. The Governor was addressing a great body of teachers, and the United States marshal went up on the platform and arrested him. He is now under the jurisdiction of the marshal to make his appearance before the court next Friday.

Mr. President, I do not hold any brief for the Governor of Georgia. I do not care a snap of the finger about the person in question, but I care about the principle involved. What has happened in this instance is indicative of the principle that is rampant today. It is also indicative of just where the present measure is leading us, as the Senator from North Carolina well said in his able address.

Mr. President, the proposed legislation strikes at the very foundation of democratic processes. We now see a Federal judge enjoining a State Governor. It does not place very much of a strain on one's imagination to imagine that the whole cabinet of that Governor and all the officers charged with administrative and ministerial duties were particeps criminis, and that all of them were enjoined by the Federal court. Where, then, would be the government of the State? Its representatives would be under arrest, incarcerated. It was proposed to take the Governor and put him in jail, but he squabbled around and got a stay of proceedings upon his humble promise to appear before the judge of the inferior Federal court to show why he should not be punished for disregarding the order of a court which we, the Congress, established. The Constitution provides for only one Court and limits its jurisdiction. I took pains this morning to read just how far the Supreme Court could go. Its duties involve no function of interfering with the processes of a sovereign State. That, Mr. President, is something which is pertinent to the very bill under consideration. The judge in question issued his injunction because the Governor was interfering with the expenditure of certain Federal money. So the State of Georgia must sink to the level of a county. The State is now wholly under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I want to warn all those who are rushing in with legislation of the type now under consideration that they are giving hostages to fortune.

I have inquired of the legal minds in this town, and none of them can recall a case of a judge enjoining a Governor and having him arrested. That came very near being done in the old days before the War between the States, and the reply came in what occurred from 1860 to 1865. We got licked, but we let them know that we were fighting. Oh, yes; we did. We astonished the world with the intrepid bravery and patriotism of the devoted followers of the immortal Lee and Jackson. No American needs to be ashamed of those two names.

Mr. President, clothed as the Court is with limited authority, an injunction cannot issue except in cases of equity. The case in question was wholly one to be decided by Georgia.

I am not sorry for Governor Rivers. I think he deserves everything that is being done to him. I wish he could be divorced from his high relations to the State of Georgia, and then let them put him in jail. I think he deserves to go there. I am speaking solemnly. He backed up packing the Supreme Court and asked the proponents to that plan to pour their sheckels into Georgia, and they converted sheckels into shackles. Now he is threatening to call out the militia. He ought to do it. He is sovereign in the State of Georgia. But I want my colleague to understand what this thing in Georgia foreshadows.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that the Governor of Georgia could probably get a very quick test of the matter by applying to the Supreme Court of the United States directly for a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. SMITH. I know it, but I do not know whether the Governor would like to do that or not.

Mr. CONNALLY. He would rather do that than go to jail.

Mr. SMITH. Within the sovereign rights he has as Governor and the limitation of the power of the Federal courts over the States he would not go to jail. If I were the Governor I would fight it out in Georgia. I would not go to the Supreme Court. As it is now constituted he must be worse off if he went there than he is now. I think I would advise him to stay away from the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I do not want my colleagues to lose the implication in the Georgia incident. What has taken place there is exactly in line with the implications of the pending bill; that the Federal Government has plenary power wherever its money goes, and Congress is turning over to the Civil Service Commission the power to determine what is or what is not a violation of the law. It is provided in the bill, it is true, that some poor devil who may violate its provisions shall have access to the Court. But how many such violators of this law would be able to take advantage of that particular provision? How many of them would be able to get access to the Court?

Mr. President, an inferior court has arrested the supreme executive of the only supreme, unregulated, and unspecified power in America, namely, a State. Georgia helped create the Federal Government. Now the Federal Government has become so large that it is destroying its creator. It is an embarrassing position for the Governor. I hope this body will appreciate the significance of that incident. It is the natural logic of events growing out of our departure from the Constitution of the United States.

Heretofore on the floor of the Senate I have enumerated certain things which every lawyer and every other person who loves the dual form of government knows are violations of the Constitution. Mark my words—a false principle wrought into real life will work itself out in disaster. The most horrible thing in public life is an unfortunate precedent. We are scattering them broadcast all over America. Of course, when we appropriate money we want to be the beneficiaries, politically and otherwise, of the appropriation. In the main that is what we appropriate money for. There are certain things that ought to be done.

Mr. President, some one very pertinently sends me a note saying, "Sherman is marching through Georgia again."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who? SHERMAN MINTON?

Mr. SMITH. The note says, "Sherman is marching through Georgia again."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator mean SHERMAN MINTON?

Mr. SMITH. Well, the note says, "Sherman." The Senator can apply it as he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I do not give a continental about the civil service. My observation has been that it has been the most uncivil thing ever incorporated into our political life. It puts certain men in office and keeps them in regardless of their fitness. Everyone knows that. It is an ingenuity by which the ins remain in, and the outs want to have some modification made of it until they get in.

There are many strange things connected with this bill, whose purpose is supposed to be to purify politics. I want to ask, When in the name of the God who made us do Senators expect to see pure politics? Senators know there is no "pure politics." They do not expect any pure politics. Pure politics are not in operation here now.

Every man who has sense enough to become a Member of this body wants his little playhouse for his own benefit. He says, "I do not care a continental what the Constitution says, or what anything else says, but do not knock down my playhouse. I am going to stay where I will get the benefit of my breach of the rights of the people. You cannot pour out billions of dollars and not make me the beneficiary of it."

What saddens me is to see the great principles involved in our Government ignored when they affect our personal interest. God knows I have tried to adhere to those principles without regard to my political fortunes. I hate to inject myself into the debate, but I have never regarded my sitting in this body as essential to the welfare of America. Once I have assumed this responsibility, I believe that my duty is plain, and I shall live up to the fundamental principles of the Constitution so long as I am a Member of this body, regardless of who is in power.

This is a monstrous thing we are doing. We are saying to a man, "If you get a job, you must shut your mouth. You must not engage in politics." Along comes a Federal judge and enjoins the Governor of Georgia. The Governor disregards the injunction and is arrested. He is now under the jurisdiction of the United States marshal. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] suggests that the Governor go to the Supreme Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I merely suggested that he could go to the Supreme Court. I did not suggest that he do so. That is up to him. I do not mean to suggest.

Mr. SMITH. We have discarded the Constitution. I hope—and it is only a hope—that so long as men love freedom and their own self-respect, so long as men feel in their hearts that they have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and to enjoy the proceeds of their own efforts, so long will the Constitution and the immortal Bill of Rights be a glorious fact in their lives. There is not a liberty-loving man, one who loves genuine essential liberty, who would not fight and die for the Constitution of the United States, just as our forbears did.

I wish to take occasion again to refer to the injunction and arrest of the Governor of the sovereign State of Georgia because he interfered with the expenditure of certain Federal moneys in the State of Georgia. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] called attention to that situation. I hope and trust that some day there will be enough real Americans to get back that for which our forbears bled and died. There are many articles in the Constitution. The first seven deal largely with the relation of sovereign States to the Federal Government. The first 10 amendments define the inalienable rights of the individual.

As I have said, and now repeat, at one time we had patriots. We have them now. However, the modern crowd are p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-s. We have more of those today than we have of p-a-t-r-i-o-t-s.

I hope that the Governor of Georgia will do his duty as a man and restore the sovereign power of the State, which was never given to the Federal Government. Were I the Governor of the State of Georgia there would be another local secession.

I think shortly we shall have amendments to the Constitution denying to the States their reserved powers. Today we have a government of men and not of law. That is what is the matter with us. We are bowing down and worshiping certain men because they have exhausted the Treasury and scattered their largess broadcast over the land.

Friday I sat in this Chamber and heard a Senator for whom I have the profoundest respect—or did have—say that this administration had done the necessary thing in ruthlessly scattering abroad billions of the hard-earned money of the people, and that he did not criticize the President of the United States for going into his State and denouncing him. His statement is in the RECORD. When I reach that level I will quit this body. Whenever I shall honor a man belonging to my party who comes into my State and denounces me and say that I do not criticize him I will quit this body.

Senators do not seem to care to listen to my criticism or to what is going on, but so far as I am concerned I resent the tendency of this body to bow down and worship at the corrupt throne of money. That is what we are doing. We are selling everything dear to us to have a bridge built, or to have a courthouse built, or to have the W. P. A. or the P. W. A. come into the State and spend money. God grant that somewhere, somehow, the inherent love of liberty and individuality that characterized our forbears may be restored, and that the divine fire may touch the American people so that they will repudiate, in ignominy and shame, those who have prostituted the Government under which we live.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just a word on the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. In substance, as the Senator explained, this amendment, if adopted and enacted into law, would automatically blanket into the civil service all the employees of the Federal Government not now under the civil service. It would do so without any examination as to qualifications or fitness for office, and would give full lifetime service and privileges to those employees.

I think the Senator from Indiana is moving in the right direction. I think he is going in the direction I want to go. One of the arguments I have made in behalf of legislation such as we have sponsored is that eventually, once we can remove employees from political activity, we shall be enabled to work out a really comprehensive merit system for all Federal employees. I want to do that. I think it should have been done a long time ago, but I do not believe that blanketing all Federal employees into the civil service with one stroke of the pen is working out an efficient merit system. In fact, I think the adoption of this amendment would be detrimental to the civil service itself, and would bring it into discredit and confusion.

The Ramspeck bill, which has passed the House of Representatives, is now before the committee presided over by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. If I am not mistaken, hearings have already been set. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. BULOW. They have not been set.

Mr. HATCH. But it is planned to have hearings on that bill in the near future, is it not?

Mr. BULOW. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I should very much like to have the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] submit his amendment to that committee and let the committee consider it before we take such a step.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has pointed out that certain employees would go into the civil service without examination. That is what happens when the President covers them in under an Executive order, is it not?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. All the amendment would do would be to cover them in under an act of Congress rather than an Executive order. That is the only distinction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not always true that they are covered in without an examination. Some Executive orders which have been issued required the incumbent to take an examination to determine his fitness for the position which he held; but it is true that many Executive orders have covered employees into the civil service without examination.

Mr. MINTON. That is the general rule.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is not my intention to take the time of the Senate to argue the various amendments which may be proposed. However, I think it would be a mistake to adopt this particular amendment—a mistake so far as the civil service is concerned, and a serious mistake so far as the pending legislation is concerned. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not intend to address myself to the pending amendment. I listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent remarks of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and with unusual interest to his remarks on the subject of the arrest of the Governor of Georgia at the instance of the judge of the Federal court in that State under proceedings in contempt. The matter is a very unusual one, and it presents rather grave difficulties.

I do not know enough of the facts to undertake to discuss the matter. I may undertake to do so when I do know the facts; but it is my impression—this is from the newspapers—that the Governor of Georgia undertook to dismiss, and actually did dismiss, from the Highway Commission of the State of Georgia a ministerial officer—not an elective officer but an appointive officer—the chairman of the highway commission; whereupon the officer undertaken to be dismissed resisted, but was put out by the State troops at the instance of the Governor of Georgia. Now the situation is reversed; the Federal jurisdiction and power are invoked, and the Federal Government undertakes not to put the Governor of Georgia out of office but to put him into jail.

A man under arrest and in the jail or penitentiary for imprisonment is under disability. One cannot function in jail as a lawyer or as a contractor. He is under disability. I take it that when the Governor of Georgia is placed in jail for contempt by the Federal judge, certainly to a very considerable extent the Governorship of Georgia will be vacated. I take it further that if the Governor of Georgia should resist the United States marshal it would be the duty of the Federal judge to protect the dignity of his court and, if necessary, to call out Federal troops. The State troops having been called out in the first instance, and the Federal troops having been called out in the second instance, we might have another Battle of Manassas.

All of that is very serious. It is so far from our minds that it seems facetious, but fundamentally it is very serious. There is a grave conflict down there. I am not going to undertake to pass on the merits of it, but I am going to undertake to settle it. I think the Congress should act and act at once. I think it should act constructively. We have here this bill; and if we will apply the principles of this bill to that situation, it will all be solved in 24 hours.

This bill declares that if a State officer does certain things he shall be dismissed; he shall be removed. It declares that if the State Highway Commissioner of North Carolina, the head of that entire activity, shall engage in politics, he shall be removed. Why not say that the Governor of Georgia shall be removed if, having accepted gifts or loans from the Federal Government, he does not do just as the Federal judge down there says, or as Mr. Hopkins says, or as Mr. Ickes says? That is in precise analogy with this bill. Then suppose he says, "Well, now, that is the law, but I am not going to get out"—then apply the principle of this bill and say, "We will withdraw all the aid, all the loans, and all the grants of the Federal Government to your State of Georgia. Now you had better get out, and you will get out." I think Governor Rivers would be sure to get out, because he has been very active in the matter of obtaining—I say this to his credit, of course—loans, gifts, grants, and other aid from the Federal Government.

The whole incident perfectly illustrates what we are doing. We are setting up here the principle of Federal control of State officers by means of the Federal power through loans and grants. We are setting up the right to remove a State officer. Why not remove a Governor if we can remove a highway commissioner? Why not remove a Governor if we can remove a clerk? How does the Federal Government acquire jurisdiction over any local officer in North Carolina by merely lending us money which it collected from us or giving us money which it took from us?

I propose my solution; and if the time were not so brief, I would draw an amendment aimed directly at the Georgia situation. I think I could solve it upon the passage of this bill. I think it is a solution which is much better than this warlike affair we have down there. It is not the use of the force of arms but the use of the force of money. The force of arms may be more honorable, but it is also more bloody and more disagreeable.

That is a serious situation. That is what this bill presents to us. I have never been concerned about the professed objective. I have never thought the bill would accomplish it, because I have been concerned about the interference with the process and the structure of our Government, our democracy.

My faith in my State is unshaken, and that is why I stand where I stand. If any Senator's faith in the capacity of his State to control the activities of its officers and clerks and sheriffs, and so on, has been lost, of course, he may vote for this legislation. He ought to get aid from the Federal Government; but nothing has happened to destroy my faith in North Carolina.

We have had many experiences, Mr. President. I am going to relate one which went far to restore my faith when it was shaken. I do not like to refer to disagreeable subjects. It is not good to linger by the bitter waters; but rarely in my life have I been more stirred than I was by the so-called purge in our party, when the Federal power was broadly invoked in order that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] might be driven out of the Senate. I was tremendously aroused and very gravely concerned, and I watched each contest with an overpowering interest. If I could tell the personal story, you would understand just how overpowering it was.

The culminating contest was the contest in the State of Georgia. I think my interest was tending to grow, anyway, with each contest; and it was beyond bounds, as the hour approached, when the right to a seat in the Senate of one of the noblest men I have ever known, one of the worthiest Senators in all the history of the Senate, one of the truest and most faithful Democrats who ever breathed the breath of our free land, was called in question by the President of the United States. I do not think I thought of anything else as I heard of the approach of the President to Georgia on that mission.

I have never spoken disrespectfully of the President of the United States or of any President, and I never intend to do so. When I heard of his approach to Barnesville all my thoughts were there, and I listened to his address when he called upon the Democrats of Georgia to strike down my friend, my fellow Democrat, a man whom I have always honored and always will honor, a man whose views and speeches differing from me could not possibly affect my high regard for him, my abiding confidence in him. I knew, as I heard that message, that the senior Senator from Georgia was on the platform. I was deeply stirred. I wondered what I would have said in the circumstances. I hoped and I prayed that the senior Senator from Georgia would find the right words; and he found them:

> Mr. President, I regret that you have taken this occasion to attack my record and call in question my democracy. I wish you to know that I accept the challenge.

Historic words—immortal words! I am glad I can put them in the RECORD here. He summed up the whole substance of the relation of the State to the Federal power:

> I accept the challenge.

It was not a personal challenge, and it was not a personal acceptance. It was an acceptance by the senior Senator from Georgia of the challenge of the Federal power to the dignity and the rights and the power of the State of Georgia. Georgia answered.

When the returns came in that September night—and I did not know what they were, because the radio accounts were not complete—I wondered whether Georgia would respond. I had a dread that she might not respond. I had a sense of horror. I thought of nothing else. Sleep meant nothing. I wished to know. It was on the following night that I was informed of the fact that Georgia had given assurance to the United States that Georgia was equal to the challenge; that Georgia could attend to her own affairs; that she would choose whom she wished to choose for Senator; and I thanked God for Georgia. My faith in Georgia is not gone. My faith in the American people is not gone. I do not know enough about some of the American States, to be sure, but I am not going to lose my faith in the States. I never have lost that faith in North Carolina.

As I thought of it, I was reminded of an incident in the history of the English in which a certain matter was settled. There had been a time when the King appointed the ministers. There had been a time in the Roman history when the king or the dictator appointed the senators. Slowly, through the ages, the spirit of liberty, working in the form of democracy, had asserted the right of the people to represent themselves by men of their own choosing.

A contest began in England under George III, and the people lost. George insisted upon his right to appoint the ministers and denied the right of the Commons—the House of Representatives of England—to appoint the ministers. Under George IV the issue was made again. The Commons appointed a minister, and the King refused to recognize him. The Commons said, "You must recognize him," and he, considering the fate of Charles I, recognized him. From that day to this, even the ministers in England, the Cabinet officers, have derived their authority by no means from the King, but from the representatives of the people.

Coincident with that, the House of Commons took pains to give King George IV a further notice; that is to say, "From this day forward, so long as you or any of your successors sit upon the throne of England, you shall not interfere in the slightest degree with the election of a member of the House of Commons."

And from that day to this, the kingly head of the British Government has never so much as dared intimate that the humblest little borough in all England should listen to him in such a matter.

Mr. President, that was the fountain of local self-government and the right of representation breaking forth on the other side of the sea in the early days of our Republic, and it was not without its influence here. With that we thought we had set our standards, but today we have to assert and protest, in vain, I think, as the hour of 3 approaches, that the State of North Carolina, or the State of Georgia, or the State of South Carolina, is competent to say what shall be done and what shall not be done by the State and county and city officials, whether political or nonpolitical, whether moral or immoral, or whether of high degree or low degree. That is the issue here.

I think it was necessary for us to embark upon some of these Federal gift and loan activities, but if this is to be the consequence of it, whatever relief it has brought about, whatever apparent good it has done, will be as nothing compared with the destruction of local self-government, and of the dual form of the American structure, and our progress of democracy.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator very correctly recited the history of England, but there was one thing which I think the Senator might have stated as having occurred following the mandate of the Commons; that is, that the King did take notice, and did follow the mandate.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator. I thought I had stated that from that day to this no King of England, and no Queen, has ever so much as given the suggestion of a nod to the contrary. Those who have read the story of Queen Victoria, who followed George IV, will remember how that young Queen did not like her Ministers. She liked Malborne, but she did not like Disraeli. However, she had to like Disraeli. Then she came to like Disraeli. She did not like Gladstone. She made one of the most scorching remarks about Mr. Gladstone, a beautiful sort of thing. She said, "Why, Mr. Gladstone addresses me as if I were a public assembly." She did not like him; but she had to like him. She did not like the liberal government, but she had to like the liberal government.

The kingly power was very great, but the power of the people in their right of representation was greater. The divine right of kings is a very great and historical doctrine, but the divine right of the American people to choose representatives of their own selection to govern their ways, in politics and otherwise, is greater than the divine right of kings, and more important to the progress of the world.

The pending bill may to some seem trivial, and there are those who are laboring under the delusion that it relates only to Federal officeholders, and there are others who have been led to believe that it is going to bring about the millennium of "clean politics." Even the newspapers put "clean politics" in half quotes, meaning "so-called," which is the idea of the half quote. While all those things are going on, we are comforted somewhat with the assurance that the bill may yet be defeated in the other body, although I know nothing about it, and I do not intend to say anything about what the House has ever done or may do. This bill is not by any means the end of the matter. If it shall pass, we will have established a policy which the instincts of the American people will in due season repudiate. If we do not pass it, there will be those who will continue to come here with this sort of proposal, and I should not be surprised if before I leave the Senate I do not see an effort to have the States controlled in their schools, their laws against crime, and in all other ways, by the demand that their officers be removed, and if they are not removed, Federal loans and grants will be taken from the States.

Since we have to pay our share of the taxes, that becomes a very drastic threat of fines and penalties. I am looking across the aisle now to a very able lawyer, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and I refer to the old system of fines and recoveries under the common law. They can fine my State $3,000,000 in the matter of the highway funds alone; and, what is more, may recover.

I read in the Charlotte Observer this morning about some projects allowed in my State. This is Monday morning, and I suppose these were allowed on Saturday. I will refer to a few of them:

C. C. McGinnis, State W. P. A. administrator, has announced approval of 19 projects, to cost $638,380.

That may all be very good, but I call attention to how it will operate.

Granville County: To improve Creedmore streets, $19,846.

That means the end of all activities down there by every officer except the mayor. He may call his soul his own, but no one else can.

Wilkes: Extend water and sewer systems at Wilkesboro, $5,924.

There will be no more political activity by anyone in Wilkesboro who is administering these funds. And these funds are going to municipalities.

Pitt County: Improve street at Fountain, $5,982.

For $5,982 Fountain and all her officers connected with the Government go out of politics.

Edgecombe: Build home-economics cottage for Tarboro High School, $23,708.

That is a county activity, and I take it that everyone in the county, and in the city of Tarboro—a very ancient city—everyone who has to do with the municipal government will go out of politics. "Home-economics cottage." That takes in the county officers and clerks.

Harnett: Erect building at Ridgeway School near Lillington, $11,125.

I am not sure but that that takes out of politics the entire school organization of 23,000 teachers of North Carolina, because our school system is a State unit.

Alexander: Erect vocational building at Stony Point High School, $3,381.

That is Alexander County.

Northampton: Improve streets, $10,069.

It does not say where the streets are to be improved, but I dare say they will improve streets all around in Northampton. That is a great rural county, from which Gen. Matt Ransom came to the United States Senate. For $10,069 they get the Northampton officers out.

Lenoir: Improve LaGrange streets, $19,600.

That takes care of LaGrange.

Now they come to my county of Wake:

Wake, install sewer and water lines, $22,461.

I take it that ends activities there by the county officers of Wake County; and that is a very big county. It has in it about 110,000 people.

Then we come to the next:

Improve North Carolina State College grounds, $55,080.

I dare say that takes in the entire State government, because the State College is a State institution, supported by the State. That gets them all.

Then we come to Apex, Mallaby Cross Roads, Fuquay Springs, and Garner, $81,804. All those are towns in my county.

That is what we are doing. How are we doing it? We are saying, "You do as the Federal Government says in this matter of political activity. We will be the judges, not you. If we catch anybody down there not doing as we say, we will report him, and if you do not turn him off the job, we will take the money away from you."

Mr. President, that tends to destroy the dual form of government in the United States. That is running the whole thing on the basis of Federal loans and grants which were intended to relieve the people of America, and not to control the States and the counties and the cities.

My friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] asks me not to forget to tell whose money it is. I told that the other day, but I will tell it again today. The money is taken from the States by the power of taxation, or is borrowed by the Federal Government on the credit which is derived from the power of the Government to tax the people in the States. We are using the taxing power of the Federal Government to hand out loans or grants throughout the United States, using it not for the purpose of doing the good intended by the appropriations but for the purpose of controlling activities which heretofore have always been in the control of the States, and which to this day I have always thought the States were fully capable of attending to, to their own satisfaction, and much better in the long run than the Federal Government can ever do it.

So, Mr. President, while viewed superficially, this is a simple matter, and it might be considered a trivial matter; viewed by way of its implications, it is a very great matter. That is all I have to say about it.

I am not troubled that the vote is going against us today. I would be very greatly troubled if I were not making my record of opposition here today, and that is all I have to do. I hope I may live long enough to see those who make a different record, in the very best of motives, to be sure, learn by bitter experience to repent establishing a precedent which cannot but redound to the destruction of the States, the localities, and of representative government.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bulow	Danaher	Guffey
Ashurst	Byrd	Davis	Gurney
Austin	Byrnes	Donahey	Hale
Bailey	Capper	Downey	Harrison
Bankhead	Caraway	Ellender	Hatch
Barbour	Chandler	Frazier	Hayden
Barkley	Chavez	George	Herring
Bilbo	Clark, Idaho	Gerry	Hill
Bridges	Clark, Mo.	Gibson	Holman
Brown	Connally	Gillette	Holt

Johnson, Calif.	Minton	Russell	Tobey
Johnson, Colo.	Murray	Schwartz	Townsend
La Follette	Neely	Schwellenbach	Tydings

McCarran	Pepper	Stewart	Wheeler
McKellar	Pittman	Taft	White
McNary	Radcliffe	Thomas, Idaho
Maloney	Reed	Thomas, Okla.
Mead	Reynolds	Thomas, Utah

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea," and, if present, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELLENDER (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. I am advised that if present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained in Government departments.

I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 57, as follows:

YEAS—24

Bailey	Donahey	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Guffey	McKellar	Smathers
Brown	Hayden	Minton	Stewart
Byrnes	Herring	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Caraway	Hill	Pepper	Thomas, Utah

Burke	Hughes	Slattery

So Mr. MINTON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment presented by me on March 6 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. Whenever the United States Civil Service Commission determines that, by reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in any municipality or other political subdivision, it is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable, and who reside in such municipality or political subdivision, to permit such persons to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns involving such municipality or political subdivision, the Commission is authorized to promulgate regulations permitting such persons to take an active part in such political management and political campaigns to the extent the Commission deems to be in the domestic interest of such persons.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in certain areas of the country, and especially adjacent to Washington, a majority of the residents of certain towns and counties are employees of the Federal Government. My amendment is for the purpose of giving the Civil Service Commission the authority to permit a Federal employee to take part in purely local elections when it is considered in the interest of the public welfare to do so.

If that is not done, Mr. President, those Federal employees will be denied the right even to hold a nonprofit office, such as member of the school board or member of the town council; and, in my judgment, serious injury to the cause of good government will be done unless those Federal employees are permitted, under regulations adopted by the Civil Service Commission, to take part in purely local affairs.

I have discussed this amendment with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and it is my understanding that he has no objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Without naming the particular locations to which the Senator's amendment would apply, am I to assume that the "special or unusual circumstances" which exist in any municipality would be intended to cover the situations in Maryland and Virginia, for instance, where many Federal employees who work in Washington live, who otherwise might not participate in any way in their local affairs? Is that the intention?

Mr. BYRD. It is. The amendment gives to the Civil Service Commission the same power it now has with respect to civil-service employees, to permit them to participate in local elections.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia if it would not be possible for him so to draft his amendment as to name specifically in the amendment the facts which the Civil Service Commission must find? As the amendment is drafted, it seems to me, it gives the Civil Service Commission almost carte blanche authority to determine for itself what the "special or unusual circumstances" are which should operate to exempt persons from the rule. I understand that the Senator is endeavoring to reach a perfectly obvious situation which arises when civil-service employees of the Federal Government who are working in the Capital at Washington reside in communities in Virginia and Maryland, in which, perhaps, the bulk of the population is likewise so employed; so that not to exempt them might have a very detrimental effect upon the community. The amendment is so drawn that it is not limited by geography, by boundaries of States, or by character of employment. It seems to me that in its present form it would set up a precedent for transferring to the Civil Service Commission complete power to grant exemptions.

Mr. BYRD. Only with respect to local elections.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but no rule is set forth in the amendment to control the delegation to the Civil Service Commission of legislative power. No standard is set up.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I would like the amendment to be more specific. I conferred with the Senator from New Mexico. This was the only amendment which I presented to the Senator from New Mexico to which he would agree; and I was so anxious to permit my constituents in Virginia to take part in purely local affairs that I acquiesced in the language of the amendment as it is now written.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Virginia correctly states the situation. However, I was not opposed to any particular amendment. The matter related to a subject with which I was not familiar. A great many persons from nearby towns came to see me and discussed the situation, and I suggested that they confer with the Senators from Maryland and Virginia, all of whom probably have conferred with various persons on the subject. I think at one time the Senator from Virginia prepared an amendment which actually set forth the towns to be listed in the order of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BYRD. No.

Mr. HATCH. Someone did. I saw such an amendment. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] called attention to a similar condition in one of the towns in his State, which such an amendment would have met. Inasmuch as the amendment which the Senator now offers merely restores to the Civil Service Commission the power it had, and which it exercised before the passage of the act last year, I thought perhaps it was wise to give general authority to meet local or domestic situations. I have no particular opinion on the matter, one way or the other. Any way the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Wyoming wish to work out the situation is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is meant by the phrase "or other political subdivision"? The amendment mentions "any municipality," which is clearly understood. What is meant by the following phrase, "or other political subdivision"? Would it be a county or congressional district?

Mr. BYRD. No. It would be a subdivision of the municipality. It would be a township, or a magisterial district, such as we have in our State.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order to limit the amendment to subdivisions of municipalities the Senator ought to have the word "thereof" after "subdivision," so as to read, "any municipality or political subdivision thereof."

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will read further, the language is—

> It is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable—

It means in the interest of the people of the particular locality.

Mr. BARKLEY. The trouble is that the language "political subdivision" is not necessarily limited to a municipality. It might be the entire county, because that is a subdivision.

Mr. BYRD. It is intended to apply to the entire county.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would it apply to a judicial district, in which a candidate might be running for the office of district judge or district attorney? Would it apply to a congressional district, which is a political subdivision so far as elections are concerned? All I am trying to do is to clarify the language, so that we may see what we really shall be doing if the amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to make an inquiry. Are the persons in the municipalities to which the Senator refers interested in an election in which the Democratic or the Republican Party is involved; or are the parties purely local?

Mr. BYRD. They are the regular parties.

Mr. BROWN. They are the regular Democratic and Republican Parties?

Mr. BYRD. So far as Virginia is concerned, they are the regular Democratic and Republican Parties.

Mr. BROWN. I myself had an amendment, to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] have substantially agreed, which covered somewhat the same general situation. My amendment provided that nothing in the act shall be construed to prevent any lawful political activity in an election and a preceding campaign, at which there are no candidates on party tickets representing a party which polled votes for President in the previous election. Would such an amendment help the Senator?

Mr. BYRD. It would not help this particular situation.

Mr. BROWN. I thought it might.

Mr. BYRD. In this particular case perhaps the best citizens of the counties are employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have understood that in one county almost the entire population is employed by the Federal Government.

Mr. BYRD. In Arlington County 80 percent of the citizens are employees of the Federal Government. The other night I talked with a gentleman from Arlington County. He would have to resign his position on the school board, a position he has filled for many years with great satisfaction to the people of the community, and for which he has not received a dollar of compensation.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would the Senator object to inserting, in line 4, after the word "subdivision", the phrase "in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital, in the States of Virginia and Maryland." Such language would refer specifically to the case which he desires to cover.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection to that modification, but I do not wish to accept any amendment to the amendment which would endanger its passage because the matter is of very vital importance to my constituents.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I entirely sympathize with the objective which the Senator from Virginia is trying to attain, but it is clear that the language of the amendment is so broad that it might throw down the bars to almost any kind of exemption, should the Civil Service Commission decide to make it, because there is nothing in the language of the amendment to determine what sort of "special or unusual circumstances" the Civil Service Commission would have to find.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that if that amendment is satisfactory to the Senator from New Mexico, it is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the language proposed by the Senator from Wyoming. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia applies chiefly to the situation around the District of Columbia. There may be other cases, such as the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] says he had, in which the employees were practically all Federal employees because of construction work going on in the State, and they could not have any city government.

I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the power is exactly the same power which the Civil Service Commission has been exercising. The language of this amendment is taken from the order made by the Civil Service Commission in 1912, when they exempted towns in the immediate vicinity.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia modify his amendment?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Wyoming, as I understood, offered an amendment to my amendment. I should like to say that I have no objection to that amendment. I shall be glad to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia modifies his amendment in accordance with the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I wish to address myself very briefly to this amendment, although I do not intend to talk on the subject of the amendment. I wish to speak in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield the floor?

Mr. BYRD. I yield the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire at this time, very briefly, to call attention to an editorial which appeared on Saturday, March 16, in the Washington Daily News, entitled "Barkley Comes Through." Since the editorial is very brief, I am going to take the liberty of reading it:

BARKLEY COMES THROUGH

Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky, has taken some heavy ribbing from a few of his Democratic colleagues in the course of the long and often bitter debate on the new Hatch bill.

It has been repeatedly charged, and not without point, that had it not been for the conduct of Senator BARKLEY'S campaign for reelection in 1938 there might never have been any such thing as either the Hatch Act of 1939, forbidding Federal employees to take active part in politics, or the pending Hatch bill, which applies the same rules to State employees paid with United States funds.

That may be true. Certainly the Barkley-Chandler campaign of 1938, in which the Federal pay-roll machine in Kentucky locked horns with the State pay-roll machine, was one contest which, above all others, dramatized the great need for putting strings on the public-tax purse. The people of this country are willing to pay taxes, and in emergencies even to borrow against future taxes, to provide relief for the needy, pensions for the aged, work for the jobless, and to carry on other essential services of government. But the people, thus burdened, have every right to demand—and have demanded—that their tax money be spent for the purposes for which it is appropriated, and those purposes only. Hence the growing public insistence on the Hatch safeguards against using public money to perpetuate political power.

But we stray. We are writing now about the Democratic leader of the Senate, Mr. BARKLEY. He has been no special hero of ours. We did not spare him in 1938. Nevertheless, there is no grudging in the tribute we pay him for his performance in 1940. If he is by 2 years a wiser man, that is more than can be said for some of his colleagues who have been ridiculing him through the 2 weeks in which he has patiently and successfully advanced the new Hatch bill to a final Senate vote.

In championing this reform which his own experience has shown to be the right thing to do, which the people have demonstrated they want, and which his own President has approved, Mr. BARKLEY has performed a notable service for the Democratic Party and the country.

The Senate will pass the bill Monday. And in no small way that final vote will be a monument to ALBEN BARKLEY'S persistence and parliamentary skill.

Mr. President, I have not always agreed with the majority leader in this body, although I have, for many years, entertained for him a deep affection, and have always held him in the highest respect and esteem; but I desire to join, as many another American must join, in this tribute paid him by the Washington Daily News for the excellent tact, the urbanity, the vigilance, the industry, the courage, the brilliant parliamentary skill, and the fine eloquence which have brought this bill to its present final status.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this amendment, but I do desire to say in a few moments something about the pending bill.

When I originally started to attack politics and corruption in the distribution of Federal and State money it was not popular with many on this side of the aisle. We are making progress, however, and I am glad to say that in this bill we are taking another step forward. We are not taking liberty away from the voters, as some try to say, but it is a step toward protecting the voters in the States from the coercion by money, not the money of any party but the money of all the taxpayers.

The greatest coercion we have in politics today is the coercion of officials using Federal and State money to suit their own purpose. Some say that if we pass this bill the Federal Government will have its control in every county in the United States. It has today. Let a local subdivision try to challenge one of the bureaucrats in Washington, and just see how long it will be until the project in that local subdivision is shut down. It is not the question of liberty that is involved in the passage of the pending bill.

There are two groups against the Hatch bill: First, the State spoilsmen; second, those who believe in States' rights. The first group are fighting a battle of self-preservation, and I do not say that they have not a right to do so. The second group are wrong in their contention. I think the mistake of those who are fighting for States' rights is in the fact that they tolerated and continued and promoted the action of the Federal Government in dumping money into the States.

Some individuals on the floor of the Senate opposing this bill as an invasion have been 98 percent for the Federal Government going into the States, but they do not want it to bother their 2 percent. They are 100 percent for taking the money, but they say the Federal Government has no right to regulate how the money is used.

It is really ridiculous to hear some who have wanted to regulate the least part of State and local and individual liberty now talking about this bill interfering with the liberty of individuals. Are they interested in the liberty of individuals? Or are they interested in distributing and using the Federal money to oil and control State politics?

I could tell about conditions in my State, and go into the subject at length. My colleague the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has done so. Copies of much of that evidence I have in my possession, and much more I could add; but I do not intend to take the time of the Senate by so doing, because many other Senators desire to speak in the limited time. I do say that it is high time for the Federal Government to stop the use of Federal money in attempting to control local, State, and Federal elections.

Some of the opposition to this bill is not beceause of a fear of the bill invading the liberty of individuals. It is because they want to take away the liberty of individuals to vote as they desire. They want the liberty to fire employees who dare to oppose the State machine.

I heard one Senator say, "You are going to stop individuals from going around at night and knocking on the doors and asking persons to help the party." They know the bill is not aimed to stop legitimate political activity. What the proponents of the bill desire to do, in my opinion, is to stop State officials who are paid in whole or in part from Federal funds going around during the day, when they are employed to work, and rounding up votes, and coercing employees to go along with the machine.

Let me read what a Senate committee has said about the use of the Federal authority and the State authority in the corruption of politics. I quote from the volume issued by the Special Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures and Use of Governmental Funds, with reference to the State of Pennsylvania. That is what it says on page 186:

That W. P. A. workers and employees throughout the State of Pennsylvania have been threatened, intimidated, and coerced to change their voting registrations as the result of undue persuasion and pressure upon them, not only by officials and employees of the State highway department and other lesser political subdivisions of the State, and by political leaders therein, but by officials and supervisory employees of the Works Progress Administration as well.

Further it says, and I quote:

That in numerous instances high officials of the Works Progress Administration and employees of other agencies the expenses of which are, in part at least, paid with Federal funds, the officials and employees of the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, and the officials and employees of lesser political subdivisions of the State, stepped aside from their official duties and devoted their time to an active furtherance of political matters and interests, without the formality of resigning or taking any proper leave of their official positions and duties.

Let me add that that is the type of liberty the Hatch bill is trying to take away on the part of individuals who are playing politics on Government time, while being paid by the Government taxpayers—the liberty to force workers to vote as the machine says or lose their jobs.

The committee says further:

That workers and employees of the Works Progress Administration, of other Federal agencies, of the State highway department, and of other lesser political subdivisions of the State were imposed upon, intimidated, and coerced in the matter of attending political meetings and functions by and through representations by political leaders.

That is the type of coercion this bill attempts to reach. It is not really a question of liberty; it is a question of going one step farther and trying to protect the ballot box. When the ballot box is controlled by political spoilsmen of the State, it is just as bad as having it controlled by political spoilsmen of the Federal Government. There is no difference at all. I am opposed to both types of control.

It is said that this bill does not go far enough; that it does not touch enough persons. Why not go as far as we can, and then gradually increase the scope of legislation until we give a death blow to political corruption?

As I said originally, I opposed political corruption of the W. P. A. I was for the original Hatch Act. I am for the pending Hatch bill, because I do not believe public money should be used for political purposes. That is what is happening. But the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] the other day said this bill could not be enforced because of the cost. Oh, no; the cost of government would not be increased by the passage of the pending bill. It would be lessened, because just as soon as those in charge of some of the rotten, corrupt State machines learn that they cannot use Federal money to control elections, they will not be so much interested in putting people on the State and Federal pay rolls and spending the money extravagantly.

The way to reduce the cost of government is to strike at the individuals who want to use the money of the Federal and State Governments for political purposes. We are now seeing a vast army of State and Federal officials doing nothing except playing politics on the public pay roll. This bill reaches out and stops some of them.

In my State, some individuals work for the State roads commission and are paid partly by the State government and partly by the W. P. A. If they are paid entirely by the W. P. A. they are now covered under Federal law. Under the present circumstances, those who are paid partly by the State and partly by the W. P. A. are exempt. The pending Hatch bill will cover both of them.

The argument of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] and others is that because some are now exempt, all should be exempt. In other words, his argument is, since those committing a wrong are running loose in the country, we should open the doors and let all the wrongdoers loose.

Mr. President, that is not my idea of good government. I say another wrong will not correct the original wrong.

The time has come when we should keep the ballot box inviolate. When we are talking about war for democracy across the seas, remember that the heart of democracy here is the ballot box, and when that is corrupted through Federal funds, through coercion, or through any of the many things I could mention, there is a blow at the heart of democracy. The purpose of the Hatch Act is not to take away the liberty of individuals, but to protect their liberty.

Mr. President, I have been suffering from a severe sore throat, and I wish I could speak longer, but I cannot. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted at this place in the RECORD a statement of my own in furtherance of my position on the Hatch Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

When the Hatch bill passes the Senate this afternoon, as I am confident it will, it will add another safeguard to the protection of elections in this country. On February 17, 1936, I spoke on the floor of the United States Senate against the use of the Federal W. P. A. funds for political purposes. Many times thereafter I arose to condemn the use of Federal funds for building political machines.

When there was an amendment submitted to the W. P. A. appropriation bill to prohibit political activity of W. P. A. officials I supported it with my voice and vote.

When the original Hatch bill was presented to the Senate, I publicly praised it as a step toward protecting the Federal workers from pressure of those controlling political machines and from officials who expected to "play politics."

Today we shall see the Senate take another step forward in the path of cleaning up politics.

Tomorrow some of the holes, of which the opponents speak, will be plugged by suitable legislation.

I believe the people in 1938 called for cleaning up the elections. I believe the people wanted no more of the scandal they had seen in the corruption of the ballot box through the use of Federal money as was the case in Pennsylvania and other States.

THE DAY OF THE SPOILSMAN IS GONE

The day of the pernicious spoilsman is gone. He may be in the saddle in some of the States of the Union, but I have confidence in the people that there will be a definite move to clean up those machines that have coerced the employees and degraded the democratic process of the ballot box.

For a long while the Government employees under civil service have been protected in their liberty of casting their votes as their consciences dictated. When that act was passed, no doubt the statement was made that the liberty of those individuals was being impaired.

Since I have been in the Senate I have seen moves to free the W. P. A. workers from the control of the politicians who would deprive them from sharing in relief if they failed to vote right. Next, the Hatch Act lifted the coercion and pressure from Federal officials. Now this bill lifts such pressure from the State officials paid in whole or in part by Federal funds.

WHOSE LIBERTY?

The argument of those opposing this legislation that it takes the liberty from the little fellow is all wrong. It gives him liberty, the liberty to do his work—work he was paid to do and not political work for which he was not employed. It gives him the liberty to vote as a free man.

The only individuals who will lose liberty under this bill are those who feel they have the liberty to force Government workers to get active in politics or lose their jobs. The liberty of those who want the Federal Government to pay for political machinery is curtailed. It should be. The liberty of coercing the little fellows is taken away from those who have and are misusing their official positions. The liberty to blackjack the employees out of part of their meager salaries is taken away. That is the liberty lost, not liberty for the good of the country but liberty of officials to take others' liberties from them.

Why should Federal-State workers be prohibited from pernicious political activities? I have never believed it is the duty of the taxpayers to pay for campaign workers. I feel that Government workers are employed to administer the activities of government as set out in the laws of this country, not to play politics. If the campaign worker is employed for political activity, his job should be eliminated and save the already overburdened taxpayer that much money.

The best type of political work any Government official can do is to do his or her job well. The great majority of the American people are more interested in those working on the Federal-State highways doing their work in building highways than building political fences.

JEFFERSON'S QUALIFICATIONS

The father of our party set forth three qualifications for public officials that we can afford to follow. They are fidelity, capacity, and honesty.

There has always been in my mind the feeling that the American people will reelect that party that serves the best interest of the country. I do not believe it is necessary that a party has to appropriate money out of the Treasury to finance a party machine unless that party has failed to do its duty. The surest way a party can stay in power is to appoint men who have Jefferson's qualifications, fidelity, capacity, and honesty. No party has to purchase its reelection unless it has failed in its duty and its promise. To those who say this bill is a blow at the Democratic Party, I say they are heaping abuse on the record of the party. It is not a blow to the party but its passage will be a great help. The Democratic Party came into power and has stayed in power through the independent votes, those individuals who vote for one party and another depending upon the issues involved. The great independent vote of America does not want corruption or coercion in elections. I do not subscribe to the theory that we must buy our way back. If we must, we do not deserve the support of the people.

Has the Democratic Party reached the stage that its existence depends upon the pernicious political activity of Government employees? I think not. These pernicious spoilsmen have hurt the party in their selfish desire to control their States. Many States went Republican in 1938 because of the resentment of the people against Democratic spoilsmen in those States. The American people, when they find out the facts, are not going to tolerate corruption of the ballot box. Our party will make its greatest growth when it eliminates those spoilsmen within our ranks whose sole reason for interest in the party is to get something from it.

I have heard it said that these State machines who are using the Federal money for their perpetuation are not compelling workers to do things they would not do voluntarily. Nonsense. Anyone who knows politics knows that pressure has been used. By whom was the amount of 2 percent arrived at? By the little fellow? No. By the official up at the top in whose hands the little fellows' jobs were at stake. Of course, a worker does not have to donate 2 percent. He can quit his job. There isn't a Senator in this body but who knows that these assessments in many States are at the point of the political shotgun. Why is it the little fellow, for whom many words have been spoken, writes and says he cannot sign his name to a letter for fear of losing his job? Why is it the stenographer, many of whom are supporting their elderly parents, gives 2 percent of her salary? Because she knows it is to protect the other 98 percent, or at least protect it unless the machine gets in desperate need of money. The only compulsion used is if the donation is not made, the worker loses her job. She has the right to voluntarily contribute or quit.

May I say here, I do not think this bill is perfect. I, for one, want to see the time come when individuals employed in the Government hold their position as a matter of merit. This, of course, does not go that far, but some day that will happen and we will have a better Government as a result of it.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL BUREAUCRACY

I have heard it said that this bill is an extension of Federal bureaucracy. Those who make that claim would be in better position to raise that argument had their record shown they opposed the extension of the Federal Government when it was stepping through act after act into the State.

They have supported restriction after restriction on the individual citizen within the States. They have set up bureau after bureau on the State. But now we hear their voices being raised that the Federal Government must stop—not stop sending money to control elections through the State machines but stop trying to control that money from its wrongful use.

Some individuals raising that argument have voted for legislation that controls the farmer's right to plow his own land and plant thereon. They have voted for legislation that controls the smallest business in the smallest towns. They have voted for legislation to have the Government pry and snoop into the everyday activities of citizens.

No voice was raised then. Why? A large officeholding bureaucracy was set up to enforce these regulations and the individuals employed were named as part of political patronage. There was no voice raised by these individuals against that; but when the Senate attempts to pass a bill to regulate the pernicious political activity of the politically appointed regulators, then they yell and scream "Invasion of Federal bureaucracy."

Their viewpoint would have had sounder ground had they raised their objections when the Government set up these alphabetic agencies that have regulated the smallest detail of the life of many. They believed in political regulation by the regulators but no congressional prohibition against stopping the pernicious political activities of those job holders who owe their job to working on Government time for the continuation of the spoils system.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] said: "If the argument made by the proponents of this legislation prevail, and we pass it, we had just as well get ready to see the greatest curtailment of Federal expenditures and the greatest curtailment and restriction of Federal extension that we have seen in a long time in this country."

How true! How wonderful!

We will see the desire to spend money greatly curtailed when State machines know they have to spend that money for the purpose for which it was appropriated and not for politics. Some of us have been wanting to see a restriction of Federal spending. The Senator from Florida, an opponent to this bill, has pointed a way. It will be a step to stop Federal bureaucracy, not a step to promote it.

STATES' RIGHTS

Some say this bill invades States' rights. Some of the finest men in the Senate believe that. Some of the most intellectual of our body say that, but I believe they are wrong. I believe this bill protects States' rights. It protects the State against Federal slush funds. Its purpose is to preserve freedom in elections. That is toward States' rights, not away from it. When the Federal group makes a political alliance with a State machine to control elections it is a blow against the rights of the people of that State. Such a combination forces the citizens into an unfair election with the cards stacked against them—the people from whom this Government must get its rights.

This bill says that the money we appropriate to build roads shall be used to build roads in the States, not to be used to control election machinery of that State by putting on employees whose divided duties are part-time work and part-time politics. It says: You who are paid by the Federal Government shall have the right to vote as you please. You shall have the right to select those you believe to be the best public servants, and that you may select them without fear of losing your job, and if you do not do the bidding of the political boss. The one purpose, as I see it, of this legislation is to preserve the freedom of elections, and I hold that is no violation of the rights of any State.

FREE GOVERNMENT

We must protect the heart of democracy—elections. Without free elections we cannot have a free government. Without free government there are no rights. The Federal Government is spending millions and millions of dollars on projects for which the State government names the employees. We are determined that money shall be used for the purpose for which it is appropriated, not as a slush fund to coerce and compel the citizens of the States to accept the control of the State boss and his machine.

The Hatch Act is a protection to the liberties of the employees and not a restriction against their liberties.

The Hatch Act is a move to stop the State political machines from using Federal money to buy elections and coerce employees.

The Hatch Act is a move toward a more efficient Government service—giving the employees a chance to devote their time and their effort to the job they are employed to do and not force them to divide their time and their effort between their jobs and their political activity.

The Hatch Act is a move to protect the heart of democracy—the freedom of elections. It is a step toward better government. It is not a cure-all, but it is the proper medicine to help the patient improve from a terrible case of political spoils.

Ten years ago this January, in my first public office, that of a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates, I raised my voice against extending and promoting the spoils system. I opposed requiring the taxpayers to pay for political workers. If we have the spoils system, let us not make it worse by coercion. I believe in the statement of a great Democrat, "He who serves his people best serves his party best." I do not believe the Public Treasury is a party Treasury. It belongs to all of the people, and when it is used for political purposes it is in violation of a sacred trust. Corruption never built a party. We must demand fidelity, capacity, and honesty.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few brief remarks on the pending measure.

I voted for the original Hatch Act, and I expect to vote for the pending Hatch amendment. During the 4-year period 1934–38 of the Democratic administration in Pennsylvania political macing and forced changes of registration were so common as to constitute a national disgrace. Pennsylvania has been charged with all sorts of political corruption, but never was it proven so convincingly as in the report of the Sheppard Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee following the election of 1938.

The most extreme abuses were found in connection with the administration of W. P. A. During these many years I have voted consistently for the W. P. A. appropriations, knowing that these funds when used for relief would be used by the then existing administration to build a political machine which would attempt to oppose me. I did not allow thought of my own political future to deter me from voting to meet human needs. However, I never lost an opportunity to protest the partisan administration of W. P. A.

The forced collections from W. P. A. personnel through the sale of picnic tickets and work-relief cards in Pennsylvania has been branded indelibly on the minds of our citizens. This was a decisive factor in the defeat of the Democratic ticket in our State in 1938. These abuses were so widespread, and the knowledge of them so common, that there came to be a general revulsion of public opinion against them. It was not necessary to attempt to produce extensive arguments to prove that these unsavory conditions existed. Charges of political corruption were made in the campaign of 1938, and the conditions were so terrible that no attempt was made to answer the charges. Indeed, Mr. President, they could not be answered. It was shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that the most extreme partisanship had prevailed among federally appointed officials operating the W. P. A. and other Government agencies in our State. The result of the election of that year should stand forever in the annals of our State as a lasting signpost warning against the waste of public-welfare funds for selfish partisan purposes.

In view of these conditions, which I am glad to say have since improved, and yet which will require eternal vigilance, I believe the enactment of the pending amendment is required. It should not be viewed as a partisan measure but as a genuine safeguard of public morality.

I shall vote for the pending bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have an amendment to suggest to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming. I have been unable to find the Senator from Wyoming in the last few minutes—he has left the floor of the Senate—and I am wondering whether I might offer my amendment and, if it is acceptable to the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from New Mexico, have it accepted, with the understanding that if it meets with opposition on the part of the Senator from Wyoming, I will have no objection to its being reconsidered between now and 3 o'clock.

The amendment which I propose is to insert after the words inserted by the Senator from Wyoming, the following language:

In municipalities the majority of whose voters are employed by the Government of the United States.

In proposing this amendment I have in mind only one situation. In the State of Washington is the city of Bremerton, at which place is located the Puget Sound Navy Yard. The Puget Sound Navy Yard is the industry of the city of Bremerton. A majority of the citizens of Bremerton are either employed by or are members of the family of someone employed by the Government at the navy yard.

For many years there has been an understanding, no official understanding, but one that has been carried out, that the navy-yard employees should be entitled to a certain number of places on the school board. The school board is a nonpolitical organization, membership on it does not carry any salary, and the work of the members is done in a way similar to that in which such work is done by citizens in other communities.

The citizens of Bremerton have been very much disturbed, since the enactment of the present Hatch law, for fear the employees of the navy yard would be deprived of their representation on the school board because of that law. I offer this amendment merely to meet that situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would that situation probably not also be found to exist at the town of Norris, in Tennessee, where a majority of the voters of the town are employed by the Tennessee Valley Authority? Would it apply to that locality?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should think it would.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in my opinion the proposal of the Senator from Washington is eminently fair, and I accept it as a modification of my original amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia modifies his amendment again. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia as modified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment restated now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place the following:

Whenever the United States Civil Service Commission determines that, by reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in any municipality or other political subdivision, the immediate vicinity of the National Capital in the States of Maryland and Virginia or in municipalities the majority of whose voters are employed by the Government of the United States, it is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable, and who reside in such municipality or political subdivision, to permit such persons to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns involving such municipality or political subdivision, the Commission is authorized to promulgate regulations permitting such persons to take an active part in such political management and political campaigns to the extent the Commission deems to be in the domestic interest of such persons.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Wyoming is now in the Chamber, and I should like to inquire of him whether or not the amendment which I have proposed is satisfactory to him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, my comments this morning were prompted solely by the feeling that the original language which was presented was too broad, and would convey to the Civil Service Commission certain powers without any rule or standard to control the discretion of the Civil Service Commission in deciding when to grant an exemption. For example, the amendment provided that "Whenever the Civil Service Commission determines that by reason of special or unusual circumstances," and so forth, without any hint as to what the Commission should hold to be a special or unusual circumstance. After having addressed one or two questions to the Senator from Virginia I elicited the information that his purpose was to grant exemptions to employees in communities close to the Capital, in which it would be practically impossible to carry on local municipal government if an exemption were not granted, because so many of the voters are employed by the Federal Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the little town of Norris, in east Tennessee, where the Norris Dam has been established, on the Clinch River, a majority of the inhabitants of the town are working for the Government, directly or indirectly. I dare say a majority of the voters are working for the Government, and they certainly should be exempted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct in that observation, and I take it that the language now offered by the Senator from Washington will cover the situation wherever it exists.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it will, and I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will ask the clerk to report the second amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the further amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place the following new section:

SEC. —. No person, firm, or corporation entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, or performing any work or services for the United States or any department or agency thereof, or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance or furnishing of, such contract, work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person, firm, or corporation for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, 5 years ago the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] prepared a bill designed to prohibit contributions for political purposes from those who make money out of governmental contracts. He came to the Senator from Virginia and did me the great honor and courtesy of requesting that I become a patron with him of the legislation. The language just read by the clerk is identical with the bill that was prepared by the Senator from New Mexico 5 years ago and introduced jointly by the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Virginia.

This bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, notwithstanding diligent efforts on the part of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Virginia we were unable to secure a favorable report on the bill, and it therefore did not come to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico that I pay tribute to the fine sincerity with which he has, from almost the very first day when he came to the Congress of the United States, worked for pure and honest elections. I heartily and sincerely commend him, for his effort. I am not in accord with all the measures he proposes in his attempt to accomplish laudable objects, but I am in accord with much of what he has proposed.

I wish to say to the Senator from New Mexico that the amendment I have just offered is not in any way an amendment hostile to his bill. It is in complete harmony with the proposed legislation that we should prohibit those who have governmental contracts, contractors who deal with the Government, contractors who make great sums out of governmental contracts, from making contributions to political parties for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. President, we propose under this legislation to prevent Tom Jones, who works on the road for $3 a day, from taking any part whatsoever in political campaigns, even to the extent of providing as I read the terms of the bill, that he cannot in the privacy of his family say for whom he is going to vote, because that would be regarded as affecting an election.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if we propose to do that we ought to take the further step and prevent those who are making money out of governmental contracts from making contributions to any political party; to prevent them from making contributions which may be considered in some instances as bribery in order to secure governmental contracts for themselves.

Senators, we talk about controlling the subordinates of the State governments and the Federal Government. The greatest source of corruption in American politics today is the use of money obtained from those who make profit out of contracts with the Government.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate, because I know we are approaching a vote on the proposed legislation, but I want to appeal to the Senator from New Mexico. I know his great power in connection with the legislation. I know—and I have seen it happen here for a week—that every amendment which has been offered has been voted down if he disapproved it. I ask him not to kill his own child. It is true that this baby has been sleeping peacefully for 5 years, but he can breathe the breath of life into that child which was born 5 years ago by making this amendment a part of the bill.

Mr. President, the amendment is offered with no hostile purpose in mind whatsoever. It is offered in entire sympathy with the philosophy of the bill. I hope the amendment, which is identical in language with the measure which the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Virginia offered 5 years ago, will be made a part of the bill.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to have an amendment read so it would not be caught under the limitation of 20 minutes before 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Nothing in this act shall prohibit any official or employee subject to its provisions from becoming a candidate or accepting a nomination for an appointive or elective office or position, provided such official or employee shall not use his official authority or influence to secure such nomination or appointment, and further provided that such official or employee shall resign from his office or employment upon receipt of such nomination or appointment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have a very short amendment read at the desk also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following new section:

SEC. —. Section 9 (a) of said act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by inserting after the words "political subjects", in the ninth line of said subdivision (a), the following: "and candidates."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I could not help but feel gratification and take some pleasure at the remarks of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. He stated quite correctly that the bill was introduced in April 1935 by me and the Senator from Virginia. The bill then offered and the amendment he offered today strike at one of the most corrupting influences in politics, and certainly I am not going to stand on the floor of the Senate today and ask the Senate not to adopt this amendment, in which I believe so firmly. On the contrary, Mr. President, I think the adoption of this amendment will vastly improve the pending measure. The entire subject would have been included by me originally if the original bill had not been confined to one subject, but we have included other matters in the bill now, and I see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted.

There is one thing in connection with it, however, which I think should be corrected. I see in the first line—and probably this was my error in the first instance—that the prohibition runs against a corporation making a campaign contribution. As I understand, the present Corrupt Practices Act precludes and prohibits any campaign contribution by a corporation. This might be construed as lessening or loosening in some degree the present Corrupt Practices Act, and rather than do that I will ask the Senator from Virginia if he will not agree that we may strike out the words "or corporation" where they appear in the amendment; and after the word "firm", strike out the words "or corporation" where they appear in the amendment. And also that there be inserted between "person" and "firm" the word "or", so as to read "no person or firm."

Mr. BYRD. I agree to the modification proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to the bill which he prepared 5 years ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has modified his amendment, which he has a right to do.

Mr. BYRD. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have offered a very simple amendment. In section 9 of the Hatch Act we find this language:

All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

I think the Senator from New Mexico was interrogated as to whether the word "subjects" included "candidates." I was under the impression that he thought it did. At any rate, I wish to add to that language the words "and candidates" so it will be certain.

In this particular case it is provided that the rules of the Civil Service Commission shall govern. Those rules expressly provide that civil-service employees are not permitted to speak in campaigns, if I recollect aright, and that they must not write or publish articles dealing with political campaigns. In other words, they are very stringently limited as to how they may express themselves with regard to political subjects.

I wish to add to the word "subjects" the words "and candidates." Under the restrictions of the Civil Service Commission I think no one should be denied the privilege of expressing opposition to a candidate or favor for a candidate. I think it touches very closely the arguments which have been made about school teachers having the right to approve or oppose the election of a superintendent of schools or director of public instruction.

Under the act as it now exists we have every protection against coercion. In section 2 officers are prohibited from using their official authority in any way to influence an election.

In section 3 we find that they are prohibited from using their power of employment to bribe people to vote either for subjects or for candidates.

In section 4 we find that they are prohibited from making any kind of threat whatever or exercising any form of coercion against an employee to induce him to vote for or against a certain subject or for or against a certain candidate.

In section 5 we find that officers having charge of employment are prohibited from soliciting or receiving any contributions.

Mr. President, it seems to me that by those sections of the law coercion or even inducement of those employed is prevented. We come, then, to the question of what liberties the employees shall have. The employees under the civil service are very much restricted in their liberties with regard to elections. They are allowed to express themselves on subjects. They should be allowed to express themselves on candidates. Under the restrictions which exist in the civil-service rules, namely, that they cannot make public speeches, that they cannot take part in management, that they cannot write or publish articles, they are limited solely to the right of expressing themselves for or against the candidate.

If we do not place the language of my amendment in the bill, every employee coming under this measure will be constantly in danger of losing his position, or at least being prosecuted, by reason of the fact that inadvertently he may sometime say to his wife, or to his son, or to a brother-in-law, "Well, I think JOHN GARNER should be the nominee of the Democratic Party."

I therefore insist that the amendment is a reasonable one.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, is the Senator proposing an amendment to the act we passed last year?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is an amendment to the general act.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the amendment may be defeated. The question which the Senator has raised has been discussed quite frequently on the floor, and I am quite sure that the act as it now is permits the doing of the things that the Senator is arguing for. But I do not want to loosen that act, and further extend its provisions.

Under the amendments which were made to the act permitting expression of opinion on all subjects, and eliminating the word "privately," I think the field was fully covered, and every needful protection given.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator is right in that matter, if this amendment means exactly what the Senator means, why take a chance on the Civil Service Commission? There is one thing we seem to agree is included, and knowing that that is included in the word "subject," why not say so?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. (Putting the question.) The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BROWN. It is very obvious that the calling of the roll will take up the entire time between now and 3 o'clock. In that case those of us who have amendments—and I have one on the desk which is agreeable to the Senator from New Mexico—cannot have the amendments considered, as there will not be time to have them read or discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour has passed when new amendments may be offered.

Mr. BROWN. But the amendment I refer to is on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendments on the desk may be called up for action.

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand that by this maneuver no more explanations may be made from now on as to the purpose of the amendments?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that I do not think his use of the word "maneuver" is a happy one. We have the same right to have a roll call with respect to the pending amendment as to others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to advise the Senator from Michigan that although the yeas and nays have been ordered, if the Senator from Michigan desires to make an explanation of his amendment at this time he may do so.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask particularly the attention of the Senator from New Mexico. My proposed amendment states that no employee of a State government, or of a municipal government, or of any agency thereof, is barred from being a candidate if he takes a leave of absence during the time.

Mr. HATCH. That amendment relates only to State officials?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator submit it to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as the remarks of the Senator from Michigan referring to the demand for the yeas and nays as a "maneuver" are concerned, the Senator from Missouri would like to say that if that is a maneuver, a similar maneuver took place in the Constitutional Convention, because that was where the right of having the yeas and nays was guaranteed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I withdraw the word "maneuver." I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BROWN. The Bankhead amendment as it passed the Senate, as I understood——

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCNARY. The Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon raises a point of order that the Senate is not in order. The Senator is perfectly correct. There is so much confusion on the floor of the Senate that it is almost impossible for those at the desk to hear what is going on. The Senate will be in order, and the Chair asks the occupants of the gallery to be as quiet as possible.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the parliamentary inquiry I desire to make is this: On page 2852 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 14 the Bankhead amendment limiting campaign contributions to $5,000 contains, in its subsection (d), the following language:

> Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person, directly or indirectly, in excess of $5,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

According to the RECORD, it appears that the Senate adopted the amendment in that manner. I understand from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that his amendment as submitted did not contain the words "or corporation" in subsection (d). I now ask the Senator if I am correct in that statement?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If necessary, I rise to a question of personal privilege, because there has been criticism of my draftsmanship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama withhold his question of personal privilege until the Chair has had an opportunity to answer the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Some objection was made to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] proceeding on this subject, and I wanted to aid——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I think I can satisfy the Chair that this is a parliamentary inquiry. I ask what the language was which was actually agreed to. What was the language of the Bankhead amendment which was submitted? Did it contain the words "or corporation" or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the official record does not contain the words on which the question has been raised.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected to show that the amendment as adopted did not contain the words "or corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is recognized on the question of personal privilege.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, my only purpose in rising to a question of personal privilege is to answer the statement of Mr. Weir, the Republican money collector, that this amendment had been carelessly drafted. I do not intend to engage in any cross criticism, but Mr. Weir was merely misinformed. I corrected the original amendment, as it appears on page 2720 of the RECORD, and presented an amendment omitting all reference to corporations and their officers, and stated that it was done to avoid any controversy about its effect on the Corrupt Practices Act. That was well understood in the Senate.

I first offered an amendment containing the figure $1,000. That appears in the RECORD on page 2790. The amendment did not contain the word "corporation." The next morning I offered a similar amendment, with the statement, which appears in the RECORD, that the only change in the amendment then offered was to change the figure "$1,000" to "$5,000." So it is perfectly clear all the way through the RECORD that the word "corporation" was omitted; and I am advised that the official Journal of the Senate for that day so states. I therefore ask unanimous consent, merely to clarify the situation and to avoid confusion, to have reprinted following my remarks a copy of the Journal entry as to the contents of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and the Journal entry will be printed at this point.

The Journal entry is as follows:

On motion by Mr. BANKHEAD to further amend the part proposed to be inserted by the reported amendment, as amended, by inserting on page 7, after line 18, the following:

"SEC. — (a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

"(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee or political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate or political party nominees for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

"(c) Presidential electors and the President of the United States for the purpose of this act are declared to be elective officers.

"(d) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person, directly or indirectly, in violation of this section in excess of $5,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

"(e) Any person who directly or indirectly contributes more than $5,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election, in violation of the provisions of this section, is guilty of pernicious political activity, and on conviction, shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not exceeding 5 years."

It was determined in the affirmative, yeas, 40; nays, 38.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I have had upon the desk for several days an amendment with which Senators are familiar. I wish to take a moment to explain it, because it is due to come to a vote.

Section 2 of the Hatch Act provides that any one in politics who uses his official authority to influence an election commits a crime. For this crime he may be punished by a fine of $1,000, or imprisonment in jail for 1 year, or both. If anyone uses his official authority to influence an election he commits a crime. That is a provision of section 2. I simply wish to include in that category not only politicians, but also employers of labor and lenders of money at interest.

We have said in the first section of the Hatch Act that no one shall coerce or threaten anyone else in the exercise of his franchise. Coming down to the next section, which deals with the use of official authority, making it a crime to use official authority to influence an election, I wish to provide that such conduct shall be a crime not only for politicians, who hold political jobs, but also for those who employ labor and those who lend money at interest. I am in favor of the section as far as it goes. However, I wish to include in the same category those who employ labor and those who lend money at interest in order than they may not use their positions as employers of labor and lenders of money to oppress anyone in an election.

Senators know that no one is so oppressive in politics as a banker. If a banker holds a mortgage against the home of a person, he can threaten him with foreclosure of the mortgage on his home. He has a strangle hold. Some of the most pernicious politicians I have known in my life have been bankers. We have some of them in southern Indiana who play the highest-handed kind of politics, and I want to reach them under this act. I want to provide that they may not use their banks in order to carry out their purpose in politics.

The other day while I had the floor I mentioned this amendment, and a county chairman from my State happened to be in the gallery. I saw him afterward, and he said, "Of course, bankers are the worst politicians we have to deal with." He told me about an election for superintendent of schools in his county. The township trustees elect the superintendent of schools. There were the same number of Democrats as Republicans on the board. There was a tie vote, but the banker of the town was a Republican, and he wanted a Republican superintendent of schools, so he called in one of the Democrats who expected to vote for a Democratic superintendent of schools and said, "We have a mortgage on your place, and if you do not vote for the Republican candidate for superintendent of schools we will foreclose the mortgage." Of course, what the Democrat did was to vote for the Republican candidate for superintendent of schools. That sort of thing happens. Senators know that it happens.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Republican keep his promise not to foreclose the mortgage?

Mr. MINTON. Oh, yes. He kept his promise, because the township trustee had delivered his vote for the Republican candidate for superintendent of schools.

Everybody knows that the bankers use their power over the people to whom they have loaned money to oppress them in the matter of their votes. All I want to do is to put the bankers of Indiana and other States in the same category with the rest of us. We may not use our official authority to influence an election. I want to say to the bankers that they may not, the day before election, bring in the people on whose property they hold mortgages and say, "If you do not vote the way we want you to vote tomorrow, we will foreclose the mortgage on your homes." I want to say to those who employ labor that they may not herd the laborers in the day before election and say to them, "You vote the way we want you to vote, or we will close the factory."

Why should not bankers and employers of labor be in the same category as politicians? They are in the same category in the first section, as to intimidation and coercion. I want to put them under the provisions of section 2, which says that official authority may not be used to influence or control an election. I want to say that the man who lends money at interest and the man who employs labor shall not use their money or positions to influence or control elections. This section applies only to Federal elections, with respect to which we have ample authority.

That is all my amendment does. It is in perfect harmony with the objective of the bill, which seeks to protect the people in the exercise of their franchise, and to protect the freedom of elections. I hope that when the time comes it will be agreed to. There can be no question about the amendment being in thorough harmony with all the purposes of the bill. It is merely a broadening of the base of section 2 to include employers of labor and lenders of money, so that they may not use their positions as employers of labor and lenders of money to drag in some poor unfortunate fellow and tell him how he shall vote on election day. That is all the amendment does.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to be in order to explain amendments. I had an amendment read from the desk. The reason for its submission was that on yesterday the Senate adopted as part of the law the regulations of the Civil Service Commission and the interpretations which it had put upon the words "political activity" and "participation in campaigns." Subsection 30 of those regulations absolutely forbids candidacy for a nomination or election by anyone governed by the act. That is, the Federal inspector of meats in a packing plant, who might have an opportunity to run for county clerk or for sheriff, is absolutely barred. It seemed to me that the regulation which the Civil Service Commission adopted was perfectly proper as related to persons who have permanent positions, that is, those in continuing positions in the civil service. It is perfectly proper to stop them from being candidates while under permanent tenure. However, the man who holds a petty Federal place, subject to termination with a change of administration, or subject to discharge at the will of his employer without cause or without reason, is entitled to an opportunity, if he wishes, to have his name submitted as a candidate for promotion or appointment, provided he does not violate any of the fundamentals. That is all I seek to do by the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the time will shortly arrive when further discussion of the various amendments which are to be voted on will not be permitted, a matter which I regret, in a way. I think amendments ought to be fully discussed if they are to be voted on.

I wish to say to the Senator from Indiana that I think the very thing he talked about is already prohibited in section 1. It was my design in drafting that section last year to do the very thing he is talking about. The Senator from Indiana was the first Member of the United States Senate to grasp the significance of section 1 in that connection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the Senator referring to the original act?

Mr. HATCH. I am referring to the original act which prohibits intimidation or coercion by any person against any other person at any election in which a Federal official is to be chosen. That includes the banker, the employer of labor, and everyone else.

As a matter of draftsmanship, section 2, to which the amendment is directed, refers to the use of official authority by officials. The banker or money lender, or the employer of labor, has no official authority that could be used. The amendment is simply out of place. The matter sought to be covered by the amendment is covered by section 1, and I am glad it is so covered.

As to the other amendments which are to be voted on, I told the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] that I would not object to his amendment, with respect to which he had conferred with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. However, in view of the fact that we are not permitted to discuss other amendments, I hope other amendments will be defeated, and that we may proceed to vote on the bill.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], which will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to add a new section 22, as follows:

SEC. 22. Section 9 (a) of said act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by inserting, after the words "political subjects", in the ninth line of said subdivision (a), the following: "and candidates."

So that the sentence shall read as follows:

All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and withhold my vote. If the Senator from Wisconsin were present, he would vote "nay" on this question, and if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that, if present, he would vote "yea" on this question. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—44

So Mr. PITTMAN's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The offering of amendments which were read prior to 2:40 p. m. is now in order.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to which the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Georgia have indicated that they have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 19. Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent any person employed by the State government, the municipal government, or any agency thereof from becoming a bona fide candidate for any public office and engaging in any lawful political activity in furtherance of his candidacy in the event he takes a leave of absence without pay from his employment during the campaign.

Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent—

Any lawful political activity in an election and the preceding campaign at which there are no candidates on party tickets representing a party which polled votes for President in the last preceding national election; nor lawful political activity in an election and the preceding campaign respecting any issue not particularly identified with any national or State political party, such as revision of the Constitution of the United States or of a State; referendums, approval or disapproval, of city or municipal statutes or ordinances, and other issues of similar character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. MINTON called for a division.

On a division, there were ayes 50, noes 9.

So Mr. BROWN's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I call up the amendment which I have on the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 21. Nothing in this act shall prohibit any official or employee subject to its provisions from becoming a candidate or accepting a nomination for an appointive or elective office or position, provided such official or employee shall not use his official authority or influence to secure such nomination or appointment: And provided further, That such official or employee shall resign from his office or employment upon receipt of such nomination or appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for a division.

On a division, the ayes were 41, noes 39.

So the amendment of Mr. ADAMS was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I call up the amendment which I discussed a few moments ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 16, after the comma, it is proposed to insert:

Any person who employs labor or lends money at interest.

Following the word "authority", in line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Or his position as employer of labor or lender of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the "ayes" have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

The Senate proceeded to divide.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The ayes are 32. The noes are 41.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw the request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment relative to the exemption of teachers in public schools and in State eleemosynary institutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 20. Nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way affecting educational, religious, eleemosynary, philanthropic, or cultural institutions, establishments, and agencies, together with the officers and employees thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which has heretofore been printed and which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after "(1)", it is proposed to insert "any officer or."

On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "administrative."

On page 2, line 4, after "(2)", it is proposed to insert "any officer."

On page 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "administrative."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated as that part of the bill will read if the amendment is agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated in such a way as to show how the bill will read if amended as proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senate will give me unanimous consent to do so, I think I can explain the amendment in a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to explain the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended, section 2 would read:

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for (1) any officer or any person employed in any position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or (2) any officer or any person employed in any position by any State, by any political subdivision or municipality of any State, or by any agency of any State or any of its political subdivisions or municipalities (including any corporation controlled by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality or agency)—

And so forth.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. In a comparison of the amendment with the text of the bill before me—and I will ask the Chair to follow me and tell me whether I am correct or not—on page 2, line 4, after "(2)", the amendment proposes to insert the words "any officer." I find no such figure in line 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator evidently has the late print. The Chair is following the first print. All amendments refer to the first print.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the "noes" have it.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for a division.

The Senate proceeded to divide.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this vote the ayes are 16, the noes are 52, so the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, my amendment on the clerk's desk, which defines political activities which are proscribed, has not been voted on, and I ask unanimous consent that section 3 be eliminated from the amendment, because that has been adopted. I withdraw section 3 of the amendment, which was adopted earlier in the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to withdraw section 3 of his amendment. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment will be stated with section 3 eliminated.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, there is possibly a slight misunderstanding between the Senator from New Mexico and myself. The Senator from New Mexico tells me that he supposed I would not offer this amendment if he accepted a substitute for section 3. I did not understand it that way. But I take what the Senator says to be the fact, and I will not press the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not care to have the Senator think I am holding him to the agreement I have suggested.

Mr. BROWN. I understand the Senator's position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, on page 2, line 23——

Mr. HATCH. The time for offering amendments has expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment evidently has not been offered in time. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BARKLEY and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELLENDER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably detained from the Senate on important public business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Florida would vote "yea," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

Mr. BYRD. My colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably absent. I am requested by him to announce that were he present he would vote in the negative.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. The Senator from Viriginia is not present, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 28, as follows:

So the bill S. 3046 was passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill as passed, including all the amendments agreed to, be printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill, S. 3046, as passed by the Senate, is as follows:

An act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for (1) any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), or (2) any person employed in any administrative position by any State, by any political subdivision or municipality of any State, or by any agency of any State or any of its political subdivisions or municipalities (including any corporation controlled by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by any State or by any such political subdivision, municipality, or agency), in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States, or by any such department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession."

SEC. 2. Section 10 of such act of August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The provisions of this act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for any other provision of law."

SEC. 3. Such act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 12. (a) No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. When used in the second sentence of this subsection, the term 'officer or employee' shall not be construed to include (1) the Governor or the Lieutenant Governor of any State or any person who is authorized by law to act as Governor, or the mayor of any city; (2) duly elected heads of executive departments of any State or municipality who are not classified under a State or municipal merit or civil-service system; (3 officers holding elective offices.

"(b) If any Federal agency charged with the duty of making any loan or grant of funds of the United States for use in any activity in connection with which any function is exercised by any officer or employee to whom the provisions of subsection (a) are applicable has reason to believe that any such officer or employee has violated the provisions of such subsection, it shall make a report with respect thereto to the United States Civil Service Commission (hereinafter referred to as the 'Commission'). Upon the receipt of any such report, or upon the receipt of any other information which seems to the Commission to warrant an investigation, the Commission shall forthwith by registered mail give notice to any such officer or employee and to the State or local agency employing such officer or employee of the pendency of the charge, in which notice shall be set forth a summary of the alleged violation and of the time and place for a hearing upon said charge, at which hearing (which shall be not earlier than 10 days thereafter) either the officer or employee or the State or local agency, or both, may appear with counsel and be heard, whereupon said Commission shall determine whether any violation of such subsection has occurred. If the Commission determines that any such violation has occurred, and that such violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment, it shall notify the appropriate State or local agency of such determination, whereupon such officer or employee or the appropriate State, or both, shall have the right to appeal from any such finding to the next term of the United States district court for the district in which such officer or employee shall reside; and the United States district courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal, and all proceedings therein shall be had in the same manner as is provided for appeals taken under section 39c, Public Law No. 696, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1938 (U. S. C., Supp. title 11, sec. 67c). No such officer or employee shall be dismissed as a result of such determination by said Commission and no loan or grant shall be withheld until said appeal shall be finally determined. Pending final determination of any such appeal, any such officer or employee previously found guilty of a violation of this section shall stand suspended. If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall certify the fact to the appropriate Federal agency, which shall thereupon withhold from its contributions, loan or grant to such State or local agency within such State, a sum twice the amount of the annual salary of such officer or employee.

"(c) In determining the amount to be withheld under subsection (b) on account of violations of subsection (a), the Commission shall take into account the nature of such violations and the circumstances under which they occurred: Provided, That in no event shall loans or grants pledged by a State or local agency as security for its bonds or notes be withheld where such action would jeopardize the payment of principal or interest on such bonds or notes.

"(d) The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. Any determination made by the Commission under this section shall be final and conclusive upon all accounting and other officers of the United States and all other persons.

"(e) The provisions of the first two sentences of section 12 (a) shall not apply to employees in an activity of a State or of a local agency not financed as to such particular activity in whole or in part by Federal loans or grants.

"(f) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'State or local agency' means the executive branch of any State, or of any municipality or other political subdivision of such State, or any agency or department thereof.

"(2) The term 'Federal agency' includes any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States (except a member bank of the Federal Reserve System).

"SEC. 13. (a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

"(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee or political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate or political party nominees for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

"(c) Presidential electors and the President of the United States for the purpose of this act are declared to be elective officers.

"(d) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person, directly or indirectly, in violation of this section in excess of $5,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

"(e) Any person who directly or indirectly contributes more than $5,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election, in violation of the provisions of this section, is guilty of pernicious political activity, and on conviction, shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not exceeding 5 years.

"SEC. 14. No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any officer or employee embraced by this section to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes.

"SEC. 15. For the purposes of this act, persons employed in the government of the District of Columbia shall be deemed to be employed in the executive branch of the Government of the United States, except that for the purposes of the second sentence of section 9 (a) the Commissioners and the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia shall not be deemed to be officers or employees.

"SEC. 16. The provisions of this act which prohibit persons to whom such provisions apply from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns shall be deemed to prohibit the same activities on the part of such persons as the United States Civil Service Commission has heretofore determined are at the time of the passage of this act prohibited on the part of employees in the classified civil service of the United States by the provisions of the civil-service rules prohibiting such employees from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

"SEC. 17. Whenever the United States Civil Service Commission determines that, by reason of special or unusual circumstances which exist in any municipality or other political subdivision, in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital in the States of Maryland and Virginia or in municipalities the majority of whose voters are employed by the Government of the United States, it is in the domestic interest of persons to whom the provisions of this act are applicable, and who reside in such municipality or political subdivision, to permit such persons to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns involving such municipality or political subdivision, the Commission is authorized to promulgate regulations permitting such persons to take an active part in such political management and political campaigns to the extent the Commission deems to be in the domestic interest of such persons.

"SEC. 18. No person or firm entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, or performing any work or services for the United States or any department or agency thereof, or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance or furnishing of, such contract, work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person or firm, for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years.

"SEC. 19. Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent any person employed by the State government, the municipal government, or any agency thereof, from becoming a bona fide candidate for any public office and engaging in any lawful political activity in furtherance of his candidacy in the event he takes a leave of absence without pay from his employment during the campaign.

"Nothing in this act or in said act of August 2, 1939, shall be construed to prevent any lawful political activity in an election and the preceding campaign at which there are no candidates on party tickets representing a party which polled votes for President in the last preceding national election; nor lawful political activity in an election and the preceding campaign respecting any issue not particularly identified with any National or State political party, such as revision of the Constitution of the United States or of a State; referendums; approval or disapproval of city or municipal statutes or ordinances, and other issues of similar character.

"SEC. 20. Nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way affecting educational, religious, eleemosynary, philanthropic, or cultural institutions, establishments, and agencies, together with the officers and employees thereof.

"SEC. 21. Nothing in this act shall prohibit any official or employee subject to its provisions from becoming a candidate or accepting a nomination for an appointive or elective office or position provided such official or employee shall not use his official authority or influence to secure such nomination or appointment: And provided further, That such official or employee shall resign from his office or employment upon receipt of such nomination or appointment.

"SEC. 22. Section 9 (a) of said act of August 2, 1939, is further amended by inserting after the words 'political subjects,' in the ninth line of said subdivision (a), the following: 'and candidates.'

"SEC. 23. As used in this act, the term 'State' means any State, Territory, or possession of the United States."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1750. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the town of Marmet, W. Va., two tracts of land to be used for municipal purposes; and

S. 2739. An act to amend section 45 of the United States Criminal Code to make it applicable to the outlying possessions of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8641) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8641) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8202, the general appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in view of the misinformation which has been going the rounds in regard to the extent of the amendments approved by the Committee on Appropriations to the pending bill, I feel that, in justice to the committee, I should make a general statement in regard to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is one of the most important bills that has been before the Senate, and I ask that we have better order so that we can hear the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The confusion is very largely caused by large numbers of the occupants of the galleries leaving and others entering. The Doorkeppers will preserve order in the galleries, and the Senate will be in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the pending legislation, the agricultural appropriation bill, provides for the most far-flung and varied activities of Government of any measure considered each year by the Congress. Something like 2,000 different projects related to almost every conceivable phase of plant, animal, and human life are supported by the funds carried in this measure.

After having wrestled with this bill for 6 years, I am convinced that it is beyond the ability of any one human being to familiarize himself in detail with the scope and extent of all of the work that is done or supposed to be done in the program carried on by this Department.

The task of the committee handling this bill is always a difficult one. Not only are the hearings where departmental witnesses testify rather tedious and involved, but this bill also attracts a large number of persons who wish to present problems which peculiarly affect their business or section in an effort to obtain appropriations to help with their solution.

These witnesses, some representing national organizations, come before the committee with recommendations for appropriations to help with the solution of their problems.

Senators are familiar with the fact that the Bureau of the Budget this year dealt very drastically with the recommendations of the Department affecting agricultural appropriations. There are four different sets of figures that are sometimes used in explaining the amount of money that is involved in the agricultural appropriation bill. Each set of figures includes different items. One of those sets of figures applies only to the new money that is appropriated. Another contains the so-called new money that is appropriated and, as well, the reappropriations, but excludes trust funds and cooperative funds.

There is another which contains new money and the permanent appropriations. It has always been my thought that the figures which more truly represented a true picture of the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture were those which included funds from all sources, the new money that was appropriated, the permanent appropriations that are established by law, the amount of reappropriations, cooperative funds, and funds from all sources that are included in the agricultural bill or by existing law, and which will be available to the Department of Agriculture for expenditure in a given year.

Using those figures, the amount of the appropriations for the year 1940, being funds that are available from all sources, amounted to about $1,428,334,430. When the Bureau of the Budget undertook the consideration of this bill to make its recommendations to the Congress this amount was reduced to $864,000,000. That is a reduction by the Bureau of the Budget of $564,000,000, or approximately a 40-percent cut in the appropriations as contained in the legislation for the current year.

When the bill reached the House of Representatives the House proceeded to make still further reductions, though the Bureau of the Budget had already cut the appropriations for the agricultural activities of the country to the bone. The bill as it passed the House appropriated $796,973,132, or a reduction below the appropriations for the year 1940 of $631,000,000, being a reduction of 44 percent that had been leveled against the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves that figure will he now tell me how the $796,000,000 appropriated by the House compared with the Budget estimate?

Mr. RUSSELL. The $796,000,000 appropriated by the House compared with Budget estimates of $864,000,000, being a reduction below the Budget estimate.

Mr. President, I might say, to be perfectly fair, that $60,000,000 of money that was contained in the bill as it passed the House has been made available immediately to the Department for use in the soil-conservation program under the provisions of the first deficiency act, which has, as I understand, passed both branches of Congress. And in all fairness that amount of money should be added to the Budget estimates, to the House figures, and to the Senate figures, because that amount was made available earlier than the next fiscal year in order to bring the conservation program into line.

I might say further that the appropriations for the Rural Electrification Administration and for the farm-tenancy program, which have heretofore been made as direct appropriations by the Congress, were dealt with differently this year by the committee. The committee will offer amendments which will provide that the funds for these two activities of the Department shall be obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, just as other loan programs of the Government are handled. This involves legislation, and the committee could not under the rules include it in the bill, but authorized me to offer it from the floor.

The Bureau of the Budget recommended that the appropriation for the Rural Electrification Administration be handled in that manner. The committee, after going into the fine record of repayments that have been made by those who have borrowed funds in order to become home owners under the farm-tenant purchase program, concluded that they were fully justified in also financing that program from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation rather than from a direct appropriation from the Treasury.

Mr. President, I ask that table A, showing Department of Agriculture appropriations, to which I have referred, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

TABLE A.—Department of Agriculture appropriations (inclusive of "Loans, relief, and rural rehabilitation" carried in emergency relief acts, permanent appropriations, and trust funds)

	Appropriation, 1940	Budget estimate, 1941 [1]			House bill, 1941 [1]			Senate committee bill, 1941
		Amount	Reduction below 1940		Amount	Reduction below 1940		Amount	Reduction below 1940
			Amount	Percent		Amount	Percent		Amount	Percent
Total appropriations (includes reappropriations)	$1,428,334,430	$864,001,667	−$564,332,763	40	$796,973,132	−$631,361,298	44	$1,067,241,716	−$361,092,714	25
On this basis, House bill is below Budget estimates $67,028,535, or 7.8 percent. Senate committee bill is above Budget estimates $203,240,049, or 24 percent.
Total direct appropriations (excludes reappropriations)	1,290,289,427	832,976,664	−457,312,763	35	765,948,129	−524,341,298	41	1,034,916,713	−255,372,714	20
On this basis, House bill is below Budget estimates $67,028,535, or 8.0 percent. Senate committee bill is above Budget estimates $201,940,049, or 24 percent.

[1] Exclusive of $60,000,000 for "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources" to offset similar amount now in first deficiency appropriation bill, 1940.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senate's attention to the fact that, whereas the total amount of over-all reductions in the Budget submitted to the Congress upon its convening in January amounted to 8 percent, the bill for the agricultural interests of the country was reduced by the Bureau of the Budget by approximately 40 percent. I have stated on the floor of the Senate previously that there is nothing in the general farm picture, nor in any evidence that was submitted to the Appropriations Committee in the consideration of this bill, to justify this tremendous and disproportionate reduction in the agricultural appropriation bill.

The committee was confronted with these alternatives. We could either accept the bill as it came before us with these drastic reductions made by the Bureau of the Budget, and accentuated in the House, and by so doing slash the very heart out of the farm program, and reduce still further the farmer's already diminished and pathetic share of the national income, or we could proceed to exercise our own judgment in writing appropriations that we considered the very minimum under which the farm program could operate in the year 1941.

In my opinion the amount provided by the Senate amendments is the very minimum on which the farm program can operate. And certainly if any reductions are made in the total recommended by the committee to the Senate the farmer will be compelled to bear an unfair proportion of the reduction in the National Budget.

Having deducted the exchange of the $60,000,000 in the first deficiency bill, and the rearrangement of funds provided for in the pending bill, by transfer to loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the bill as reported to the Senate by your committee is $361,000,000 below the appropriations for the current year, or a reduction of approximately 25 percent. And I challenge anyone to show a reduction of 25 percent in any other general appropriation bill that has heretofore been or will hereafter be passed by the Congress to operate an active program which continues from year to year.

The committee has endeavored to be as careful as possible in this matter. Some of the members of the committee exercised considerable self-restraint, and did not even offer amendments providing for appropriations for purposes in which they have been interested for years—amendments, I might say, that have been approved by the Senate on more than one occasion.

There has been a great deal of criticism of the committee, particularly on the part of a large section of the metropolitan press, because the committee recommendations exceed the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget for this measure.

It is always pleasant to stay within the budgetary limitations on any bill, but it is not the duty of the Congress to be bound absolutely by the recommendations of that agency as to any specific item or any single bill.

The recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget are merely advisory to the Congress. They are vastly important, because the Federal activities have so increased of recent years that it is difficult for the Congress to make a detailed investigation of every item in every appropriation bill.

The recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget should be considered; but if the Budget proposes unfair and unequal reductions in the appropriation for any one of the departments or activities, particularly in the case of the farm bill, dealing as it does with the most underprivileged and hard-pressed group in the United States, then I do not think the Congress should feel that it is absolutely bound by the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget. Speaking for myself, I do not feel bound by such recommendations.

Mr. President, I think I am as familiar with the needs of the farmer in my immediate section as is any clerk in the Bureau of the Budget who formulates the recommendations which come to us. Other Senators have had vastly more experience and are infinitely better prepared to pass judgment on the matter of agricultural appropriations than is any individual who is connected with the Bureau of the Budget.

Senators have observed, from their study of the bills appropriating funds for the maintenance of other departments, that many of them have already been allowed increases by the Bureau of the Budget and by the Congress for the year 1941 when the bill for 1941 is compared with the appropriations for 1940. Not a single bill has even approximated the reductions which have been made in the agricultural appropriation bill. I might point out, for example, that the Bureau of the Budget, in its recommendations to the Congress for appropriations for its own maintenance, suggested an increase of 22 percent over the appropriations for the current year. Congress has approved that increase in the appropriation for the Bureau of the Budget. I cannot avoid expressing the hope that all the new clerks and employees who are hired with the 22-percent increase will not be put to work on still further cutting the estimates for agricultural appropriations. If the Bureau of the Budget had approached all the other appropriation bills with the same zeal and enthusiasm which it manifested in dealing with the farm bill, the Budget would have been balanced this year; and I should have had more respect for the recommendations of that Bureau had it dealt more equitably in distributing reductions among all the appropriation measures which come before the Congress.

Mr. President, I do not wish to appear unduly critical of the Bureau of the Budget. From my service on the Committee on Appropriations I realize the magnitude of the task of dealing with the thousands of items found in all the appropriation bills, but in the last analysis the amount of the appropriation which the Congress should make for any specific agency is the constitutional responsibility of the Congress. If we are to be absolutely bound by the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget, we might as well do away with our duty of appropriating and save much time and trouble.

The larger part of the increases made in the bill by the Senate committee is found in the amendment proposing an appropriation for parity payments to farmers and in the amendment appropriating funds to supplement permanent appropriations to be expended under the provisions of section 32 of the act of 1935. The parity-payment amendment contains a provision that no payment will be made with respect to any commodity in the event the average farm price of such commodity is more than 75 percent of the parity price, nor shall any payment exceed an amount which will be sufficient to bring the farmer 75 percent of parity.

The President, in his message transmitting the Budget, emphasized a fact which is known to every intelligent person in this country by stating that "agriculture is still not receiving its proper share of the national income." He explains the omission of estimates for parity payments in these words:

> I have not, however, included estimates for new appropriations for parity payments in 1941. I am influenced by the hope that next year's crops can be sold by their producers for at least 75 percent of parity. I do not suggest in any way the abandonment of the policy of parity payments heretofore adopted, and future events may call for some appropriation to this end. I note, however, in passing, that the Congress has failed to make any provision for the financing of these payments already made or obligated for 1938 and 1939 crops.

As I have heretofore stated, the 75-percent limitation contained in the committee amendment carries out the idea expressed by the President in his Budget message. It will not result in any outlay whatever from the National Treasury if the hoped-for increase in farm prices expressed by the President and shared by millions throughout the country becomes a reality. However, the economists and expert witnesses who appeared before the committee, including the Secretary of Agriculture and representatives of large farm organizations, all painted a gloomy picture of the probable effect of the European and Asiatic wars on the prices of farm commodities. Many persons anticipate increases in farm prices. The witnesses were all of the opinion that the experience of the agricultural interests in this war would not parallel the experience in 1917 and 1918, when farm prices skyrocketed.

It has been suggested that we might wait until next year and see what happens; and if farm prices are lower at that time Congress might then appropriate funds for parity payments. Those familiar with the farm program know that such a course would be disastrous to the farmer and absolutely destructive to the farm program. The farmer is entitled to know, before he prepares his land and plants his crop, just what he may expect in the way of parity and soil-conservation payments if he cooperates with the farm program. If no provision is made to give him some assurance that he will receive at least 75 percent of parity for crops on his allotted acreage, no one can blame him for failing to cooperate with the farm program and for seeking to overcome by increased production any decrease in the market price of his commodities which he may apprehend.

The appropriation for this year has failed to bring the producers of the basic commodities to 75 percent of parity. Taking the farm prices of the basic commodities and adding the parity payments, which have been made or will be made this year, the Department of Agriculture estimates that wheat will approach 68.6 percent of parity, corn will be 69.7 percent of parity, and cotton 65.8 percent of parity. Therefore the committee felt justified in putting the farmer on notice now that the amount recommended by the committee will be available to augment the decreased prices of farm commodities in the event the war should not bring about the increases in farm prices which the President suggested in his Budget message.

This appropriation is in the nature of an insurance fund to the farmer who cooperates with the farm program. It seeks to guarantee him at least 75 percent of what the Congress has said is a fair price; but the amount contained in the bill will not assure the farmer 75 percent of parity unless there is some increase in the market prices of the basic commodities.

Mr. President, I offer for the RECORD statements showing parity prices of the five basic commodities, as well as the farm prices of the same commodities on Friday, March 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAVEZ in the chair). Without objection, the statements will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The statements are as follows:

Parity prices Feb. 15, 1940

Cotton	cents per pound	15.87
Corn	cents per bushel	82.2
Wheat	do	113.2
Rice	cents per hundredweight	231.3
Tobacco:
Flue-cured	cents per pound	18.2
Dark	do	9.8
Burley	do	16.9
Cigar type 41	do	10.7
Other cigar filler and binder	do	14.2

Farm prices of certain commodities on Friday, Mar. 8, 1940

Cotton	cents per pound	10
Wheat	cents per bushel	86.7
Corn	do	55
Rice	cents per hundredweight	153.0
Tobacco:
Flue-cured	cents per pound	15.2
Burley	do	17.4
Dark	do	8.6
Pennsylvania	do	13.6
Other cigar, binder, and filler	do	14.7

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not wish to tire the Senate with a lengthy discussion of the general condition of the farmer, as compared with other groups in this country. We all know that he is not receiving his fair share of the national income. Slightly more than 25 percent of the people of this country are living upon farms and receiving approximately 7 percent of the total national income. In my opinion the day is not far distant when the Congress of the United States will be compelled to deal with this problem on a basis other than trying to afford the farmer only 75 percent of justice. Justice to the farmer is long past due. The Secretary of Agriculture stated before the committee that it would be necessary to increase the farm income at least another one and a half billion dollars in order to place the income of the farmers on a parity with the income of other groups. He submitted statistics showing that on January 15 of this year, when farm prices were slightly higher, due to speculative influences brought about by the war, farm income was 99 percent of the pre-war parity from 1909 to 1914, that period having been designated by the Congress as the parity period, while the average price of the things which the farmer buys, including interest and taxes, was 128 percent. This reduces the purchasing power of farm commodities, as compared with the prices of the goods the farmer buys, to only 77 percent. Bear in mind that the figure of 77 percent applies to all farm purchasing power. The purchasing power of the so-called basic commodities for which parity appropriations are made is much lower than the over-all average of 77 percent.

The Secretary very graphically illustrated the unequal position of the farmer as compared with other groups by producing two mail-order catalogs, such as are seen in practically every farm home in the United States. One of the catalogs was for the year 1913, in the middle of the so-called parity period, when our economy was supposed to be on an even keel. The other catalog was for the year 1940. The Secretary selected a few items which are essential to farm life, such as work shirts, overalls, common nails, spike-tooth harrows, and other articles which are absolutely essential to farm life, and showed how the increases in the cost of industrial products had far outstripped the prices of farm commodities. I commend to the attention of all Members of the Senate the tables which appear in the printed hearings of the Appropriations Committee, in which the Secretary not only shows the prices in dollars and cents of these articles but breaks them down in terms of the quantity of the commodity which it is necessary to exchange for such articles today as compared with the quantity of the commodity it would have been necessary to exchange in 1913.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD at this point the two tables which were submitted to the committee by the Secretary of Agriculture and which appear in the record of the subcommittee hearings on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the tables will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The tables are as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL. In terms of farm products, to use an illustration anyone can understand, in 1913 8.4 pounds of hogs would purchase an ordinary work shirt. In 1940 it requires 14 pounds of hogs to buy the same shirt.

In 1913 the farmer could have exchanged 4.7 pounds of raw cotton for a cotton work shirt. In 1940 it requires 7.2 pounds of raw cotton to purchase the same cotton shirt.

In 1913, when the farmer went to town to buy a pair of shoes for his wife, he was required to exchange only 2.4 bushels of wheat for the pair of shoes. In 1940 he is required to exchange 3.3 bushels of wheat for the same pair of shoes.

In the normal year 1913 39 pounds of beef could have been exchanged for 100 pounds of common eightpenny nails. Today the farmer is required to exchange 53 pounds of beef for the same nails.

In 1913 the corn farmer could exchange 63 bushels of corn for a two-row corn planter. Today he is compelled to exchange 124 bushels of corn for the same article, which is essentially the same as it was in 1913.

An ordinary 4-pound ax could have been purchased in 1913 for 7.9 pounds of cotton, as compared with 18.7 pounds of cotton today.

Eighteen pounds of beef would have bought the ax in 1913. It takes 27 pounds of beef today.

One and two-tenths bushels of wheat, or 1.9 bushels of corn, could have been exchanged for that ax in 1913. Today it takes 2.2 bushels of wheat or 3.6 bushels of corn to acquire the same ax.

We may use practically every essential of farm life, whether it is clothing, tools, or supplies, in this simple computation. Even a wayfaring man should be able to understand the tremendous handicap and disadvantage of the farmer in his efforts to eke out a bare existence for himself and family when we consider the unusual requirements in the exchange of his commodities for industrial products today, as compared with the quantity that was required in the exchange in 1913.

I have observed that practically all the prospective candidates for the Presidential nomination of both the major parties have come out and assured the farmer that they are in favor of parity for the farmer. A very active candidate from the State of New York the other day came forward with an eight-point program for the benefit and relief of the American farmer, and the first of those eight points was a promise to the farmer of full parity for that which he produced. But a day or two after this candidate from New York came out with the assurance that he stood for parity, I observed in the press a statement from the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives on the minority side, who is also from New York, stating that the farmer is already obtaining parity, and criticizing the Senate committee for recommending this small amount as a contribution toward parity payments. I certainly hope that the parity about which the candidate talks is not the kind of parity which suits and pleases the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee of the House from the same State.

The articles which I have enumerated—plows, shoes, shirts, and so forth—are the very minimum requirements for life and common decency on the farm or elsewhere. If we leave this field of essentials and go to nonessentials such as electric current, electrical appliances, the amount spent for amusements, going to moving-picture shows or to the corner drugstore, even greater disparity is displayed, to the disadvantage of the farmer. These things that other groups have come to consider as ordinary articles of life are considered luxuries by the farmer, and he is unable to obtain them with the low income now available to him.

Desirable legislation for other groups has, of course, contributed to this disparity in the purchasing power of farm commodities. We have passed here the wage and hour law, which placed a floor under wages and a ceiling over hours, for the benefit of industrial employees. Any increase in the cost of production of commodities has, of course, been reflected in the prices of the things the farmer buys. The farmer has very little wage, and very long hours. His purchasing power has been constantly shrinking as the compensation and standards of other groups have gone up. We have imposed Federal taxes on pay rolls to finance our fine social-security program. These taxes likewise are reflected in the retail prices of the products of industry. The farmer makes his contribution to these funds to pay old-age pensions and unemployment insurance every time he purchases one of the products essential to his existence; but in the nature of things he is barred from the security afforded by these laws.

We have the highest tariff rates the Nation has ever seen. Very little has been done to break down that wall, which costs the farmer millions of dollars each year. We have passed coal laws, attempting to guarantee the price of coal. The farmer may not use coal in his home. He is nevertheless required to contribute to increasing the price of coal, because all the products he buys must pay the tax to hold up coal prices at some stage in the manufacture of all industrial commodities.

We have passed the "hot oil" bill to put up the price of the oil and gasoline the farmer has to use in his tractors in his farming operations. We have helped all other groups with artificial devices but the farmer is farther from parity and equality of opportunity and income in this country than is any other group.

The farmer does not object to labor receiving good wages. He is in favor of labor legislation, and those with agricultural constituencies have helped enact labor laws. He is not against a fair return on capital investments.

He does demand, and his demand is just and fair, that he be accorded equal treatment with other groups who are beneficiaries of congressional action. The provisions of this bill are not adequate, but those of us who are concerned and disturbed about the farm problem were convinced we could go no farther in this bill. The Congress should enact, at this session, permanent legislation either fixing prices or levying taxes to give the farming population 100-percent equality. The Appropriations Committee cannot, of course, consider such legislation.

I am sure that any economist or any other person who has investigated the great disparity between farm income and the income of other groups will realize that the greatest and most pressing problem before the United States today is to attempt to assure the farmer a fair return on the products of his toil. Surely in common decency we cannot do less than approve this appropriation of $212,000,000, a reduction of $13,000,000 in the appropriation for parity for the present year, which is only designed to give to the farmer three-fourths of the slice of bread that is fully enjoyed by every other group in the country.

I regard it as unnecessary to elaborate on the other amendment which adds a substantial sum to the bill, this being the item of $85,000,000 to supplement the 40 percent of customs receipts which is set aside for the operation of the surplus program under section 32 of the act of 1935. The customs receipts amount to $100,000,000. Therefore, there will be available this year for the purposes defined in section 32 the sum of $185,000,000 as compared with the sum of $203,000,000 available for the same purpose during the current fiscal year. Senators will observe that the committee has made a substantial reduction in this item, as it has in the appropriation for parity payments.

The so-called stamp plan for the distribution of surplus commodities to those on relief, which has met with such great favor all over the country where tried, is financed from these funds, as is the distribution of surplus commodities to those who are on the relief rolls. It developed before the committee that in some States the only relief that was received by over 40 percent of those on the relief rolls was the surplus commodities that were purchased and distributed under the provisions of this appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the heading "Disposal of surplus commodities," to which the Senator has just been addressing his remarks, under section 32 of the act of 1935 the $100,000,000 is an automatic appropriation, is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not necessary to carry it in this bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is a permanent appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. That item is provided in section 32 of the act of 1935, which provides that 30 percent of all customs duties shall be set aside in a special fund for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes set out in this section on page 83.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Texas was the author of this provision, which has been of great benefit to the agricultural interests of the country, as well as to those who are on the relief rolls.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for that statement. The point I am making is that the language is so broad that it authorizes not only the surplus-stamp plan but all these other plans. Our action has served the double purpose of not only relieving distress, and substituting the distribution of surplus commodities for direct relief where States and counties cannot provide direct relief, but it has also tended to reduce the surplus commodities on the agricultural list. Therefore, this particular provision serves a double purpose. Is not that true?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Texas is correct. Because of the great demands on the Federal Government from the States and from the localities for these surplus commodities by those in dire straits and because of the great demand from something like 700 cities in the Nation for the so-called stamp plan, some of us have been apprehensive that this program might be diverted from a farm program to a relief program. It is dual in its nature; but the intent of section 32, and I hope the operation of its administration in the Department of Agriculture, is clearly to keep it a farm program; but it has been of tremendous benefit to those who are out of employment and those who are not able to purchase even the bare necessities of life.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Entirely agreeing with the statement the Senator has just made regarding the utility of the surplus-commodity program, still I want to inquire the relationship between the $85,000,000 and the Budget estimate.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Budget estimate was $72,600,000, as I recall. I will say to the Senator that it was slightly in excess of $72,000,000; so the recommendation of the committee, while substantially below the appropriation for the current year, is slightly in excess of the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget. All those who regard the Budget as being a sacred thing, upon which no Member of the House or Member of the Senate should at any time lay hands, may take notice of that fact.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the appropriation for this year was $113,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. The direct appropriation to supplement section 32 funds for the current year was $113,000,000.

Mr. HILL. The Budget Bureau recommended $72,000,000 for this year. The committee has reported $85,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senator from Georgia if it is not a fact—I believe it is—that the scope of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, through the extension of its work in different cities throughout the country, is constantly increasing.

Mr. RUSSELL. I might say that at the time the hearings were first held before the committee the so-called stamp plan had been put into effect in 50 cities of the country. It is anticipated that by the first of July that plan will have been extended to 100 cities, whereas there are bona fide applications on file, accompanied by the assurance that the communities will assume their part of the responsibility for the plan, from more than 700 cities. It will be impossible to reach any considerable portion of the cities that have applied for this plan, but Senators must bear in mind that cities which do not distribute the surplus commodities through the stamp plan will continue to receive the commodities for direct distribution to those who are on the relief rolls. That service is reaching into almost every one of the 3,000 counties of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator also state the information the committee had as to the cost of distribution by the State organizations as compared with the cost of distribution by the stamp plan?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. It developed before the committee that the cost of direct distribution of surplus commodities was extremely high. Not only is it necessary for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to pay the freight and transportation charges on commodities that are purchased—for example, if they buy a carload of butter in Wisconsin under this surplus-removal program and send it down to Georgia, there is a considerable item of transportation involved—but it required the expenditure of approximately $19,000,000 by the States and local subdivisions of government to get these commodities into the hands of those using and eating them after the freight shipments had been delivered within the States. The stamp program, of course, reduces or eliminates almost altogether the administrative cost of the distribution of these commodities.

Mr. McKELLAR. And, Mr. President, wherever it has been tried out it has been very popular; much more so than the other plan.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I understand it has met with very general favor.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LEE. How much would it take to make available the stamp plan to all the cities which are applying?

Mr. RUSSELL. I asked that question in the committee, and it is a very large sum. It would require the expenditure of $360,000,000, according to the figures presented to us, to take this method of distribution into every community of the United States that is applying for it.

Mr. LEE. If the Senator will allow me an observation, Oklahoma has this plan in one city, and now the two largest cities in the State, Tulsa and Oklahoma City, are asking for the plan, and every report I hear on it is a good one.

It seems to me that it is a systematic way of doing what we are undertaking through the distribution of the commodities directly in a less systematic and perhaps definitely more expensive way.

Did the Senator's committee decide that we could not afford to appropriate enough to put the plan into all the cities which are applying for it?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the matter of the amount of appropriations the committee could recommend with hope of final approval was taken into account. We considered that, confining it to a strictly agricultural program, and with the outlets of distribution only sufficient to handle the distribution of surpluses which might accumulate, the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations was a reasonable one. But if it is to be considered in the light of a relief program, it would undoubtedly not only dispose of the surplus, but would be a very effective weapon and machinery for dealing with the relief problem in the several communities of the country. However, I did not feel, particularly in view of the amount which has already been added to the bill, that the agricultural appropriation bill should continue to bear all the burden of this expenditure, whether it was in the nature of a measure for relief or in the nature of a method of surplus disposal. I think it might be well for the Congress to give consideration, when the relief bill is presented, to the matter of extending the program on a wider scale. I do not think the funds should be contained in the pending bill, because, viewing it strictly from the standpoint of the distribution of surplus commodities, while this amount of money is not sufficient to take care of the distribution of the surplus, or to relieve the ill effects of the surplus, it is an amount which is commensurate with the appropriations heretofore made as well as other demands on the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say, Mr. President, that the representatives of the Department expressed to me the thought that they were fully aware of the demand throughout the country, on the part of cities, for the extension of this service. In some States there has been some rivalry between cities. When one city has had the stamp plan inaugurated, some other city of the State has felt it should have it, and the officials of the Department appreciate the importance of having this Division of the Department of Agriculture, with the primary objective of the disposal of surplus commodities in view, go a little slow, and require the various communities to make some showing that there is really a desire for it, and that it will be of benefit. They are doing a splendid work, but the danger is that they might go too fast and cause it to become merely a relief proposition. They think that they should be allowed to proceed as they are now proceeding, and that if we intend to transform it into a relief proposition, we should take the matter up in a relief bill.

Mr. LEE. Did the Senator say that for the current year there was appropriated $113,000,000 for this service?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I perhaps did not make myself clear. The direct appropriation for the current year is $113,000,000, and the amount of funds allocated from customs receipts was approximately $90,000,000. The coming year, due to an increase in customs receipts, there will be approximately $102,000,000 from that source, as compared with approximately $90,000,000 for the current year, and a direct appropriation of $85,000,000, as compared with $113,000,000 for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNES. What is the number of cities in which this plan has been inaugurated?

Mr. RUSSELL. Slightly over 50.

Mr. LEE. But the appropriation is slightly under last year's appropriation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes, it is a reduction under the current appropriation. But it is large enough to permit considerable expansion of the surplus-removal program by the stamp-plan method.

Mr. LEE. I thought this matter was to be taken up and tried out for a while, and if it were found satisfactory, then it should be extended and expanded. I understood the Senator from South Carolina to say just now that it was his idea that we go slowly. We are certainly going slowly when we are going backward.

Mr. RUSSELL. We are not going backward.

Mr. BYRNES. No, we are not going backward.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is proposed to increase the cities having the stamp plan to over a hundred by the 1st of July.

Mr. LEE. But less money is appropriated for it.

Mr. RUSSELL. No, more money will be available for the stamp plan, because so much of the funds which have been heretofore used for direct purchase of surplus commodities and for the export of those commodities is to be used for that purpose. It is merely a difference in the method of handling it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are two fields of activity, as the Senator has well pointed out. One is the purchase of surplus commodities, and that is a direct benefit to the farmer. Then, on the other side, there is the stamp plan, which is a direct benefit to the relief worker. I wish to suggest that it is hardly fair to charge this entire appropriation to agriculture, because at least probably half of it, or a very substantial amount of it, should go in the relief bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Because the distribution goes to relieve distress. I think that should be taken into consideration in figuring the amount chargeable to agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. I had intended to refer to that later on in my remarks.

Mr. MILLER and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to ask the Senator a question in regard to the item on page 75 dealing with the prevention of soil erosion. I note that the committee has raised the amount appropriated by the House by $1,700,000. Will the Senator state what the understanding was, or what allocation is to be made of the $1,700,000 in that item?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from Arkansas will refer to the report of the Senate committee, page 4, he will find that all of that amount is earmarked for cooperation with soil-conservancy districts. The Senator is probably aware of the fact that in the beginning of this fiscal year there were in the neighborhood of 95,000,000 acres embraced within these soil-conservancy districts. Thirty-seven States have now passed laws providing for the formation of these local districts, and for cooperation with the Federal Government in this work, and it is expected that this year there will be over 200,000,000 acres within these soil-conservancy districts. The Bureau of the Budget reduced the appropriation for this activity under the appropriation for the current year by $1,500,000, in the teeth of this tremendous increase in the service, which had been at least impliedly promised the farmers if they would vote these soil-conservancy districts. The Senate committee restored the appropriation to the amount available for that purpose for the current year, with a slight increase, but nothing like enough to take care of all the soil-conservancy districts which have been formed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas had read the report, and I merely wanted to call the matter to the attention of the Senator from Georgia, to the end, not that I expect it, but that we might not have any diversion of the $1,700,000 from these two purposes for which the committee and the Congress intend to provide it, because of the importance of the soil-conservation district work.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am quite sure that the Soil Conservation Service would not break faith with the committee, because the funds are very clearly earmarked for that purpose, and I am sure they will be expended for that purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Was there a break-down of the $113,000,000, plus the $90,000,000, between the expenditures for farm commodities and for export subsidy payments?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is in the House hearing, and I have referred to it. I do not know whether it appears in the Senate committee hearings or not.

Mr. GEORGE. Was any question raised as to whether or not the Secretary of Agriculture proposed to continue to pay export subsidies on the sale of cotton to foreign buyers?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that that question was raised with specific reference to cotton. I did inquire as to what the plans of the Department were for the coming year with reference to export subsidies on all agricultural commodities. The witness from the Department testified that he did not anticipate any extensive export subsidy program next year, because of the fact that the principal exporters of farm commodities had in many instances left the American market and were acquiring from other sources all the agricultural commodities which had been heretofore exported.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask my colleague another question. So much of the sum as is saved from subsidy payments on cotton shipped to foreign spinners may be used under the stamp plan, may it not, under the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; it may be. The original section 32 and the amendment of last year contained a limitation of 25 percent of the total appropriation as the amount which could be devoted to any one commodity, or expended with respect to any one commodity. The Senate committee amendment this year removed that limitation insofar as the stamp plan is concerned.

Mr. GEORGE. So that all the money the Secretary wants to pay to the foreign purchasers of American cotton by way of subsidy could be paid under the stamp plan?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; not only the amount paid on cotton but the amount that has been paid on exports of wheat, lard, pecans, dates, and other agricultural commodities which have received export subsidies.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield; but I might state to the Senator that I desire to complete my statement at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sorry to interrupt the Senator, and my inquiry will take but a moment. From a reading of the bill it seems the committee did not recommend the appropriation of any funds whatever for the farm-tenancy program, except for the administrative expenses. Is that true?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course the Senator from Texas is aware of the fact that when the bill was dealt with in the other body all funds for the farm-tenancy program were eliminated. I stated at the outset of my remarks that later the committee would suggest an amendment in the nature of legislation, which the committee could not, under the rules, attach to the bill, but which would provide for $50,000,000 for loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to carry on the farm-tenancy project for the coming year.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what prompted the inquiry. I had heard some rumors about the R. F. C., but I saw nothing in the bill about the matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is familiar with the fact that the Senate rules would prevent the committee recommending legislation in the bill, and I had stated that the amendment would be proposed from the floor. I have already served notice of my intention to move to suspend the rule, if a point of order shall be made against the amendment.

I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin, who has been seeking recognition for some time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator's able statement, but I merely should like to point out at this point that while the committee is to be greatly commended for having provided the sum of $85,000,000 to augment the funds available under section 32 of the act of 1935, I would not want Senators to get the impression, from listening to the colloquy, that it means a continuation and an augmentation of the stamp plan on the same scale for the coming year; that is, after July 1, 1940, as obtained during the present year, and will be in force down to July 1, 1940. By July 1, 1940, there will be about 100 cities in the country which will have a stamp plan in operation, but even with the sum which the committee has provided it is my understanding that they cannot continue to add cities and communities in anything like the same proportion for the coming year in which they have been adding them and will add them for this year, down to July 1, 1940.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin is correct as to any large increase. As I stated to the Senator from Oklahoma, the sum recommended will prevent the elimination of any cities where the stamp plan has already been adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. It not only will prevent the elimination of those cities but it will enable the Department to extend the program a little further, though nothing like as far as they have applications now to extend it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to commend the committee for its action, but I expect to debate this question at some greater length in my own time, when I shall not be impinging upon the time of the Senator from Georgia. I intend to offer an amendment at the appropriate time to increase the sum recommended by the committee under section 32 of the act of 1935.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the committee will follow the same procedure with respect to rural electrification as it did with respect to farm tenancy. In other words, an amendment will be offered by the chairman of the committee providing for $40,000,000 to be loaned from the R. F. C. to the Rural Electrification Board for rural electrification loans.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Alabama is correct. When I was discussing the total amount contained in this measure in the beginning, I stated that, in all fairness, the Senate should know that these two amendments would be offered from the floor, and I believe the Senate should adopt them, because it is a proper and reasonable way to finance these activities.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Has any Senate committee, other than the Appropriations Committee, considered the matter?

Mr. RUSSELL. No. Not the change in the method of financing.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It would seem that the Committee on Agriculture should consider the bill, in addition to the Committee on Appropriations, so there might be more policy and planning contained in the measure. In other words, does the able Senator from Georgia feel that our policy toward agriculture has been fully covered in the measure?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think that we have any national program of legislation that is adequate to the needs of agriculture, or to give justice to agriculture. This bill does not undertake to give full justice to agriculture, I will say frankly. But the question raised by the Senator from Minnesota is one that has been brought out on the floor of the Senate numerous times in the past 20 or 25 years. I should prefer not to be diverted into a discussion of what would be the proper committee to handle the bill now. It has been represented several times since I have been a Member of this body that the Committee on Agriculture should handle the bill, and the Committee on Appropriations has with equal zeal sought to keep the bill within the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LUNDEEN. So far as I am concerned I will say that I have no objection to the Committee on Appropriations handling the bill, providing the planning and the policy pursued toward agriculture are fully considered and covered. It would seem to me that the members of the great Agriculture Committee would be more versed and better acquainted with the problems of the American farmer than the very able members of the Appropriations Committee. The Committee on Agriculture is brought into daily contact with all of the problems of farm and forest.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, in making appropriations the Committee on Appropriations can only use the vehicle which has been created by the Committee on Agriculture, through its recommendations. We have no power or authority to institute a Nation-wide farm program. We can make appropriations only pursuant to laws which have received the approval of the Committee on Agriculture, and which have been enacted by the Congress.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It would seem to me that both committees have, up to date, failed to solve this great farm crisis, and I suspect that neither of the two old parties have any real solution for these problems. Certainly both major parties have blundered on from bad to worse year after year. When will Congress, and this great Senate, listen to the well-considered and thoroughly planned farm program of the Farmer Labor Party—a program which was given to the Nation time after time by Congressman Lindbergh, founder of our party; Floyd Olson, Minnesota's great Governor; and others? I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, one further question before the Senator leaves that point.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any information before the committee dealing with the types of commodities whose surpluses have been relieved or partially relieved by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation? Is there any information showing how, upon the one hand, those surpluses may have been relieved by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, and yet the same commodity surpluses may have been increased through increased imports due to reduced tariffs upon the same commodities through reciprocal treaties?

Mr. RUSSELL. The hearings disclosed a list of all the articles which have been purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. It is my recollection, though I am not certain on the point, that that question was asked, and that no agricultural commodity dealt with in the reciprocal trade agreements had been declared surplus and purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. I will, however, confirm that statement from the committee hearings. I think that issue was raised.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then I have been misadvised, I will say to the Senator. I have been told that 22 farm commodities have suffered great reductions in export as the result of trade treaties, and thus surpluses in those cases have been increased, so that they need to be reduced in turn by payments out of this other branch of the Government.

Mr. RUSSELL. My recollection is that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] asked one of those who appeared before the committee a question along that line, and he elicited the reply that not a single commodity which was dealt with in the trade-agreements program—of course, the Senator realizes I do not wish to be drawn into a discussion of that program, and this is merely a factual statement—that not an article which had been dealt with in that program had been declared surplus and been distributed through the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. It is my recollection that only about 22 articles have been declared surplus during this year for the purposes of this program, so the large number involved in the Senator's statement appears unreasonable.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator's recollection is correct. I do not think that in this list there are 22 surplus products. The list appears on page 848 of the hearings.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I am asking for. May I see the testimony?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say, in connection with the Senator's answer, that I am not altogether certain that the answer was as stated by the Senator, but the question was asked, and perhaps the answer was substantially as the Senator had stated.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would prefer to refer to the hearings of the committee. I knew the question was asked by the able Senator from Nevada, who was a faithful and efficient member of the subcommittee, and it was my recollection that the witness replied that none of these commodities had been declared surplus.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I understand that beans are being considered in the proposed agreement with Chile.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was referring to trade agreements already actually entered into, not to proposed agreements. I do not think there was any evidence as to proposed agreements.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The agreement with Chile is pending, of course.

Mr. RUSSELL. If Senators will permit me about 5 minutes to conclude my statement, I shall then be glad to yield to any question Senators may desire to ask, not promising to answer all of them, but I will attempt to answer them.

As I have stated, the two chief increases that have been proposed by the committee are found in the parity amendments and in the appropriations under section 32 of the act of 1935. A number of smaller increases have been recommended by the Senate committee, most of which had the benefit of Budget estimates, but were refused by the House. There were some other smaller recommendations that were made, bringing up the total amount in the bill to an amount which, though larger than the Budget estimate, and larger than the House appropriation, represents an amount approximately 25 percent below the appropriation for the current year.

The prospect of increasing the debt limitation or of levying new taxes is no more pleasing to me than to anyone else. Both in the Appropriations Committee and on the floor I have consistently voted with those who seek to curtail expenditures in the majority of instances. I submit that when we approach the matter of reducing the National Budget, the reduction should be fairly and equitably prorated between the various activities of Government, and that the agricultural bill of all bills should not be singled out for reductions when we consider the state of the farmer's income as compared with that of practically every other group in this country.

Mr. President, there are thousands of farmers in the United States, many of them good farmers, who produce considerable quantities of the products in which they are engaged in cultivating, whose annual income is not equal to that of those who are employed upon the W. P. A. The farmers as a group are as patriotic as any other class of citizens, but they should not be expected to bear such a large part of the present economy reductions.

As I have pointed out, the reductions in this bill, as compared with the expenditures for the current year, are much greater than in any other bill which has come before Congress. I believe that the farmer would be willing to go forward in a general program of reduction. I know that I wish it were not necessary for the farmers to have to come to the Congress with their hats in their hand every year begging for some little appropriations to supplement their already meager income. Congress should enact some definite program which would avoid the necessity of the farmer having to gamble from year to year what the Congress is going to do in the matter of farm appropriations. Certainly anyone who is familiar with the situation in the homes and in the life on the farms of the United States will know that this group should not be singled out as the sole victims of an economy drive which leaves untouched the appropriations for the other activities of Government.

Some of the great metropolitan papers have been most severe in their editorial criticism of the committee for exceeding the Budget estimate in this bill. I am not at all sensitive to such criticism, Mr. President. My career has immunized me to any pains or grief from criticism of that sort. My sensitiveness has been done away with long ago. But I wish to say to those in the Senate or out of it, who must pass upon this measure, who are disturbed by these editorial criticisms, that none of these editorials which have come to my attention have been fair enough to point out that in the first instance the Bureau of the Budget imposed upon the farm bill a disproportionate part of the total overall deduction in the Budget for the coming year.

These editorials refer to the parity-payments appropriation as though it were some venal and meritricious effort to purchase the farm vote on the part of the Congress. They did not state that appropriations for parity were made in 1938 and 1939 and that as compared with the appropriations of the year 1939 the current bill appropriates less money for these payments; that the committee has reduced the appropriation instead of increasing it.

I wonder what some of these editorial writers would have said if someone had come along and made a 40-percent reduction in their compensation, as was made in this bill. They would have howled to heaven much louder than the cries we have heard from the farmers.

I might say further that almost without any exception those who are critical of this bill providing funds for loans to enable tenant farmers to become home owners, have urged that unlimited loans to foreign countries be made from the Federal Treasury. Some of those newspapers have demanded additional facilities to enable the air lines to secure weather reports. And yet they criticize this bill in which we have been compelled to double, yea treble, in the past few years the appropriations for the Weather Bureau in order to give the services they have demanded. Some of them have highly commended the so-called stamp plan for the distribution of agricultural surpluses to those on relief. They have demanded its expansion throughout the country. Yet they have not withheld their criticism of the appropriation which makes this plan possible.

As I have stated heretofore, the communities in which these newspapers are situated have derived from this bill the surplus commodities to those who are on relief. It is a refreshing thing that the Senate does not have any monopoly on inconsistency, Mr. President. I am sure that no Member of this body will be deterred from offering the half-handed justice to the farmers of America provided in this bill, by the comments of some editorial writer who probably would not know a Jimson weed from a cornstalk.

If the income of the American farmer is still further reduced, it will not be long till the effect will be felt by those in the cities as well as those on the farm. There can be no sustained prosperity in this country if the farmer has absolutely no purchasing power. Until the time that legislation can be enacted fixing the prices of farm commodities as we have artificially fixed the price of practically every other thing produced in this country, this bill is the best that the Committee on Appropriations could present to the Senate.

The bill is not going to be wholly pleasing to everyone. It is not pleasing to me, because it does not go as far as I should like it to go, but it does go as far as I think it is possible to go at this session of Congress. It is not going to please the farmer, because he has had promises of full parity for a great many years. It will not be pleasing to those who regard the Budget as sacred, and who say that no amendment should change the Budget estimates in the slightest degree.

It will not please those who are demanding that the stamp plan be extended to all the cities. But, Mr. President, it is a compromise, as most involved legislation is a compromise. It is an honest attempt on the part of the committee, which gave long and earnest consideration to the bill, to deal as fairly as possible with the most underprivileged group in the country, the lowest income group in the Nation, at the same time bearing in mind the condition of the National Treasury and the amount available for this purpose, and being fully conscious of the limitations on the committee in recommending legislation which I, for one, think should be adopted to fix the price of farm commodities in this country.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I feel that I should first yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. He kindly deferred a question a moment ago.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator what assurance he has that the money received under section 32 of the act of 1935 as import subsidies for the benefit of the farmers will not be used for paying subsidies on exportation of farm products.

Mr. RUSSELL. The evidence before the committee developed the fact that with respect to some export commodities, without regard to the amount of subsidy paid, it was not possible to find a buyer. England and France, who have purchased large quantities of such commodities in the past, have placed an absolute embargo on their importation from the United States into those countries. They are saving all their dollars for airplanes and war material and buying everything they can from the colonies or the nations adjacent to Germany and not affected by the naval blockade.

Mr. BILBO. Is it upon those statements that the Senator predicates his hope that we shall have more money to be used in the extension of the stamp-plan program?

Mr. RUSSELL. I stated that present indications, as developed before the committee, were that there would be more money for the surplus distribution program in this country than there had been even under the larger appropriation. However, the fact that such commodities cannot be exported will, of course, increase the need for their distribution in this country in a surplus-removal program at home.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator says that he has not available the amount of the fund which was utilized during the past year in paying export subsidies.

Mr. RUSSELL. Page 848 of the House hearings on the bill contains a full statement of the amount expended for purchase for distribution within the United States, as well as the amount paid for export subsidies on each and every commodity.

Mr. BILBO. On every commodity?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BILBO. The amount may not be more than 25 percent on any one commodity. I believe that is the law.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the limitation in the law.

Mr. BILBO. This is what I really wanted to ask the Senator: Would the Senator have any objection to an amendment prohibiting the use of any of this fund for export subsidies?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not feel authorized to accept such an amendment.

Mr. BILBO. Such an amendment would make safe the extension of the stamp-plan program. It is only guesswork as it is.

Mr. RUSSELL. My conclusion is predicated on world conditions today.

The Senator from Mississippi well knows—because I have heard him refer to the fact on the floor—that embargoes have been levied by some of the countries on agricultural exports from this Nation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask the Senator one final question. Let me say to him that I am not one of those who consider the Budget sacred; but this happens to be a year when, unless we cling with some degree of scruple to the Budget, we shall find ourselves colliding with the statutory debt limit in respect to the national debt. It is my understanding that the President's financial program—which means, of course, staying within the Budget—brings us within $61,000,000 of the statutory limit on the national debt, provided we also raise about $400,000,000 in additional taxes. Without arguing the merits of clinging to the Budget as it is, if clinging to the Budget brings us within $61,000,000 of the statutory limit upon the national debt, and if the bill exceeds the Budget limit by $201,000,000, do we not by passing the bill put ourselves in a position in which we must choose between increasing the statutory debt limit and raising additional taxes? What is the Senator's comment upon that situation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, of course, I could not give anything but my own views on that matter; and my opinion is probably no better than that of other Members of the Senate.

In the first place, I have predicated my support of these amendments on the fact that the reductions of the Bureau of the Budget in current appropriations were disproportionate. I have voted for all amendments to reduce other bills which have passed the Congress. The Senator from Michigan and other Senators who are disturbed by the very question which the Senator has just raised have already voted their approval of general appropriation bills carrying increased appropriations for other agencies of Government, and have not raised the question as to where the money was coming from until the farm bill was reached.

I have made the statement that any parity payment would not be expended until the fall of 1941. I made that statement, of course, to seek to elicit support for the amendment, and not because I am willing to accept the view that the farm program and the farm appropriations should be singled out as the only activity of government for which special taxes should be definitely levied and earmarked. I am willing to support additional taxes to go into the Treasury of the United States, but I am not willing to go before the farmers of the United States, the lowest income group in this country, and say, "We cannot appropriate funds for you because we could not pass a special tax to accompany your appropriation bill," when that procedure is not required in connection with any other appropriation bill. Who tells any agency or bureau which has an appropriation in the independent offices bill that, "You shall not be allowed this increase in your appropriation over the current appropriation until some special tax is levied"? Who tells the Department of the Interior, when a large project or a great expenditure involved in that bill is presented to the Congress, that no appropriation shall be made for the Department of the Interior until a specific and special tax is levied for the benefit of the project? The President has suggested that taxes should be levied to defray the unusual outlays made by the War Department and by the Navy Department for national defense; and I, for one, am willing to support such taxes. But until this year who had ever said to the War Department, to the Navy Department, or to any other department, "You need an appropriation of $1,000,000,000, which we are compelled to reduce to $500,000,000 because we have not levied any special taxes for your Department"?

So far as I am advised, that question has never been raised until this year in dealing with any bill taking money from the Treasury, except when we seek farm appropriations and parity payments to give the farmers a part of what we promised them, or what we gave them reason to believe they should have back in 1938, when the farm bill was enacted. This year it was mentioned in connection with unusual appropriations for national defense.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator has misconstrued the purpose of my inquiry. I am not seeking to quarrel with his thesis that the agricultural appropriation bill has had an undue share of economy thrust upon it by the Budget Bureau. I am not controverting that statement at all; and I am not arguing the merits of the appropriations to which the Senator refers. I am merely asking him about the fiscal situation. If we exceed the Budget by $201,000,000 do we not create a situation in which the appropriation is not worth anything unless we increase the revenue or increase the debt limit?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not think so, because the Senator from Michigan knows that nobody is talking seriously about raising any $460,000,000 in taxes at this session of Congress. I for one am willing to vote for them. I have always commended the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] because the Senator from Wisconsin, while a liberal spender, is also willing to impose taxes with which to finance expenditures. However, the Senator knows that $460,000,000 of additional taxes will not be levied. They have not yet been levied, and no bill is being seriously considered for that purpose. So, even if we slash the heart out of the farm appropriation and go back to the Budget estimate, which we have exceeded by some $200,000,000, we shall still violate the $45,000,000,000 debt limitation, and this bill will not be the cause of it at all. The $45,000,000,000 limitation will be touched because the Congress is not following the President's recommendation that we levy $460,000,000 of taxes; and the $460,000,000 of new revenue is inextricably interwoven with the Bureau's total over-all recommendation, to avoid violating the $45,000,000,000 debt limit. The Senator from Michigan is aware of that fact. If we were to appropriate exactly the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, even cutting the heart out of the farm program, if the Senator's figures and premise be correct, we should still violate the $45,000,000,000 debt limitation unless reductions were made in other bills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct, provided the increased taxes are not voted.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So far as I am concerned, I take the position that I shall vote for any increased taxes necessary to finance this year's appropriations rather than increase the debt limit.

Mr. RUSSELL. I share the same view.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am perfectly willing to proceed on that theory. However, the fact that no new tax bill has yet been presented does not relieve me from asking myself what happens when $201,000,000 is added to the appropriations for this year, bringing us——

Mr. RUSSELL. No; $201,000,000 is not added to the appropriations for this year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sorry; $201,000,000 above the Budget estimate, bringing us at least $150,000,000 across the line of the debt limit. All I am trying to find out is whether or not, if I vote for $201,000,000 beyond the Budget figure at this point, I have morally obligated myself to do one of two things: Either to vote to increase the debt limit or to vote for increased taxes in order to balance the account, unless we can find some other place to effect economies.

Mr. RUSSELL. Exactly. I wish to point out to the Senator from Michigan, who says he does not regard the Budget as being a sacred thing which cannot be touched by the hands of the Congress, that the Senator from Michigan has seen the independent offices bill pass the Congress; he has seen the Treasury-Post Office bill pass the Congress; and he has seen the emergency supplemental appropriation bill—which is really a bill augmenting the Army and Navy expenditures—pass the Congress, without raising the question of the Budget.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Were they not all under the Budget?

Mr. RUSSELL. Under the Budget, but not under the current year's appropriation. So the Senator is taking the Budget as his standard and following it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am taking the Budget as my standard for the calculation about which I am speaking.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; and the Senator has taken the Budget as his standard for the other bills to which I refer. The question was not raised when those bills passed, some of them containing appropriations for the departments which were substantially in excess of the appropriation for the current year. Those bills were passed without any question being raised in the Congress. The question of comparison with last year's appropriations is not raised until the agricultural appropriation bill comes along, and then the Senator says it is $201,000,000 over the Budget estimate. Of course, it is $201,000,000 over the Budget estimate, but it is substantially under the appropriations for the current year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We have to remake the Budget unless we are to follow it with some degree of consistency.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am undertaking to remake the Budget so far as this bill is concerned, and I have no apologies to make therefor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not ask the Senator to apologize.

Mr. RUSSELL. This bill was subjected to more drastic reductions by the Budget Bureau than any other bill. I do not think the reductions are justified.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will say to the Senator that I completely follow him in respect to the Surplus Commodity Corporation program, because I think it is very excellent.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does not the Senator also favor parity for the American farmer?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I favor parity for the American farmer in some such——

Mr. RUSSELL. How are we going to give it to him if we do not appropriate for it?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Just a moment, until I answer the question. I favor parity for the American farmer in some such natural process as in my judgment can be followed along the lines of some plan similar to the one which the able Senator from Oklahoma has been discussing, and which I have been discussing for many years.

Mr. RUSSELL. I commend the Senator's good judgment. He approves the plan of the Senator from Oklahoma. I supported that plan on the floor, by voice and vote, when it was defeated in the Senate. I am still for price fixing on the domestic allotment basis.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let us not get off the track. I do not want to be put in the position, and I do not think it is fair that the Senator should do it, that I am raising this question on the agricultural bill in some spirit that is unfriendly to the farming appropriations. I am simply trying to find out whether I do not obligate myself to vote either for new taxes or for an increased debt limit if this expenditure should go outside the President's financial program.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the figures contained in the Budget are correct, frankness demands that I should answer "yes," with the other exception mentioned by the Senator a few minutes ago—unless a reduction is made in other appropriation bills which have not yet come before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I should first yield to the Senator from Tennessee. Then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely want to say that there is another contingency in which we would not have to cut down this appropriation. I understand from very high authority that the receipts from the internal revenue department of the Government are about $100,000,000 ahead of last year; and that will help to some extent, at any rate, in the matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope that increase will be even more marked.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand it is $100,000,000 up to this good hour.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish further to say that my statement was not intended to embarrass the Senator from Michigan; but I must express the candid opinion that the Senator from Michigan has fallen into the ways of most of the metropolitan dailies and a great many Members of Congress who feel bound by the Budget estimates in specific bills and on specific items, or who use that as their standard, rather than taking the over-all Budget and then making a comparative analysis of the reductions which have been made in the current appropriations, as well as considering the desirability and the relative merits of the appropriations for the various activities of the Government.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, is it not true that there is still another alternative beyond the one suggested by the Senator from Tennessee and the two alternatives suggested by the Senator from Michigan?

The Senator from Michigan suggested that if we exceeded the Budget by this bill or other bills, it would be necessary either to raise the debt limit or to raise new money by taxation. The Senator from Tennessee very properly suggests that the revenue may run $100,000,000 above the estimates. I happened to see in a newspaper today that the returns in one district in my State indicate an increase above the estimates of $800,000 in that one district alone.

There is still another possibility for avoiding the two contingencies suggested by the Senator from Michigan. The Treasury Department has on hand a balance of $1,622,000,000, which is very much in excess of the balance which has customarily been carried on hand in the past, and which is being carried for no discernible or apparent reason except that some of the officials of the Treasury Department like to have a large sum of money on hand. Is it not possible, if Congress should pass this appropriation bill and other appropriation bills in amounts exceeding the Budget, that the Government might dip into that $1,622,000,000 of working balance for which the Treasury Department has no particular use?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think some funds might be derived from that source. I never have been able to see any reason for keeping such a large working balance.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee. Then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McKELLAR. One other thing, Mr. President: The military and naval bills are both yet to come before the Senate. While I am very strong for national defense, I think it would be a more just proposal to defer to some extent our military appropriations and preparations than to do away with these matters which have already been promised to the farmers.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, undoubtedly these items have as definite a national-defense value as building battleships or buying guns.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course. They ought to have precedence.

Mr. RUSSELL. How can we expect to maintain our institutions of government in this country when those who are by nature most devoted to their Government, and who are inherently conservative—those who live on the farms—are being forced to travel along at 68 percent of parity income for that which they produce through long hours of toil? The farmer helps finance but is not the beneficiary of the social-security program; he is not assisted by the wage-hour legislation; he is not protected by high tariffs, but pays for the protection of others. The farmers are subject to every hazard of insect and weather to which man can be subjected, without security or guaranty, yet we come here and take time in debating whether we will hand out this meager appropriation of $212,000,000, which will not even bring the farmer up to 75 percent of parity, unless there is some substantial increase in farm prices before the coming year.

Certainly, this is as important an item of national defense as the Congress could possibly enact into law, because it is touched with justice, in addition to being calculated to give those who live on the farm the feeling that they have a Nation worth defending, and to give them strong bodies and willing hands to undertake that defense in case of national emergency.

Mr. McKELLAR. And if we should have a war, we should be pressing them to bring forward the greatest production ever had.

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly.

I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in connection with what was suggested by the Senator from Missouri that we might consider the fact that we have a Treasury balance of $1,620,000,000, for the comfort of the Senator from Michigan, I call his attention to the further fact that during the closing days of the Republican administration it was deemed sufficient by the great Secretary of the Treasury before the greatest next to Alexander Hamilton—Secretary Ogden Mills—to have a Treasury balance on March 1, 1933, of $204,000,000, which went down on March 3 to $151,000,000. If it was safe to have a Treasury balance of only $150,000,000 during the Republican administration, the country might feel that it is reasonably safe when we have at this time a balance of $1,620,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I promised to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE]. Then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I was not going to speak on that particular point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think the Senator from South Carolina and all of us will agree that the amount of balance in the Treasury on March 3, 1933, was entirely too small.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We were lucky to have any.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we have to keep another fact in mind. Assuming that $1,620,000,000 is too much, I think it is probably safe to say that the balance ought to be kept within the neighborhood of a billion dollars, for the reason that when the Government is constantly selling its obligations, those with money to buy those obligations look to see whether, when they come due, the Government probably will be in a position to pay them; otherwise, they might have to renew them, and so forth. I think it does have some psychological effect upon the purchasers of Government obligations to know that the financial situation of the Treasury is sufficient to justify them in believing that the obligations will be met.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree. As a matter of fact, I have given a little study to the subject. I mentioned it only because it was mentioned by the Senator from Missouri. To be entirely fair, I should say that at this time there are demands upon the Treasury in excess of those which then existed—demands because of unemployment compensation. I have taken the trouble to find out the amount of money paid during this fiscal year for those purposes, which did not exist at that time. The total amount does not exceed $300,000,000. So, taking into consideration the demands for purposes which were not in contemplation at that time, $300,000,000 plus $150,000,000 is only $450,000,000.

We have $1,620,000,000. Of course, we could permit the balance to go down too low. No one would say that we ought to permit it to go down to the balance which was maintained in the closing days of the Hoover administration; but, at the same time, even having in mind the bank situation, I do not believe it is necessary to maintain a balance of $1,620,000,000. Certainly, when we discuss levying additional taxes, I do not think it necessary. If confronted with the alternative of levying $300,000,000 of additional taxes because of the program submitted by the President, or reducing the bank balance from $1,600,000,000 to $1,300,000,000, I certainly would have no hesitation. I think we could, without any fear of impairing the Government credit, administer the Government with $1,250,000,000, or $1,000,000,000, as suggested by the Senatory from Kentucky, and either one of those sums would enable us to get by without much of the worry the Senator from Michigan expressed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not for a moment contend that it is necessary to maintain a balance of $1,600,000,000. Of course, the balance fluctuates. It is not always $1,600,000,000. It goes up and down, although I do not think it has been less than $1,000,000,000 for any length of time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was $1,500,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LEE. What percentage of parity will the $212,000,000 provided in the bill pay at the present farm prices?

Mr. RUSSELL. As I stated, for the present year, including the parity payments, it averages around 68 percent of parity the farmer would receive under the $225,000,000 appropriation. Farm prices are a bit higher than they were when those figures were compiled; $212,000,000, if prices remain at the present level, should furnish the producers of the basic commodities somewhere in the neighborhood of 75 percent of parity.

Mr. LEE. There is a jump in the Senator's statement which I do not follow. Does the Senator mean that since the figures were made farm prices have risen enough to spread the difference between 63 percent of parity and 75 percent of parity?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not as to all commodities, but it is true as to wheat. Wheat is much higher than it was when the average farm prices were established. Cotton is somewhat higher. I do not like to express an opinion, but I will venture to state that unless there is some further increase in the prices of the five basic commodities, the farm prices, together with the parity payments which may be made under the appropriations made in the pending bill, will not bring the farmer 75 percent of parity.

Mr. LEE. I wanted that shown in the RECORD. I appreciate the Senator's frankness. I do not want the impression to go abroad to farmers that we are voting them 75 percent of parity when, as a matter of fact, we are depending on the hope that the farm prices will rise. Of course, we hope they will, but as of the day when we are taking up this appropriation bill, even if we appropriate all the Senator and his committee ask for, at best it will figure around 68 to, perhaps, 70 percent of parity. Is that about correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. I should think it would be slightly above 70.

Mr. LEE. With respect to wheat, but not as to cotton.

Mr. RUSSELL. With respect to wheat, and it will be, of course, a sheer estimate, but I think it will lack two or three points of being 75 percent as to cotton.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire also to have printed in the RECORD, following the table I have already offered as to parity prices and today's farm prices, a table which shows the effect of the Congress failing to make the parity appropriation for next year.

I call the attention of Senators from wheat States to the fact that if no appropriations are made for parity payments, the total payments from the Federal Government to the wheat farmers will be reduced from 19 cents a bushel to 9 cents a bushel, a reduction of about 50 percent. In the case of corn the payments will be reduced from a total of 15 cents a bushel to 10 cents a bushel, and in the case of cotton they will be reduced from 3.15 cents a pound to 1.6 cents a pound, if no appropriations are made for parity payments. In other words, as to cotton and wheat the farmers producing those commodities will find their Government payments reduced next year by 50 percent, cut in two, and in the case of corn the payments will be reduced approximately to two-thirds of the present rate of payment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the printing of the table presented by the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE E.—Rates of payments to Agricultural Adjustment Administration cooperators on normal yields of their acreage allotments

Commodity	1939			1940			1941 [1]
	Conservation	Parity	Total	Conservation	Parity	Total	Conservation	Total
Cotton, cents per pound	1.8	1.6	3.4	1.6	1.55	3.15	1.6	1.6
Corn, cents per bushel	9.0	6.0	15.0	10.0	5.00	15.00	10 0	10.0
Wheat, cents per bushel	17.0	11.0	28.0	9.0	10.00	19.00	9.0	9.0

[1] On basis of 1940 conservation payment rates. Rates for 1941 not yet determined. Assumes no parity payments in 1941.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I send to the desk a notice of my intention to move a suspension of the rules, which I desire to file at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the notice read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz, on page 80, line 8, insert the following:

"Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, persons who in 1938 and 1939 carried out farming operations as tenants or sharecroppers on cropland owned by the United States Government and who complied with the terms and conditions of the 1938 and 1939 agricultural conservation programs, formulated pursuant to sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, shall be entitled to apply for and receive payments, or to retain payments heretofore made, for their participation in said program to the same extent as other producers."

Mr. BYRNES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed. (For text of amendment referred to see the foregoing notice.)

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 18, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, our hearts go out to Thee in gratitude for all the strong, self-sacrificing men whom Thou hast raised up in every age to be the bearers of truth and justice. By the heavens above and the earth beneath, by the faith which has come down to us through the ages, by the eternal hope that shines brighter than the sun, by the love which neither time nor space can sever, by the still small voice, O bid us go forward to quit ourselves like men in the great battle of life. Let Thy kingdom come in all our hearts that we may mediate pure thoughts and speak words of wisdom. Charity thinketh no evil; a soft answer turneth away wrath; a good deed touches the hearts of men; behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. O stars of God, shine over the earth, over the seas, and over our broad land for a million years and a day, and ever lead us to the coveted goal of peace and brotherhood. Continue to bless our most honorable Speaker with growing health and strength; direct the Congress in the paths of wisdom and discretion. So guide our President and his advisers that our Nation may continue to be an inspiration in this old world for righteousness and justice; in the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 14, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 4868. An act to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) entitled "An act for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor; and Dr. E. A. Julien," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. WILEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5982) entitled "An act for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress and providing penalties for the violation thereof," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. VAN NUYS, and Mr. DANAHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8641) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. TAYLOR, WOODRUM of Virginia, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, SNYDER, O'NEAL, JOHNSON of West Virginia, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, and DITTER.

BELLE G. SCHMOYER

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 429

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Belle G. Schmoyer, widow of Harry A. Schmoyer, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional sum not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Harry A. Schmoyer.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BECKWORTH and Mr. HOUSTON asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial on the proposed St. Lawrence-Great Lakes treaty from the Gaelic American.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter I have received from the president of the American Medical Association which has reference to the campaign against venereal diseases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered Friday before the Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered before the Economic Club of New York by E. T. Weir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, for some weeks I have been making an investigation in reference to the Work Projects Administration, and I am very sorry to say that between now and July 1, 800,000 W. P. A. workers will be separated from their jobs unless Congress makes an additional appropriation. At the present time W. P. A. is carrying a load of 2,300,000 people, but the appropriation available between now and the end of the fiscal year will require a reduction to 1,500,000.

We are going to be confronted with another reduction unless the Budget estimate for the fiscal year 1941 is increased. Under that estimate only 1,350,000 people can be taken care of from July 1, 1940, to June 30, 1941. This situation, if the Congress appropriates the entire amount recommended by the Budget, means approximately 500,000 W. P. A. workers will be dropped between July 1, 1940, and November 1, 1940. In other words, almost 1,500,000 less people will be on the W. P. A. rolls in November 1940 than are on the rolls at the present time. No increase in private employment warrants such a drastic reduction. Over 700,000 employees were released by W. P. A. during July and August 1939, and the great majority of those are appealing for reinstatement, saying that it has been absolutely impossible for them to secure work with private industry. One-fourth of the unemployed, based upon the general figures of 1936 to 1939, were employed by W. P. A., but during the next fiscal year only 16 percent of the unemployed will be taken care of by W. P. A., based upon an average of 9,000,000 people out of employment. What information is coming to us now indicates that there has been a falling off in production, as a result of which unemployment has increased since the 1st of last December. Over 6,000,000 people above the number out of work in 1929 are now looking for employment, and, with a reduction in W. P. A. during the next fiscal year, this will be increased to well over 7,000,000 people. We are still hopeful that private employment will show an increase, but surely we cannot expect such a tremendous number of our citizens to be taken care of within so limited a time. Suppose that business does expand as we hope, should the war end there immediately would be a drop in exports. It seems to me, whether we like it or not, we must increase the appropriation for W. P. A. over and above that recommended by the Budget. The financial condition of the States, taking them as a whole, is such that they will not be able to grant direct relief to the unemployed. It is my opinion that we should provide funds to take care of a million more people than the Budget figure for the fiscal year 1941 will permlit; in other words, it is the duty of this Government to take care of not less than 2,350,000 people, which will be only 25 percent of the unemployed.

Reducing the number of those on W. P. A. will certainly be reflected in purchasing power. You cannot take away the income, no matter how small it might be, of so many of our citizens without consumption being greatly reduced. This undoubtedly will result in lowering production, followed by an increase in the number of unemployed.

The time to face this issue is now. While I have consistently supported the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, I refuse to remain silent knowing the situation which will confront us in the very near future.

The exact picture confronting the unemployed in this country should be brought out by the Appropriations Committee of the House when it considers relief legislation. Those hearings will start this week, but officials of the W. P. A. will not be called until a later date. A thorough investigation should be made by the Administrator so he can inform Congress of the exact situation that will confront his organization. He should present all the facts and show the critical situation that is going to develop.

No one regrets more than I do the necessity of calling this to the attention of the Congress and the country, because I was in hopes that there would be an increase in business that would not only reduce the number of unemployed in this country but would also enable the Government to reduce expenses.

There is an interesting discussion among columnists as to the number of unemployed in this country. This developed from an article written by Miss Dorothy Thompson, who makes a statement which we all would like to say is true—that only 2,000,000 people are unemployed in the United States at the present time. Miss Thompson's figures are in direct contrast to all figures that have been issued by the Government, as well as labor organizations. Considering the figures of all, with the exception of Miss Thompson's, 9,000,000 unemployed would seem to be more correct. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on three subjects: First, on the subject of distribution of the farmers' products; second, on J. Edgar Hoover; and third, on the subject of other people's money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short resolution adopted by the New York State Waterways Association on October 20, 1939, in reference to S. 2009.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

NAVY DEPARTMENT PROCUREMENT PROGRAM

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments appearing in the press with reference to the sale of aircraft to the allied governments by domestic manufacturers and its relation to the Navy aviation procurement program, I took the matter up with the Bureau of Aeronautics and am advised in a letter from the Secretary of the Navy that the sales to the allied governments have resulted in earlier deliveries to the Navy Department; that there is no evidence that the cost of aircraft to the Navy Department has been enhanced by the sale of such equipment to the allied governments, but there is evidence that the cost has been reduced.

In the case of one particular contract there was a reduction of approximately $575,000 to the Navy Department due to the manufacturer's reduction of the overhead ratio on account of the greatly enhanced volume of business due to export orders.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point by incorporating a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on this subject matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 18, 1940.

HON. CARL VINSON,
Chairman, House Naval Affairs Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. VINSON: In response to your inquiry, you are advised that the sale of aircraft to the Allied governments by domestic manufacturers has not interfered with the Navy Department's aircraft-procurement program. In at least one instance sales of this nature resulted in earlier deliveries to the Navy Department. The contractor had built up a large and efficient force and manufactured the Navy Department's order at a very high rate. Except for prior sales to the Allied governments, this large force would not have been assembled. Except for the availability of subsequent orders for the Allied governments, the contractor would have been constrained greatly to reduce this force and extend his work for the Navy Department over a greater period.

Another manufacturer, in connection with a sale to the Government of Finland, offered to effect great improvements in certain of the Department's airplanes if the Department would accept a stipulated extension of delivery dates under the contract. The extended date was such as to meet the Navy's replacement program, and the improvements offered were precisely those previously under discussion between the contractor and the Department. Had the sale to Finland not eventuated, the Navy Department could have accomplished the same betterment of its equipment only at the cost of greater over-all delay and of a greatly enhanced expenditure of funds.

I have no evidence that the cost of aircraft to the Navy Department has been enhanced by sales of such equipment to the Allied governments. There is evidence that the cost has been reduced. For instance, in the case of one particular contract, there was a reduction of approximately $575,000 in cost to the Department due to the manufacturer's reduction of the overhead ratio on account of his greatly enhanced volume of business due to export orders.

The enlarged volume of aircraft manufacture for export account is of inestimable value to our country economically and from the standpoint of national defense. Upon it is based, directly and indirectly, the employment of working forces enlarged by many thousands. These additional employees are, in a short period, trained in a useful trade, with benefit to themselves and the Nation throughout their industrial lives. Administrative, engineering, and supervisory forces are not only enlarged but are trained and experienced in the organization and control of their industry operating on a large scale not otherwise attainable. The enlarged volume of business furnishes the means and the incentive upon which the industry can base a more extensive development program. Enlarged plant facilities will assure the execution of any future program for our own country. The inefficiencies to be anticipated are minor and fleeting, the benefits may be expected to endure for at least a generation.

I trust the above information is fully responsive to your inquiry.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two different topics, in the first extension to include a statement by M. J. Robinson concerning a bill I have introduced in the House, and in the other extension to include a statement by George R. Hay, of Patagonia, Ariz.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article appearing this morning in the Washington Times-Herald by Willard Edwards entitled "Senator WAGNER Joins Demands for Drastic Shake-up in the N. L. R. B."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a quotation from the Washington Post and from the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. We cannot hear these requests. We cannot hear a word that is being said.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire that the gentleman from Montana should repeat his request?

Mr. RANKIN. I would like to know what it is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THORKELSON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short quotation from the Washington Post and from the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. What part of the Washington Post? It is not that venal voice of Babson on the utilities side?

Mr. THORKELSON. No; no utilities.

Mr. RANKIN. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a memorandum relative to the trade-treaty program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter received by me this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

THE CRAZY GAME OF BLIND-MAN'S BUFF

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, when a businessman makes money, the Federal Government takes a great part of it in taxes. When many large corporations or railroads lose money and go broke, they borrow from some Federal lending agency and keep going.

When a businessman goes broke, his assets are usually sold under the hammer for the benefit of his creditors. When a farmer goes broke trying to make money out of the soil, he is run off the farm and onto the city relief rolls. When a workingman in the city goes broke and is unable to find employment so that he can feed and house his family, he is kicked around like a vagrant—on the relief rolls today and off tomorrow.

But when the Federal Government goes broke, they just exchange I O U's with the money changers, and the crazy game of blind-man's buff goes on. Meanwhile the Nation totters on the brink of despair. Forty-four billion debt and running in the red ten thousand a minute—where will you get the money?

However, let no one say that this is a Nation with an uncharitable soul. Even if our own people are in want, we still have millions to give away and loan to those who suffer and are oppressed in other lands.

And our own 8,000,000 refugees are still waiting for the New Deal to make good its promises of 1932. Do it, and in the name of freedom save the Nation. [Applause.]

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the national debt, I have heard what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has had to say from day to day in regard to it. The gentleman wants the national debt paid. Naturally, we would all like to pay our individual debts as quickly as possible, and would like to pay the national debt owed by the Federal Government; but let us compare our national debt with that of other major countries of the world and consider what would happen if all debts were paid.

Recently I asked the Department of Commerce to furnish me the best information available regarding the national wealth of the major countries in the world and the debts owed by these countries. Germany was not included in the request, because Germany repudiated her debts a few years ago, and naturally her debts would be low and would not be a fair comparison. The information with reference to the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and Italy, which was furnished to me as the best information available for the years indicated, is as follows:

United States, $247,300,000,000 (1932), per capita, $1,950; United Kingdom, $87,815,000,000 (1928 at $4.86), per capita, $1,901; France, $43,120,000,000 (1931 at $0.039), per capita, $1,031

	Per capita		Percent
	Debt	Wealth	Debt to wealth	Debt to income
United States	$317	$1,950	16.2	57
United Kingdom	807	1,901	41.4	149
France	254	1,031	24.6	124
Italy	206	555	32.0	169

It will be noticed that the estimate of national wealth for the United Kingdom is based upon the year 1928, when times were good and the estimate of wealth was higher than subsequent years. Whereas the estimate for the United States is based upon 1932 figures and is much lower than it would be today. Notwithstanding this unfavorable comparison by using a good year for England and a bad year for the United States, it will be noticed that if our debt were as large in proportion to wealth as the debt of the United Kingdom, it would be $104,000,000,000 instead of $44,000,000,000 as it is today. In fact, if we were to use present-day estimates, the wealth would be over $3,000 per capita in the United States, and based upon a $3,000 per capita wealth in this country and a $2,000 per capita wealth in the United Kingdom, our national debt would be approximately $160,000,000,000 if it were as large in proportion as the national debt of the United Kingdom.

Using the same basis for computing what our national debt would be if as large, according to wealth per capita, as the national debt of France, our national debt would be over $70,000,000,000 instead of $44,000,000,000 as it is today. If the actual wealth as of 1940 is used instead of the low estimate for 1932, our national debt would be over $100,000,000,000, if it were as large in proportion as the debt of France.

If our debt were as large as the debt of Italy, it would be over $90,000,000,000 instead of $44,000,000,000 as it is now, and if we used present-day estimates for 1940 instead of 1932 our national debt would have to be $130,000,000,000 before it would be equal to the national debt of Italy.

I am inserting herewith a table which was furnished by the Department of Commerce from the source indicated:

National income per capita (1937, except as noted)

Country	National income	Population	Per capita income
United States	$71,853,000,000	129,257,000	$556
United Kingdom	25,709,000,000	47,400,000	542

Yugoslavia	1,017,000,000	15,400,000	66

Based on data in League of Nations' World Economic Survey 1938-39, p. 84.

It will be noticed that the United States has the largest per capita income of any country and the largest national income of any country. The per capita income in the United States is more than two and one-half times as much as it is in France, yet the French debt in proportion is twice as large as our national debt. Our per capita income is more than four times as much as it is in Italy, yet the national debt of Italy is from two to three times as much in proportion as our national debt. The following table is self-explanatory:

WHY NATIONAL DEBT NOT REDUCED IN TWENTIES

I have heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania make many statements relative to the necessity of reducing the national debt. My opinion is, if we were to attempt to substantially reduce the national debt now we would have more trouble than we are having over the increase of the national debt.

During the World War Woodrow Wilson and a Democratic Congress passed tax laws which would have raised sufficient taxes within a reasonable length of time after the war to have paid off the national debt in its entirety. In that way it was contemplated that those who profited most by reason of the war would have to pay the cost of the war through high income taxes and gross receipts taxes, but when the Republican administration came into power in 1921 an effort was made to drastically reduce taxes, and the following reasons were assigned:

First. That more than one generation should pay the cost of the war; that it was not fair to compel the cost of the war to be paid by the then generation in such a short period of time.

Second. That it was necessary to have a large national debt in order that banks, insurance companies, representatives of estates, and managers of trust funds may have a safe place to invest their surplus and reserve funds. The argument was made that every concern handling trust funds and surplus funds for the people should have a big backlog of Government bonds to rely upon in the event of trouble, and if the national debt should be paid off such a safe investment would not be obtainable.

Third. Because haste in reduction in the national debt would cause general deflation, and the ultimate extinguishment of the debt would cause a destruction of property values.

I have heretofore placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a table prepared by Government officials, which disclosed that our entire national debt would have been paid by June 30, 1927, if the Woodrow Wilson taxes had remained in effect. Sentiment was so strong in administration circles against paying the national debt that taxes were reduced instead. This allowed the war profiteers to keep their profits. Such reputable concerns as C. F. Childs & Co., specialists in Government securities, warned the people as follows:

> The national debt's ultimate extinguishment will cause virtually all price levels to drop and haste in reduction will tend to precipitate general deflation with its attendant disturbances.

In other words, the people were told we must keep a large national debt to prevent deflation, something that was very much feared since the people had just gone through the most deflationary period in history in 1920.

IF ALL DEBTS PAID NO MONEY

Suppose everybody paid their debts and suppose all States, counties, cities, and the Federal Government should pay their debts, we would not have any money or credit with which to transact the enormous business of our country. It is said that we should pay all of our debts. Our economy, as foolish as it may seem, is based on debt. Debts must be created in order to prevent the people from being reduced to barter and in order to have a sufficient circulating medium. In recent years, individuals and corporations have been paying their debts and the States, counties, and cities have not been increasing their debts, so it was necessary for the Federal Government to increase its debt, in order to have sufficient circulating medium in the form of credit with which to transact the business of the country.

Our total debts—public and private—are less today than they were in 1929.

WHICH PREFERRED—INCREASE NATIONAL DEBT OR DEFLATION, REPUDIATION, AND BANKRUPTCY

Since England, France, and Italy have experienced neither inflation nor repudiation by reason of their large national debts, I see no reason why we should get excited about our national debt when it is small compared to the national debts in these countries.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] desire deflation which will produce bankruptcy and repudiation of debts and cause the ownership of all tangible property to be further concentrated into the hands of a few people? Does he want the national debt increased, if necessary, or does he prefer that the President issue a part of the $3,000,000,000 he is authorized to issue under the present law?

THUMB-TWIRLING TWENTIES

If the Republican Party which went into power in 1921, under the leadership of Andrew W. Mellon, had paid the national debt as contemplated when the war taxes were put on—to make the war profiteers pay the cost of the war—our national debt today would be less than $20,000,000,000. We have been paying a billion dollars a year interest the past few years. Our present national debt includes not only the amount that should have been paid in the thumb-twirling twenties but also interest on it as well as the expenditures since 1933.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address that I delivered in Washington last Wednesday before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the American Legion magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THE VENAL VOICE OF BABSON

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, what Senator Borah once called "the venal voice of Babson" has again been raised in defense of the utilities monopolies.

You will see from the statement of Mr. Roger Babson in this morning's Washington Post that he is now acting as a utility propagandist. He is attacking the Securities and Exchange Commission for proposing to do its duty by enforcing the Holding Company Act.

From reading Mr. Babson's outburst, one would think that these beneficent holding companies are being outraged by a ruthless government, and that innocent investors are being made to suffer.

The truth of the business is that these vast monopolies which Mr. Babson is defending, and which claim investments of approximately $13,000,000,000 in the capital structures, really and truly have legitimate investments of something like $5,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000. The other $6,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000 is inflated valuations representing nothing in God's world but wind, water, and Power Trust rascality.

Yet these huge combinations are siphoning from the pockets of the consumers of electricity throughout the country overcharges to pay dividends on these inflated valuations that do not represent any real investments at all.

As I have pointed out before, the Ontario power system generates and distributes about one-twelfth as much electricity as is used in the whole United States. The Ontario system has an investment of only $400,000,000. On that basis, the investment in the United States should amount to about $4,800,000,000. Take that $4,800,000,000 from their alleged investments of $13,000,000,000, and it will leave $8,200,000,000 of inflated valuations.

Even if you add 50 percent in order to be entirely fair, it would still leave an investment of less than $7,000,000,000.

In order to pay dividends on these inflated values and to pay all the waste and extravagance and rake-offs of these useless holding companies and their high-salaried officials, electric light and power rates throughout the Nation are held so high as to wring from the ultimate consumers overcharges amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. Babson has now joined in this barrage of propaganda to try to prevent the Securities and Exchange Commission from breaking up these large, useless holding companies as the law provides, and stopping them from robbing the consumers of electric energy and plundering the innocent investors of the Nation.

If the Securities and Exchange Commission will do its duty now, it will result in reductions in light and power rates of hundreds of millions of dollars annually to the overburdened consumers throughout the country.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question; yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise the remarks I made a moment ago, and to include a table prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief letter from Secretary Hopkins to Senator TOBEY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of section 10 (b) (4) of the Railroad Retirement Act, approved June 24, 1937, and of section 12 (1) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Railroad Retirement Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, together with supplementary information covering the period July 1 to September 30, 1939.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1940.

THE CENSUS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, for the last 2 or 3 days we have been flaunted with outcries by Harry Hopkins, that autocratic bureaucrat in the Commerce Department, denouncing everybody about their advice to people about the questions to be asked in the forthcoming census, and he refers to every paragraph in the Census Act except the one which absolutely prohibits him from asking the questions to which he has referred. Section 4 of that act absolutely limits the census inquiry to population, agriculture, irrigation, drainage, distribution, unemployment, and to mines, and those questions that relate to personal affairs of people, such as their income and that sort of thing, are absolutely in violation of the law, and he knows it if he knows anything about his business.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar Day, and the Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar.

WAPATO SCHOOL DISTRICT, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3824) to provide funds for cooperation with Wapato School District No. 54, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING OFFICERS, UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, TO MAKE ARRESTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5409) to authorize certain officers of the United States Indian Service to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman object to my request?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object also.

TIDAL POWER, PASSAMAQUODDY BAY

The Clerk called Senate Joint Resolution 57, authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXPEDITIOUS SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I object.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are heard, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

SEQUOIA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1790, to authorize additions to the Sequoia National Forest, Calif., through exchanges under the act of March 20, 1922, or by proclamation or Executive order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6972, to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6314, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL MISSISSIPPI PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3759, to authorize a national Mississippi River parkway and matters relating thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL LAND POLICY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1675, to establish a national land policy, and to provide homesteads free of debt for actual farm families.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 290, referring the claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and report to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT FLORENCE STATION, CITY OF OMAHA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7069, authorizing Douglas County, Nebr., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence Station, in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LIMITATION OF PRESENT LAWS WITH RESPECT TO COUNSEL IN CERTAIN CASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7032, to limit the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF OF INDIANS WHO HAVE PAID TAXES ON ALLOTTED LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 952, for the relief of Indians who have paid taxes on allotted lands for which patents in fee were issued without application by or consent of the allottees and subsequently canceled, and for the reimbursement of public subdivisions by whom judgments for such claims have been paid.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to reimburse Indian allottees and Indian heirs of allottees for all taxes paid on so much of their allotted lands as, having been patented in fee prior to the expiration of the period of trust, without application by or consent of the patentee, has been or may be restored to trust status through cancelation of the fee patent by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That in any case in which a claim against a State, county, or political subdivision thereof for taxes collected upon such lands while the patent in fee was outstanding has been reduced to judgment, and such judgment remains unsatisfied, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon reimbursement by him to the Indian of the amount of taxes, including penalties and interest, paid thereon, and upon payment by the State, county, or political subdivision thereof of the costs of the suit, to cause such judgment to be released: Provided further, That in any case in which such a claim has been reduced to judgment and such judgment has been satisfied, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon proof of satisfaction thereof, to reimburse the State, county, or political subdivision thereof, for the actual amount of the judgment, exclusive of the costs of litigation.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

Any appropriations made pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING CROP-LOAN LAW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7878, to amend the crop-loan law relating to the lien imposed thereunder, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MILEAGE TABLES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 506, relating to mileage tables for the United States Army and other Government agencies, and to mileage allowance for persons employed in the offices of Members of House and Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DELAWARE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6535, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Delaware Tribe of Indians on account of permanent annuities under treaty provision.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

LEASING OF RESTRICTED ALLOTMENTS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8024, to provide for the leasing of restricted allotments of deceased Indians in certain circumstances, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That restricted allotments of deceased Indians may be leased by the superintendents of the reservation within which the lands are located (1) when the heirs or devisees of such decedents have not been determined and (2) when the heirs or devisees of the decedents have been determined, and such lands are not in use by any of the heirs and the heirs have not been able during a 3 months' period to agree upon a lease by reason of the number of the heirs, their absence from the reservation, or for other cause, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. The proceeds derived from such leases shall be credited to the estates or other accounts of the individuals entitled thereto in accordance with their respective interests.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO INVESTIGATE SUPPLY OF TIN

The Clerk called the next business, House Resolution 275.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to advise the House this resolution provides for an investigation of the supply of tin. I wrote to the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce asking them if they did not have the information that this resolution would provide. All three of them advised me that they do have the information and that it is kept up from week to week. Why therefore should we authorize an expenditure of $5,000 or $10,000 out of the contingent fund when the information is already available? As the investigation proposed would serve no useful purpose, I object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. PACE, and Mr. TABER objected.

INTEREST RATE ON LAND BANK AND COMMISSIONER LOANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8450, to make permanent the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and land bank commissioner loans.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Texas accept an amendment to make this 5 years instead of permanent?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have talked with several members of the committee and we have no objection to the amendment so far as I have been able to ascertain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the first sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (relating to the 3½-percent interest rate on Federal land bank loans), is amended by striking out "occurring within a period of 5 years, commencing July 1, 1935," and inserting in lieu thereof "occurring at any time after July 1, 1935."

(b) The fourth sentence of such paragraph "Twelfth" (relating to the 1940 time limit on payments made by the United States to land banks on account of such interest reduction) is repealed.

SEC. 2. The last paragraph of section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, as amended (relating to reduction in the interest rate on loans by the Land Bank Commissioner), is amended to read as follows:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the rate of interest on loans made under this section shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring on or after July 22, 1937."

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEAN: Page 1, line 8, after the word "occurring", strike out "at any time after" and insert "within a period of 10 years commencing."

Page 2, line 3, after the word "is", strike out the word "repealed" and insert "amended to read as follows: 'No payments shall be made to a bank with respect to any period after June 30, 1945.' "

Page 2, line 12, after "1937", insert a comma and the following: "and prior to July 1, 1945."

Page 1, after the period in line 9, insert "The provisions of such paragraph 'Twelfth' of section 12 of such act shall be applicable to interest on so-called purchase-money mortgages in the case of interest payable on installment dates occurring after the date of the enactment of this act."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to extend for 5 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and land bank commissioner loans."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURRAY: Page 2, line 10, after the word "exceed", strike the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "3½."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I have not talked to any other members of the committee about this particular amendment, but, personally, I have no objection to it, because I see no reason why the rate should not be lower.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to offer an amendment to H. R. 8450 similar to that just now offered by my colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. MURRAY. I shall, however, withhold it because my purpose is not authorship but results. I cheerfully defer to my distinguished colleague, a member of the Committee on Agriculture, who sees eye to eye with me in this matter.

The adoption of this amendment will accomplish the objectives which I have been working for and which are stated in my bill, H. R. 5285, introduced in the House on March 23, 1939, and which I discussed on the floor of the House the following day.

Two weeks ago, March 4, 1940, when the pending bill came before the House I pointed out the merits of the measure and suggested that by amendment it could be made to conform to my bill.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is adopted, the bill now before the House will accomplish the exact purposes with reference to interest rates which my bill proposes.

As I have stated on other occasions, this bill will not solve the problems of agriculture, but it will help to solve them. It will reduce the overhead expenses of farm operation. It will tend to preserve private ownership of farm property. I urge the adoption of the pending amendment and recommend the bill with this amendment for final passage.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to urge on the House that this very worth-while amendment by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] be adopted. This is one of the best ways I know in which this Congress can help the farmers of the Nation, and that is by giving them as low interest rates as possible. To many farmers the extra burden of high interest rates on farm mortgages has proven to be the straw that broke the camel's back.

The House today, by establishing for 5 years the rate of 3½ percent on commissioner loans, as well as the regular land-bank loans, can do much to help farmers stay on their farms and off of the relief rolls. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL-FOREST ADMINISTRATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7643, to facilitate and simplify national-forest administration.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the determination and collection of amounts due for sale of national-forest products and use of national-forest lands shall be made in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and shall be final and conclusive on all agencies of the Government: Provided, That permits, contracts, agreements, or other instruments requiring payments into the Treasury of the United States on account of sale of national-forest products, use of national-forest land, or other sources of national-forest revenue, including contributions by cooperators in connection with authorized activities of the Forest Service, shall be exempt from the provisions of section 20, title 41, United States Code, when the permit or other instrument does not require payment to the Government in excess of $300 in any one fiscal year.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "and", insert the following: "where the payment to the United States does not exceed the sum of $300 in any one fiscal year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF INDIANS OF CROW RESERVATION, MONT.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5477, for the benefit of the Indians of the Crow Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes", is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, That for the purpose of consolidating the restricted land holdings of any individual Crow allottee or the holdings of members of a Crow family, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to approve sales of allotted and inherited Indian lands to members of the Crow Tribe or the exchange of restricted Crow lands without regard to the acreage limitation hereinbefore set out. Any sales made hereunder shall be upon a petition signed by the adult allottee and by the adult heirs of any deceased allotee and the parent or natural guardian of a minor heir or, if there be no natural guardian, by the officer in charge of the Crow Agency, and if the purchaser of such lands be an Indian of the Crow Tribe, then any outstanding trust patent or patents covering the land so sold shall be canceled and a new patent of the force and legal effect of the trust patents as prescribed by the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 388), as amended, shall be issued to such Indian, which patent where applicable shall contain the mineral reservation provided in section 6 of this act. Should any Crow allottee wish to retain mineral rights now owned by him in land, sold hereunder to other members of the tribe, he may do so by making conveyance on a form of deed to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which form shall provide that its approval shall not operate to remove any trust or other conditions imposed upon said lands as expressed in the original trust or any other patent issued therefor."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "to read as follows", and insert "by inserting the following at the end of paragraph 1."
Page 2, line 5, after the word "sales", insert "or exchange."
Page 2, line 10, after the word "purchaser", insert "or recipient."
Page 2, line 16, after the word "Indian", insert "or Indians."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADOPTION OF MINORS BY INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8499, relating to adoption of minors by Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if someone will make a brief statement with reference to this bill? If not, I shall have to ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill relates to the adoption of minors. It provides that unless there shall have been adoption by judgment or decree of a State court, or by a judgment or decree of an Indian court, or by a written adoption approved by the superintendent of the agency having jurisdiction over the tribe of which either the adopted child or the adoptive parent is a member, and duly recorded in a book kept by the superintendent for that purpose, or by an adoption in accordance with a procedure established by the tribal authority, recognized by the Department of the Interior, of the tribe either of the adopted child or the adoptive parent, and duly recorded in a book kept by the tribe for that purpose, or unless such adoption shall have been recognized by the Department of the Interior prior to the effective date of this act or in the distribution of the estate of an Indian who has died prior to that date.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair to have a 6-month period, at least during which the Indians might be given notice, and then adoptions that have been made in accordance with the tribal custom may be put on record so that they may be protected?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It does not affect anything that has been done in the past. It only provides for future cases.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Even there the gentleman knows Indian families have taken children in and, to all intents and purposes, have adopted them; but unless there is some way for these adoptions to be put on record or to be recognized in some way, an injustice might be done.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That may be true. It would not affect those who have been adopted in the past, because it is provided that if it has been done by a decree of an Indian tribe it shall be valid. The main requirement is that in the future there must be a record kept. The bill provided that the tribe itself shall keep the record, but we finally decided to place this obligation on the Indian Department.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think the bill may be very good, but perhaps it would be desirable if there was a period of time established so that they might be put on record.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I really do not think that would be necessary, but I do not see why an amendment to that effect would be objectionable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice, until I can satisfy myself that no injustice will be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will look into this matter, I think he will decide it will be all right. The next time the bill comes up for consideration I trust he will not object.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I shall examine the bill and if it contains a 6-month notice clause or if the gentleman will agree to an amendment to that effect, I will make no objection to returning to the bill later today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6957, to extend to the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

There was no objection.

PRICES AND GRADES OF COTTONSEED AND COTTONSEED PRODUCTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8642, to establish and promote the use of standard methods of grading cottonseed, to provide for the collection and dissemination of information on prices and grades of cottonseed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state the reasons for his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any objection to the bill. The Consent Calendar is supposed to have on it only bills of minor importance. This bill establishes a policy which makes an indeterminate authorization of funds and personally I think it is too important a bill to be considered on the Consent Calendar. I do not think the Members have been fully advised with reference to what the bill is about and I hope the gentleman will try to get a rule to take it up so that we may have some time to discuss and consider it. Perhaps there will not be any objection.

I do not know enough about it to object to it. I do not believe I would object to it, because it looks all right to me, but I believe the Members of the House should know what they are doing when they adopt a bill of this nature, a bill which is as broad as this seems to be in the formulation of policy.

Mr. DOXEY. I appreciate the gentleman's statement, but am I to understand that from now on the gentleman will oppose this bill's being considered on the Consent Calendar? I have never discussed this matter with the gentleman and I do not want to take up his time now, but I should be very pleased to discuss the matter with him in private.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In all fairness to the gentleman, I may say I believe I would continue to object to the consideration of the bill on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. DOXEY. If that is the attitude of the gentleman, there is nothing further for me to say.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ADJUSTING BOUNDARIES OF THE CEDAR BREAKS NATIONAL MONUMENT AND THE DIXIE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8476, to adjust the boundaries of the Cedar Breaks National Monument and the Dixie National Forest, in the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

CITIZENSHIP RECOGNITION DAY

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 437, authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim Citizenship Recognition Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the last Sunday in May each year be, and hereby is, set aside as Citizenship Recognition Day and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting aside that day as a public occasion for the recognition of all who, through coming of age or naturalization, have reached the status of active citizenship.

That the educational authorities of States, counties, cities, and towns be urged to make plans for the proper observance of this day and for the full instruction of future citizens in their responsibilities and opportunities as active citizens of the United States and of the States and localities in which they reside.

With the following committee amendment:

Pages 1 and 2, strike out all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the third Sunday in May each year be, and hereby is, set aside as Citizenship Day, and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting aside that day as a public occasion for the recognition of all who, by coming of age or naturalization, have attained the status of citizenship.

"That the civil and educational authorities of States, counties, cities, and towns be, and they are hereby, urged to make plans for the proper observance of this day and for the full instruction of future citizens in their responsibilities and opportunities as citizens of the United States and of the States and localities in which they reside.

"Nothing herein shall be construed as changing, or attempting to change, the time or mode of any of the many altogether commendable observances of similar nature now being held from time to time or periodically. But, to the contrary, such practices are hereby praised and encouraged.

"SEC. 2. Either at the time of the rendition of the decree of naturalization or at such other time as the judge may fix, the judge or someone designated by him shall address the newly naturalized citizen upon the form and genius of our Government and the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship. It being the intent and purpose of this section to enlist the aid of the judiciary, in cooperation with civil and educational authorities, and patriotic organizations in a continuous effort to dignify and emphasize the significance of citizenship."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASING PUNISHMENT FOR ESPIONAGE AND OTHER CRIMES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1398, to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there anyone here from the Committee on the Judiciary who can explain this bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill introduced by Senator BARBOUR, of New Jersey, to increase some of the penalties for espionage of the more flagrant types. The committee, through the committee amendments, takes the position that the minima which he prescribes are probably too severe and that more discretion should be allowed the courts in fixing the penalties, but both the subcommittee and the full committee unanimously reported the bill favorably as to its maximum penalties, and, with the committee amendments, that will be the substance of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 1 of title I of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, is amended by (1) striking out the last semicolon in such section and all matter following such semicolon, and (2) inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

(b) Such act, as amended, is amended by inserting in title I thereof, immediately after section 1 of such title, a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 1A. Whoever, being entrusted with or having lawful possession or control of any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, note, or information, relating to the national defense, through gross negligence permits the same to be removed from its proper place of custody or delivered to anyone in violation of his trust, or to be lost, stolen, abstracted, or destroyed, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of title I of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than 20 years."

SEC. 3. Section 5 of title I of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Whoever harbors or conceals any person who he knows, or has reasonable grounds to believe or suspect, has committed, or is about to commit, an offense under this title shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 4. (a) Section 2 of title II of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

(b) Section 3 of title II of such act as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and shall, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 5. Section 1 of title III of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than 20 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 6. Section 1 of title IV of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than 20 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 7. Section 6 of title V of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 8. Sections 1, 2, and 3 of title VIII of such act, as amended, are amended by striking out of each of such sections "shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both", and inserting in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $5,000."

SEC. 9. Sections 2, 3, and 4 of title IX of such act, as amended, are amended by striking out of each of such sections "shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $2,000."

SEC. 10. Section 22 of title XI of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $1,000."

SEC. 11. Section 3 of title XII of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $5,000."

With the following committee amendments:

Pages 1 and 2, strike out lines 3, page 1, down to and including line 23 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 1 of title I of the act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917, as amended, is amended by striking out 'shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both,' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000.' "

Page 2, line 24, strike out "SEC. 3" and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 2."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASE IN THE WHITE HOUSE POLICE FORCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8540, to authorize an increase in the White House police force.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create the White House police force, and for other purposes", approved September 14, 1922 (42 Stat. 841, as amended; U. S. C., Supp. IV, title 3, sec. 62), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a) The White House police force shall consist of 1 captain with grade corresponding to that of captain (Metropolitan Police), 2 lieutenants with grade corresponding to that of lieutenant (Metropolitan Police), 4 sergeants with grade corresponding to that of sergeant (Metropolitan Police); and of such number of privates, with grade correspondong to that of private of the highest grade (Metropolitan Police), as may be necessary, but not exceeding 73 in number. Members of the White House police shall be appointed from the members of the Metropolitan Police force and the United States Park Police force from lists furnished by the officers in charge of such forces. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD FACILITIES, SEATTLE, WASH., AND CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8537, to provide for the enlargement of the Coast Guard depot at Seattle, Wash., and for the establishment of a Coast Guard servicing base at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise such additional land adjacent to the present Coast Guard depot at the foot of Twenty-seventh Avenue West, Seattle Wash., and to make such improvements thereon as may be necessary for the development of the depot to best meet the needs of the Coast Guard.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise such land and to make such improvements thereon as may be necessary for the establishment of a Coast Guard servicing base in such locality as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend at or in the vicinity of Chattanooga, Tenn.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after "acquire", insert a comma and the words "at a cost not to exceed $8,500."

Page 2, line 2, after "acquire", insert a comma and the words "at a cost not to exceed $5,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DIVISION OF THE WATERS OF THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1759, granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the author of the bill, inasmuch as the Yellowstone River is the headwaters of the Missouri River, which flows into South Dakota and is as important to it as to North Dakota, if the gentleman would object to an amendment inserting "South Dakota" after the words "North Dakota"?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman that this bill, which has already passed the Senate, simply gives to the States of North Dakota, Wyoming, and Montana the right to enter into a compact with reference to the division of the waters of the Yellowstone River before they flow into the Missouri River. I really do not see, therefore, where the Missouri River is involved in this matter. I imagine my good friend and colleague from South Dakota is concerned about the waters of the Missouri River. However, I may say that if the gentleman insists upon amending the bill by including the State of South Dakota, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved August 2, 1937 (50 Stat. 551), granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River be, and it is hereby, amended to provide that the consent of Congress is given to the State of North Dakota to negotiate and to enter into the compact or agreement therein authorized providing for an equitable division and an apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Yellowstone River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that the representative appointed by the President of the United States under the act of August 2, 1937, to participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and to report to Congress of proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into, shall continue to represent the United States and to report under this act: Provided, That such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislatures of each of the said States and by the Congress of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within or tributary to the Yellowstone National Park or shall establish any right or interest in or to any lands within the boundaries thereof.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 1, line 8, strike out "State" and insert "States", and in line 9, after "Dakota", insert "and South Dakota."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "Granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River."

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT FAYETTEVILLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7421, to provide for terms of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas at Fayetteville.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 71 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 144 (a), (b), (c), (d)), be, and they are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 71. (a) The State of Arkansas is divided into two districts, to be known as the western and eastern districts of Arkansas.

"(b) The western district shall include five divisions constituted as follows: The Texarkana division, which shall include the territory embraced on July 1, 1920, in the counties of Sevier, Howard, Little River, Pike, Hempstead, Miller, Lafayette, and Nevada; the El Dorado division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Columbia, Ouachita, Union, Ashley, Bradley, and Calhoun; the Fort Smith division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Polk, Scott, Logan, Sebastian, Franklin, Crawford, and Johnson; the Harrison division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Baxter, Boone, Carroll, Marion, Newton, and Searcy; and the Fayetteville division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Benton, Madison, and Washington.

"(c) Terms of the district court for the Texarkana division shall be held at Texarkana on the second Mondays in May and November; for the El Dorado division, at El Dorado on the third Mondays in April and October; for the Fort Smith division, at Fort Smith on the second Mondays in January and June; for the Harrison division, at Harrison on the first Mondays in April and October; and for the Fayetteville division at Fayetteville on the second Mondays in March and October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Fayetteville are furnished without expense to the United States: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the provision of quarters for the officers of said court and appropriate courtrooms for the holding of the sessions of said court in any new Federal building which may be constructed in Fayetteville.

"(d) The clerk of the court for the western district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Texarkana, Fort Smith, El Dorado, Harrison, and Fayetteville. Such offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after "(b)", strike out the comma and "(c) and (d)" and insert "and (c)."

Page 1, line 5, after "(b)", strike out the comma and the words "(c), (d)" and insert "and (c)."

Page 3, strike out subsection (d), after line 6, through line 11, inclusive.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFIRMATION OF TITLE TO CERTAIN RAILROAD GRANT LANDS IN KERN COUNTY, CALIF.

The Clerk read the next bill, H. R. 1788, to confirm title to certain railroad grant lands located in the county of Kern, State of California.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land hereinafter described, which was patented by the United States to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. on December 1, 1891, recorded at Kern County, Calif., January 15, 1892, and now held and occupied by the Summit Lime Co., a California corporation, as successor in interest of the said railroad company through successive conveyances, and as grantee in a quitclaim deed from the said company executed December 21, 1937, is hereby released, relinquished, and confirmed to the said Summit Lime Co., the said land, situate, lying, and being in the east half of section 21, township 32 south, range 33 east, Mount Diablo base line and meridian, county of Kern, State of California, described as follows:

Commencing at a point in the west line of the east half of said section 21, distant fifty feet northerly measured at right angles from the center line of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's eastward main tract; thence south eighty degrees twenty-three minutes east parallel with said center line a distance of one hundred and thirty-six and three-tenths feet to the point of beginning of the parcel of land to be described; thence continuing south eighty degrees twenty-three minutes east parallel with said center line a distance of two hundred and sixty feet; thence north nine degrees thirty-seven minutes east fifty feet to a point in the northerly line of the right-of-way of said railroad company; thence north eighty degrees twenty-three minutes west along said northerly line of right-of-way a distance of two hundred and sixty feet; thence south nine degrees thirty-seven minutes west a distance of fifty feet to a point of beginning, containing an area of two hundred and ninety-eight one thousandths of an acre, more or less.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, beginning with the word "which", strike out all following language up to and including the figure "1892" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "forming a part of the right-of-way granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. by the act of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat. 292)."

Page 3, line 23, after the word "less", insert the following: ": Provided, That such legalization, validation, and confirmation shall not in any instance diminish said right-of-way to a width less than 50 feet on either side of the center of the main track or tracks of said Southern Pacific Railroad Co. as now established and maintained: And provided further, That nothing herein contained is intended or shall be construed to legalize, validate, or confirm any rights, titles, or interests based upon or arising out of adverse possession, prescription, or abandonment, and not confirmed by conveyance heretofore made by Southern Pacific Railroad Co.: And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

Amend the title.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confirm title to certain railroad lands located in the county of Kern, State of California."

CONTINUATION OF GRAND JURIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8702, to amend the Judicial Code with respect to the continuation of grand juries to finish investigations.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fifth sentence of section 284 of the Judicial Code as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 421), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows: "A district judge may, upon request of the district attorney or of the grand jury or on his own motion, by order authorize any grand jury to continue to sit during the term succeeding the term at which such request is made, solely to finish investigations begun but not finished by such grand jury, but no grand jury shall be permitted to sit in all during more than 18 months: Provided, That, for good cause shown, the court may, at any time after the end of the term for which the grand jury was originally summoned, excuse any member of the grand jury and summon and impanel another person in his place."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CITIZENSHIP OF ALIENS WHO ENTERED THIS COUNTRY PRIOR TO FEBRUARY 5, 1917

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6381, for the admission to citizenship of aliens who came into this country prior to February 5, 1917.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice a statement in the report that a similar bill was introduced in the Seventy-sixth Congress and passed the House but was not taken up by the Senate. These bills do not die at the close of a session unless there is a sine die adjournment of the Congress, and I take it from the statement in the report that the bill referred to is still pending in the Senate. If this is so, I wonder if there is any need for considering this particular measure. It seems to me it would be somewhat redundant if we passed this bill and sent it over to the Senate. Possibly there is a clerical error and the report refers to the Seventy-fifth Congress, and in order that this may be clarified I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

UNLAWFUL ENTRY OF MILITARY RESERVATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2739, to amend section 45 of the United States Criminal Code to make it applicable to the outlying possessions of the United States.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will someone please explain this bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which was introduced at the instance of the War Department to eliminate a question as to the application of the criminal law relating to military reservations in the Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands. The bill simply and more clearly confers jurisdiction upon the courts in criminal cases affecting military reservations in these outlying possessions. The report is unanimous. There has been no objection or question raised.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 45 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1097), be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "Whoever" and before the word "shall", in the first line of said section, a comma, followed by the phrase, "within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, including the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION FOR EMPLOYEES PERFORMING HAZARDOUS WORK

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6767) to provide additional compensation for employees killed or injured while performing work of a hazardous nature incident to law-enforcement activity, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Looking at this bill, it would seem that some of these people would get a higher compensation than those who are actually wounded in battle and are totally disabled and also that widows of some of those who were killed in the war would receive.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, that may be true. I have not examined it, and neither did our committee, with a view to that comparison. The sole purpose of this bill, I say to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey, is, and the committee amendments so limit it, to give to anyone who is not a guard in the Treasury Department, or in similar service, who is actually engaged in law-enforcement activities of a hazardous nature, to be determined by the Compensation Commission, additional compensation when killed or wounded in the actual performance of that duty. It was thought by the committee that, inasmuch as these men are deprived, because of the hazardous nature of their occupation, of the privilege of life insurance and of health and casualty insurance, the bill as amended should pass. We believe these men ought to be encouraged in the performance of their hazardous functions by giving this evidence of our appreciation. The fine men composing the services covered may be called on at any minute to risk their lives to protect the people of the United States from desperadoes.

We believe this is a sound bill. We have given it careful consideration at three different times. It has been amended in accordance with the views of the committee. It has the endorsement of all of the departments affected, six of them, and has the approval of the United States Federal Employees' Compensation Commission. It has had the careful study of the Treasury and the Budget, and is approved by all. We believe that there will be no serious objection to the bill upon its merits, although there may be some merit in the contrast which the distinguished gentleman has drawn. If so, then that should be corrected by legislation increasing the benefits of those the distinguished gentleman thinks are underpaid.

Mr. KEAN. I would like to check up with the veterans' legislation and see how it does compare. I did not have time to do it very carefully. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? Does he not think that probably the better way to accomplish that purpose would be to amend those other acts, to bring them in conformity with this? In other words, this bill, it seems to me, with all due respects to the gentleman's opinion—and I do regard it highly—ought to stand on its own merits, and if these men who would be the beneficiaries of this bill are honestly entitled to this consideration, then the fact that probably we have not been as generous as we ought to be toward some other groups, ought not to defeat this bill. If this bill is passed over, I will say to the gentleman that there is practically no chance of its passage at this session of Congress.

Mr. KEAN. Oh, I do not understand that that can be so. We will have another Consent Calendar day in 2 weeks.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, but we have to get it through the Senate also. I would appreciate it if the gentleman would follow me in just this additional thought. If on examination of the act he wishes to examine he finds the disparity is so great that he cannot go along, it will be a comparatively easy matter, I think, to stop the passage of this bill in the Senate, where it can be stopped by one objection also. The committee is absolutely unanimous in favorably reporting this bill as proposed to be amended. I beg the gentleman to withdraw his request, and let this bill pass.

Mr. CELLER. And there was no objection from any source.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. 743, as amended; U. S. C., Supp. IV, title 5, sec. 756), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"In cases of disability heretofore or hereafter resulting from personal injury sustained by an employee while performing work of a hazardous nature incident to law-enforcement activity, if the employee was, at the time of the injury, regularly or specially assigned to law-enforcement activity, the United States shall pay to the disabled employee additional monthly compensation equal to one-half the monthly compensation to which the employee is otherwise entitled under this act, exclusive of the monthly sum authorized by this section, as amended, to be paid to disabled employees requiring the services of an attendant."

SEC. 2. Section 10 of such act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. 744, as amended; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 760), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"(M) In cases of death heretofore or hereafter resulting from personal injury sustained by an employee while performing work of a hazardous nature incident to law-enforcement activity, if the employee was, at the time of the injury, regularly or specially assigned to law-enforcement activity, the United States shall pay to the widow, widower, or children of such employee additional monthly compensation equal to one-half the monthly compensation otherwise payable to such widow, widower, or children under this act: Provided, That only so much of such additional compensation shall be paid in any case as will not increase the total monthly compensation paid to all beneficiaries of the deceased employee under this section to more than such employee's monthly pay: Provided further, That the compensation paid to any beneficiary other than such widow, widower, or children shall not be diminished by reason of the payment of such additional compensation."

SEC. 3. Section 14 of such act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. 746; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 764), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"In any case where, prior to the effective date of this paragraph, the liability of the United States for compensation under this act has been discharged by the payment of a lump sum pursuant to this section, and the disability or death for which such compensation was paid resulted from personal injury sustained by the employee concerned while performing work of a hazardous nature incident to law-enforcement activity, if such employee was, at the time of the injury, regularly or specially assigned to law-enforcement activity, the United States shall pay to such employee, or to the widow, widower, or children of such employee, as the case may be, additional compensation equal to one-half that portion of such lump sum, heretofore paid by the United States on account of such disability or death which is not attributable to any period elapsing prior to the date of the enactment of this paragraph. Such additional compensation shall be payable monthly or in the manner prescribed by this section in the discretion of the Commission."

SEC. 4. Section 40 of such act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. 750, as amended; U. S. C., Sup. IV, title 5, sec. 790), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"The term 'law-enforcement activity' means activity directed against criminals or persons suspected of crime, the safeguarding of prisoners of the United States, or the protection of property of the United States."

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act shall be construed to entitle any person to any additional compensation for any period elapsing prior to the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The term 'law-enforcement activity' shall mean the investigation or detection of violations of law, the investigation, detection, or apprehension, of criminals or persons suspected of crime, or the safeguarding of prisoners of the United States, but it shall not include the guarding of prisoners incarcerated in Federal penal institutions."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS TO MARMET, W. VA.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1750) authorizing the Secretary to convey to the town of Marmet, W. Va., two tracts of land to be used for municipal purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the town of Marmet, W. Va., subject to the reservations and conditions hereinafter contained, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to two tracts of land situated on the west side of the Great Kanawha River, at lock and dam No. 2, in Marmet, W. Va., and described as follows:

Tract No. 1. Beginning at an iron pin in the eastern right-of-way line of the old county road at the southwest corner of the A. J. Baker land (now the property of the United States); thence, from said point of beginning, and running along and with said eastern right-of-way line, north twenty-six degrees fifty-seven minutes west one hundred and seventy-one feet to an iron pin in said line; thence, continuing along and with said eastern right-of-way line, north twenty-three degrees fifty-eight minutes west two hundred and eleven and five one-hundredths feet, to an iron pin in said right-of-way line at southerly corner of the lands of Mary B. Meyers, and the northwest corner of the said A. J. Baker land; thence, along and with the Meyers-Baker boundary line, north sixty degrees thirty-two minutes east one hundred and twenty-one and eighteen one-hundredths feet, to an iron pin in the intersection of the westerly right-of-way boundary line of the Charleston Interurban Railroad Company; thence, and running with and along the said Charleston Interurban Railroad right-of-way line, south twenty-four degrees thirty-two minutes east two hundred and sixteen and thirty one-hundredths feet to an iron pin in said right-of-way line; thence, continuing with and along said right-of-way line, south twenty-seven degrees east one hundred and sixty-six and fifty-two one-hundredths feet, to the point of intersection with the boundary line between the said A. J. Baker land and the H. H. Smallridge and Industrial Center subdivision of the town of Marmet; thence, with and along said Baker-Industrial Center boundary line, south sixty-one degrees twenty-three minutes west one hundred and twenty-three and eighteen one-hundredths feet to the point of beginning, containing one and seven one-hundredths acres, more or less, and designated on United States Army Engineers' Plat, "Kanawha River Locks & Dam No. 2, Real Estate, U. S. Engineer Office, Huntington, W. Va., March 1935 (File No. 023-L2-11/1)", as "3-B".

Tract No. 2. Beginning at the point of intersection of the eastern boundary right-of-way line of the Charleston Interurban Railroad Company and the northerly boundary line of the A. J. Baker land, and on the right-of-way line between said Charleston Interurban Railroad and the West Virginia State Highway Route No. 61; then, from said point of beginning, and along and with said Baker line, north sixty degrees thirty-two minutes east four hundred and twenty and sixty-nine one-hundredths feet to a point in said Baker line; then south twenty-nine degrees twenty-eight minutes east three hundred and thirty-eight and ninety-one one-hundredths feet to the intersection of the north line of a fifty-foot street (now unnamed); thence, with the line of said street, south sixty-one degrees twenty-three minutes west three hundred and seventy-nine and thirty-nine one-hundredths feet to a point in said street line; thence north eighty-seven degrees thirteen minutes west seventy-four and eighty-eight one-hundredths feet, to a point in the right-of-way boundary line between the said Charleston Interurban Railroad Company and the West Virginia State Highway Route No. 61, said point being eighty-nine and seven one-hundredths feet distant, in a northwesterly direction, from the southerly boundary line of the A. J. Baker land; thence, running with and along said right-of-way boundary line, north twenty-seven degrees west seventy-seven and forty-five one-hundredths feet, to a point in said boundary line; then, continuing with said right-of-way boundary line, north twenty-four degrees thirty-two minutes west two hundred and sixteen and seventy-five one-hundredths feet to the point of beginning, containing three and three hundred seventeen one-thousandths acres, more or less, and being a part of the portion of the nine-acre Baker tract designated on said United States Army Engineers' Plat as "3-A." There is expressly excepted and reserved to the United States of America an easement of way for all right-of-way purposes whenever the same may be required, on, over, in, and across each of the two tracts hereinabove described, for the use and benefit of the United States of America, its successors and assigns, and there is likewise hereby excepted and reserved to the United States of America the perpetual easement and right to flood such part or parts of each of the two tracts of land hereinabove described as may be necessary so to do, from time to time, in the interests of navigation or flood control.

(b) The two tracts of land described in subsection (a) of this section are parts, and come out of, that certain lot, piece, and parcel of land containing nine and fifty-one one-hundredths acres, more or less, which was acquired by the United States through a condemnation proceeding had in the United States District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia, sitting in the city of Charleston, W. Va., on November 9, 1933, and styled United States of America against A. J. Baker and others, a copy of the final decree in such proceeding being recorded on November 18, 1933, in the office of the clerk of the county court of Kanawha County, W. Va., in Deed Book No. 390, at page 527 thereof, to which reference is made for a more complete description.

SEC. 2. The two tracts of land, the conveyance of which is authorized by the first section of this act, shall be held and used by the grantee for the purposes of a public park and recreational site and for similar and related municipal purposes. The deed of conveyance of such tracts of land to be executed by the Secretary of War shall contain appropriate provisions to provide for a reversion of such tracts of land to the United States in the event the grantee shall fail to use, or shall cease using, them for such purposes or shall alienate, or attempt to alienate, any part of them.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE, GUNS, PROJECTILES, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7074, to amend an act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, projectiles, and other condemned material in their respective departments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anyone here to explain this bill? If not, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

IMPROVEMENTS TO ARROWROCK DAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8498, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the payment of the costs of repairs, resurfacing, improvement, and enlargement of the Arrowrock Dam in 20 annual installments, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would say that this bill should have gone to the proper committee and the Secretary of the Interior should have approved such a bill as this.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS IN CIVIL SUITS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, HAWAII, AND ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8822, to extend original jurisdiction to district courts in civil suits between citizens of the District of Columbia, the Territories of Hawaii or Alaska, and any State or Territory.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (b) of paragraph (1), section 24, of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, sec. 41; Supp. IV, title 28, sec. 41), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(b) Is between citizens of different States, or citizens of the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, or Alaska, and any State or Territory."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOUNT RUSHMORE MEMORIAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8357, to amend the Mount Rushmore Memorial Act of 1938.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder whether the Committee on the Library can give us some information with respect to the necessity for this increase for the Mount Rushmore Memorial?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am not a member of the Committee on the Library, but I think I know what the bill contains.

At the present time the reserve consists of 1,500 acres. The bill proposes to increase it to 1,800 acres, or an increase of 300 acres. The additional 300 acres are in the national forest, so that it simply authorizes the transfer of 300 acres from the national forest to the Mount Rushmore Memorial Commission.

Mr. COSTELLO. There will be no cost in purchasing the land itself?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There will be no cost in purchasing the land. It is simply to be transferred from one Federal agency to another. It has been asked for by the Commission to protect the highways leading to the memorial. The Commission thought it desirable to have this land so that it could protect the land from going into private ownership, thereby making it possible to line the approach highways with buildings that might be objectionable.

Mr. COSTELLO. No additional maintenance cost is going to be incurred by the Government when this is added to the national park?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is no money involved at all. The Government owns the land, but it is subject to location. If it goes into the reserve, it will not be. It is only 300 acres and, as I understand, lies immediately along the approach highways.

Mr. COSTELLO. And there are no improvements contemplated, such as roads and highways?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No. The roads and highways have been built by the State highway commission. It is for the protection of those already in existence.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota whether they have completed the Rushmore Memorial?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman mean the figures?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No. They are working on them now, of course.

Mr. RICH. With the money that was appropriated it was understood that they would have sufficient to finish these figures. Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. My idea is the testimony of the sculptor and the testimony of the commission, printed in the Appropriations Committee hearings when the last appropriation was made. I was in South Dakota last week, but I did not get to the memorial, so I do not know just what the status is. Of course, they have an appropriation for this fiscal year. I was told they are working every day that the weather will permit them to work.

Mr. RICH. I was under the impression that this had been continued on for a great number of years, and it was supposed to cost $200,000. We have put about a million dollars into it at the present time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No. The Federal Government has appropriated a total of $750,000, and those who have seen it will agree that it is the greatest memorial in America. The gentleman will be prouder of the Federal expenditure there than of any other that has been made for work of that kind.

Mr. RICH. If you add this additional ground to this park, certainly there must be in the minds of somebody the idea of trying to develop that, so that it will cost more than the $750,000. Is that not the case?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think not. I am quite sure this 300 acres has absolutely no relation to any program of development other than to protect the money that has already been invested by protecting the approach highways. I am not in favor of enlarging the reserve unduly. It was my amendment when the Rushmore bill was passed, in 1938, that reduced the acreage from 4,000 requested to 1,500 acres. At the time we thought that was enough. It develops that the commission thinks 1,800 is needed to cover the approach roads.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make one observation with reference to this bill.

At the time the last appropriation was made for the Mount Rushmore National Park I was very much tempted to object but did not. As I understand the measure under discussion at the present time it does not call for any further appropriation on the part of the Government, but I do think that if the increased amount of land means that eventually they will come here for more money it might very well be looked into at the present time. I personally feel that we have appropriated all we should for carrying out the purposes of the Mount Rushmore National Park.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. If I were permitted to gamble in this House, and were a gambling man, I would wager that if this bill is passed they will be back here for more money next year.

Mr. TREADWAY. If they are I will object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 607, to amend section 40 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

APPEAL OF CERTAIN CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7737, to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section thereto, designated as section 266a, to provide for intervention by States and direct appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases involving the constitutional validity of the exercise of any power by the United States, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, and for other purposes.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Judicial Code, as amended, is further amended by adding a new section, immediately following section 266, and to be designated as section 266a, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 266a. (1) Whenever the constitutional validity of the exercise of any power by the United States, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, is drawn in question in any court of the United States, and the determination of such question involves any conflict with the exercise by any State of any governmental power of such State, or whenever the exercise of such Federal power would result in any impairment or abridgement of any governmental power asserted by or customarily exercised by any State, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, not already a party, the court having jurisdiction of the suit or proceeding shall certify such fact to the attorney general of such State. In any such case, the court shall permit such State to intervene and become a party for the presentation of evidence (if evidence is otherwise receivable in such suit or proceeding) and argument upon the question of the validity of the exercise of such power. In any such suit or proceeding such State, subject to the applicable provisions of law, shall have all the rights of a party and the liabilities of a party as to court costs to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts and law relating to the validity of the exercise of such powers.

"(2) In any such suit or proceeding in any court of the United States to which the United States or any officer or agency thereof, or any State or agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party, or in which any State has intervened and become a party, an appeal may be taken directly to the Supreme Court of the United States by the United States or any officer or agency thereof, or by any such State or any officer or agency thereof, upon application therefor or notice thereof within 30 days after the entry of a final or interlocutory judgment, decree, or order; and in the event that any such appeal is taken, any appeal or cross appeal by any party to the suit or proceeding taken previously, or taken within 60 days after notice of an appeal under this subsection, shall also be, or be treated as, taken directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. In the event that an appeal is taken under this subsection, the record shall be made up and the case docketed in the Supreme Court of the United States within 60 days from the time such appeal is allowed, under such rules as may be prescribed by the proper courts. Appeals under this subsection shall be heard by the Supreme Court of the United States at the earliest possible time and shall take precedence over all other matters not of a like character, except appeals prosecuted by the United States to review decisions wherein an act of Congress shall have been held unconstitutional. This section shall not be construed to be in derogation of any right of direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under existing provisions of law.

"(3) As used in this section, the term 'court of the United States' means any district court of the United States, any circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court of the United States; the term 'district court of the United States' includes the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia; and the term 'circuit court of appeals' includes the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia."

SEC. 2. This act shall apply to suits and proceedings brought or pending on the date of its enactment as well as to suits and proceedings thereafter instituted.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "constitutional."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "or", strike out the word "customarily."

Page 2, line 7, after the words "exercised by", strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such."

Pages 2 and 3, strike out all of subsection (2), from page 2, line 21, to page 3, line 24, inclusive.

Page 4, line 1, strike out subsection No. "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section thereto, designated as section 266a, to provide for intervention by States in certain cases involving the validity of the exercise of any power by the United States, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, and for other purposes."

And a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This is the last eligible bill on the calendar for call today.

ADOPTION OF MINORS BY INDIANS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 563, H. R. 8499, relating to adoption of minors by Indians. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] objected when the bill was originally called but I understand he has withdrawn his objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in probate matters under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, no person shall be recognized as an heir of a deceased Indian by virtue of an adoption—

(1) Unless such adoption shall have been—

(a) by a judgment or decree of a State court;

(b) by a judgment or decree of an Indian tribal court;

(c) by a written adoption approved by the superintendent of the agency having jurisdiction over the tribe of which either the adopted child or the adoptive parent is a member, and duly recorded in a book kept by the superintendent for that purpose; or

(d) by an adoption in accordance with a procedure established by the tribal authority, recognized by the Department of the Interior, of the tribe either of the adopted child or the adoptive parent, and duly recorded in a book kept by the tribe for that purpose.

(2) Unless such adoption shall have been recognized by the Department of the Interior prior to the effective date of this act or in the distribution of the estate of an Indian who has died prior to that date: Provided, That an adoption by Indian custom made prior to the effective date of this act may be made valid by recordation with the superintendent if both the adopted child and the adoptive parent are still living, if the adoptive parent requests that the adoption be recorded, and if the adopted child is an adult and makes such a request or the superintendent on behalf of a minor child approves of the recordation.

SEC. 2. This act shall not apply with respect to the distribution of the estates of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes or the Osage Tribe in the State of Oklahoma, or with respect to the distribution of estates of Indians who have died prior to the effective date of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall become effective 6 months after the date of its approval.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "tribal."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at that point in the RECORD immediately following the Murray amendment to the bill H. R. 8450.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RELIEF IN DROUGHT-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to a serious situation that is developing in this country on account of shortage of funds for W. P. A. which this Congress made available at the last session. There are many sections of the drought area where the people at this moment are hungry. I have reports from this area of North Dakota, from every mayor of every city, from county commissioners and everyone in authority. It is reported that there is a great amount of suffering in sight for the immediate future.

Permit me to say also that the Relief Administration in November certified 6,000 additional workers for North Dakota for a period of 2 months. They were kind enough to extend this for 3½ months, but everybody knows that in the Dust Bowl area there will be no income for the next several months, and I want to present to this Congress just what the situation is. It does not apply merely to North Dakota but applies likewise to all the Western States which have been affected by this drought scourge.

This House should remember that through poor crops and no crops and grasshoppers thousands of farmers have been foreclosed. Their personal property has been taken for feed loans, and, when dispossessed, they have found their way into the villages and cities with absolutely nothing to sustain them but their W. P. A. checks. The land which was taken from them, for the most part, is idle, their homes empty, but the unsatisfied desire of the mortgagee to oust them from possession has been satisfied. They are now unable to help themselves and, when cut off of the W. P. A. rolls, intense suffering will ensue. There is more than suffering involved in this situation, for, in my opinion, just as soon as enough people get hungry enough, they will finally take what they must have to sustain life, and this Congress should not press them that far. The argument made in this House by the ultraconservatives that this spending must stop has no force with hungry, defenseless people. It is altogether possible that a few people here and there could be starved and nothing would be done, but when it comes to starving thousands of good citizens in a land of plenty, I say to you it cannot be done. It is a good thing to balance the Budget, but balancing the Budget will not satisfy the hungry. Balancing the Budget means nothing to people who feel the pangs of hunger. There is just one question involved here: Is this Congress going to appropriate money to feed these people until they can get a job, or will the Congress tell these people to camp at the city dump ground and live on what they can dig out of the scrap heap while we here balance the Budget?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks telegrams and letters from these various civic organizations of the Northwest, a telegram from Governor Moses, and also a letter from the Federal Works Agency, indicating that Congress will have to make funds available if these people are to be recertified to the relief rolls.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY,
WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., March 15, 1940.

The Honorable USHER L. BURDICK,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BURDICK: This will acknowledge the receipt of your letters of March 12 and March 13, 1940, enclosing six telegrams and two other communications sent to you from North Dakota relative to the need for additional employment on projects of this administration in that State. The enclosures are returned herewith.

The volume of employment on Work Projects Administration projects that can be authorized in any State depends upon three primary factors: (1) The amount of funds made available by the Congress; (2) local economic conditions as reflected in the number of needy employable persons who are out of work; and (3) the supply of State or locally sponsored projects which are suitable for operation by this Administration.

In accordance with the funds available at the present time, it is necessary to plan the operation of the work program during the remaining months of the current fiscal year on a substantially reduced basis. Regarding local economic conditions in North Dakota as reflected in the number of needy employable persons, this need has been met in that State to a much greater extent than has been possible in other States.

In November 1939 consideration was given by this Administration to the conditions in North Dakota caused by drought. An additional emergency employment authorization for 5,000 persons was granted to North Dakota for the employment for a period of 60 days of farmers whose means of livelihood was impaired by drought conditions. It was only intended to provide cash income for 2 months' work to supplement the income of those persons who were affected by the drought emergency. Since approximately 3½ months have elapsed since the emergency employment was authorized, it has become necessary to withdraw the special authorization. This is represented by the number of persons who will be separated from employment on projects operated by this Administration in North Dakota during March.

This Administration will continue to make every effort to provide the maximum employment under the current Budget circumstances. However, it is regretted that a substantial reduction in employment will be necessary during the remaining months of this fiscal year.

Sincerely yours,

FRED R. RAUCH,
Assistant Commissioner.

BARNES COUNTY WELFARE BOARD,
Valley City, N. Dak., March 13, 1940.

Hon. USHER L. BURDICK,
Representative for North Dakota,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE REPRESENTATIVE: The recent blanket reduction in the number of certified workers effected by the Work Projects Administration resulted in the elimination of 58 families from the work-relief rolls here in Barnes County. The result of this action will work a great hardship and suffering among these men, women, and children. There is no private employment available at this time. It will be another 2 or 3 months before, in this rural county, there will be any great demand for farm laborers.

These families will immediately become direct-relief charges, and it is needless to mention that the funds in the county treasury are depleted to the extent that it will be impossible to provide adequately for their subsistence needs.

Further, it is the sincere opinion of this board, based on facts and previous experience, that at no time should a blanket reduction be made of certified W. P. A. clients, but instead, if a reduction must necessarily be effected, that it be made on a basis of relative need of the various families.

We trust that you may use your position and influence to help these distressed families and this financially embarrassed community by effecting a restoration of these unemployed families on the works program.

Respectfully yours,

GOTTFRIED J. KUHN,
Executive Secretary.

GOV. JOHN MOSES,
Bismarck, N. Dak.:

W. P. A. lay-off of 61 men in this county, effective immediately, will present grave problem for practically all of these families. There is no employment available. Very few persons will be able to get work with farmers in spring work, as most of farm work is done by their own labor. Nothing else in sight. County has hardly enough funds or resources to carry on the public-assistance programs and normal relief load. Discontinuing work relief program for these people now is indefensible. To lay off family workers without other employment available is cruel and heartless and must result in bitterness and disaster. Urge every effort be made to continue these people on W. P. A. at least until warm weather will lessen needs and perhaps give opportunity for livelihood otherwise.

DEAR SIR: I have been working on the historical data project, No. 2770, for the past 148 hours, and last Friday, the 8th, I received my 403, and the reason they gave was out of funds. Now, I would like to know if that can be possible, as they seem to have plenty money for war purposes but nothing for destitute families right here at home, and think something should be done to correct the situation.

There are 62 other W. P. A. employees in this county that got their 403, and they must have some kind of work at once, as they all have families to support, and some have small babies. I have 6 to support, and I cannot be without work very long.

BOWBELLS, N. DAK., March 14, 1940.

Hon. USHER L. BURDICK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: Suffering and distress is bound to follow the recent lay-off of W. P. A. workers in Burke County. Approximately 50 families will be affected, who will seek relief from local relief agencies, which are without funds to care for them.

In this part of the State this is the most critical period, since there is absolutely no employment available, being practically in the middle of winter, and local relief agencies cannot take care of the poor that are on their list now.

Please do all in your power to persuade Federal officials to reconsider their recent order in order that those laid off may continue at work until spring at least.

Thanking you most kindly, I remain,

L. L. GRIFFITH,
Chairman, Board of Burke County Commissioners.

BISMARCK, N. DAK., March 16, 1940.

USHER L. BURDICK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned mayors of major cities in North Dakota, following telephone and telegraphic conference, are united in requesting that you do everything possible to get W. P. A. to reconsider action in discharging approximately 2,500 employees, and to prevent further cuts in employment announced in the press by Howard O. Hunter, Deputy Administrator. County welfare boards and cities are not in a position to take care of these unemployed unless Federal funds are available. Cities will cooperate to fullest extent in sponsors' contributions. Please advise Mr. Churchill as to what can be done.

F. O. Olsen, mayor, Fargo; J. Earl McFadden, mayor, Grand Forks; V. E. Sandberg, mayor, Minot; N. O. Churchill, mayor, Bismarck; Perry V. Johnson, mayor, Jamestown; W. E. Hocking, mayor, Devils Lake; W. K. Johnson, mayor, Dickinson; C. G. Byerly, mayor, Mandan; C. E. Raffety, mayor, Williston; F. E. Henderson, mayor, Grafton; T. K. Williams, mayor, Wahpeton; Fred J. Frederickson, mayor, Valley City.

MINOT, N. DAK., March 16, 1940.

Representative USHER L. BURDICK,
Washington, D. C.:

Recommend N. Y. A. program as a most valuable Government agency. Anything you can do for this program will serve our youth in a very special way. Our N. Y. A. students are superior in college achievements.

C. C. SWAIN, President, S. T. C.

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN REGULATORY FUNCTIONS BY SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE AND CREATION OF POSITION OF SECOND ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. JONES of Texas submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1955) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by Chief Justice Stone, of the eighth circuit court of appeals, at the memorial services held for the late Justice Butler.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

COMPENSATION FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES SUFFERING INJURIES

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revert to the consideration of the bill (S. 607) to amend section 40 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, No. 583 on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the request?

Mr. HOBBS. That we revert to that for a moment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill about?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be glad to tell the gentleman. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] asked unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice while I was engaged in another matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this request comes a little late. The membership on our side has left the floor for the moment and I do not think we can permit that bill to be taken up at this time.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice because the committee report does not give the information that it should contain. It refers to a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which does not appear in the report, and it indicates that the Secretary of the Interior would like to have an amendment added to the bill so that the payments to be made in accordance with this act, if passed, would come from private funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the business in order for the day and any previous orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks before the adoption of the Murray amendment to the bill (H. R. 8450) to extend for 5 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and land bank commissioner loans, No. 559 on the Consent Calendar, considered and passed today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day and any other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE NEW DEAL AND THE NEGRO

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, at this time, when there is such widespread propaganda throughout the country designed to have the electorate see what the minority party calls the utter failure of the New Deal administration, I wish to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the House and the attention of the country to what this New Deal administration has done for America's largest and most neglected minority group—the Negro.

During the brief moments I shall speak to you I propose to deal specifically with seven governmental agencies which have been most active during this administration and which have touched the life of the Negro in a more or less effective way. These agencies are:

First. Work Projects Administration.
Second. Public Works Administration.
Third. Civilian Conservation Corps.
Fourth. Farm Credit Administration.
Fifth. Farm Security Administration.
Sixth. National Youth Administration.
Seventh. United States Housing Authority.

THE WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Created by an act of Congress "to provide work for needy persons on useful projects," the Work Projects Administration has attacked the problem of unemployment among Negroes with the result that during the calendar year of 1939 an average of 300,000 Negro workers were employed by W. P. A. These workers were engaged in a variety of occupations and earned some $15,000,000 in monthly wages. They constituted 14 percent of all W. P. A. workers.

The projects which employed Negroes and served the Negro public have been of many types. These include road building and construction; health, recreational, and social services; education, research, and cultural development.

Road building and construction

Last year it was reported that 39,000 Negro workers were employed on W. P. A. highway, road, and street construction projects in 11 Southern States during the peak periods of employment. These workers contributed to the building and improvement of 68,000 miles of streets and roadways which were completed throughout the Nation during an 8-month period.

Negro building-trades workers, skilled and unskilled, were employed in the construction of public-school buildings, gymnasiums, auditoriums, and other public structures. Outstanding examples of W. P. A. built buildings for Negro use include the $100,000 high school at Pine Bluff, Ark.; the $12,000 civic center at Goldsboro, N. C.; and the $100,000 memorial hospital in Tampa, Fla.

Health, recreational, and social services

Problems affecting the health of the Negro have been attacked through W. P. A. projects. Clinics, staffed by Negro physicians, dentists, nurses, and clerical workers, have been established in Negro communities in order to improve the health conditions of the people.

In many Southern cities the first public recreational facilities for colored people were made available by W. P. A. In other cities, as in New York, recreational facilities in the Negro community were considerably expanded by the W. P. A. through development of playgrounds, swimming pools, and parks. In Montgomery, Ala., there were seven recreational centers open to Negro children last summer. The program was extended to include small towns and rural areas. Local advisory councils were organized to sponsor the program in North Carolina. In one city the members of the advisory council and their friends made the bricks for the construction of a community house. Employment opportunities for Negro recreational workers were created by the program which also served to train inexperienced workers.

Needy school children have been served free hot lunches by W. P. A. workers. Busy mothers have, for periods during the day, been relieved of the care of babies and small children by nursery schools in many cities of the Nation. Sick and needy persons have been supplied with housekeepers during periods of illness.

Education, research, and cultural development

Half a million Negro men and women have been taught to read by teachers employed by W. P. A.'s adult-education project. Thousands of others have received instructions in skilled trades, in commercial work, and in the arts, as well as training in domestic service.

Upward of 10,000 Negro teachers and educational workers have received employment on the adult-education project. During the peak about 5,000 were employed and received annual earnings of between two and a half and three million dollars.

In Harlem the peak enrollment amounted to 8,000 persons who attended classes in 35 centers. These adult students were taught by 225 full-time teachers. Twenty-six trade and technical courses have been available at the New York Vocational High School. These courses include auto mechanics, electrical wiring, building maintenance, watch and clock repairing, upholstering, radio mehanics, cafeteria management and cooking, dressmaking, millinery, interior decoration, motors, and generators. A course in salesmanship trained many of the sales persons employed in retail merchandising in Harlem.

In North Carolina the Negro Adult Education Council is sponsoring the project's campaign to eliminate illiteracy among the 100,000 Negro adults who at the beginning of the drive were unable to read or write.

A variety of research projects have been sponsored by W. P. A. for the purpose of determining the economic and social status of the Negro. The largest of these projects was the survey of the urban Negro worker, directed by the Department of the Interior with W. P. A. funds amounting to nearly $500,000. This project, administered by a Negro staff, employed 1,800 "white collar" workers in 80 cities in 31 States and the District of Columbia. Over 330,000 persons were interviewed. The findings of this survey have been published in two volumes.

In Chicago, under sponsorship of the Institute for Juvenile Research, a W. P. A. project employing 125 persons conducted a survey of juvenile delinquency and crime on the South Side. Out of this study has come The Chicago Negro Community: Statistical Description. The scope of the project has been expanded to cover other phases of Negro life in that city. Studies of migrations and mobility among Negroes in Chicago and of associations and churches in the Negro community of Chicago are now being made by this project.

Other research projects delved into the Negro's past, investigated health and housing conditions, made studies of rural life, and evaluated his contributions to American culture.

Negroes were employed on all the arts projects. When the Federal theater project closed on August 31, 1939, some 800 Negro actors, directors, research workers, playwrights, technicians, and scenic workers were employed. Negro groups were responsible for some of the most widely publicized production of F. T. P., such as MacBeth, Run Lil' Chillun, Haiti, and The Swing Mikado. These and other Negro productions were witnessed by upward of 1,000,000 persons. Negro units of the project were organized in Hartford, Conn.; Boston, Mass.; New York City; Newark, N. J.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Seattle, Wash.; San Francisco and Los Angeles, Calif.

The Federal art project has been responsible for discovering and developing the talents of many Negro artists whose works have been widely exhibited. In New York a Negro art center has been established and has stimulated interest throughout the community in the potentialities and attainments of the Negro artist.

Likewise, the Federal music project has not only given employment to unemployed Negro musicians but has brought classical, popular, and folk music to thousands who never before were able to attend concerts. When Britain's King and Queen were guests in the White House last year they were entertained by a W. P. A. chorus of 28 Negro voices from North Carolina. They appeared on the program with America's most famous artists, Marian Anderson, Kate Smith, and Lawrence Tibbett.

It is estimated that 180 Negroes have been employed on the Federal writers project. These editorial workers have assembled material and prepared volumes on The History of the Negro in Virginia, Negroes in New York, The Florida Negro, and other phases of Negro life.

Negro personnel

Negro personnel has also been employed on the administrative staffs of the Federal, State, and district W. P. A. offices. During 1939 nearly 100 Negroes were employed in various capacities at W. P. A. headquarters in Washington. State administrations also made use of Negro workers as race relations officers.

These results in employment were facilitated by inclusion in the Emergency Relief Act of 1939 of clauses specifically forbidding "discrimination on account of race, religion, political affiliation, or membership in a labor organization."

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

The Public Works Administration was organized in 1933 for the purpose of combating unemployment in the building industry through grants for the construction of needed public buildings. Negroes have shared in this program through employment and through the development of projects for public use, including many that were primarily for the use of the Negro public. This construction work included the building of bridges, courthouses, power plants, and sewage-disposal plants for common use; community centers, schools, and hospitals, some of which were built in Negro areas and designed primarily for Negro use.

Schools

More than 115,000 Negro children in 24 States are attending schools built during the past few years with the aid of the Public Works Administration. This agency has aided in the construction of or improvements to 829 different buildings, resulting in the addition of 2,886 class rooms for Negro students.

Exclusive of the allotments of $3,502,678 to Howard University in Washington, the P. W. A. has made allotments for $34,218,749 worth of non-Federal school buildings for Negro institutions. In addition to the classrooms constructed with the aid of these grants, many advantages to the students have been afforded through the construction of auditoriums, gymnasiums, libraries, assembly halls, recreation and dining halls, dormitories, and other housing facilities.

Of the $34,218,749, approximately $7,526,493 have been spent on construction of buildings at Negro colleges. Allotments have gone to 13 of the 18 publicly controlled 4-year colleges, 4 of the 6 publicly controlled teachers' colleges, all of the State normal schools, and 3 of the 7 publicly controlled junior colleges.

The magnificent million-dollar Founders Library at Howard University was built with P. W. A. funds. This building, which dominates the university campus, was designed by Negro architects, and its construction supervised by a Negro engineer. Its capacity of 200,000 volumes may easily be expanded to half a million and will be adequate for the needs of the university for many years to come.

Hospitals

At least 7,242 new beds have been made available for Negro patients in hospitals throughout the country through the aid of grants and loans by P. W. A. Nearly half of these beds, 3,486, are for the insane; 2,723 are in general hospitals, and 1,033 in tuberculosis sanitaria and other hospitals. The facilities range from 7-ward buildings accommodating 1,170 patients at the North Carolina State Hospital for the Insane at Goldsboro to a 5-bed ward at the Municipal General Hospital at Quitman, Ga. These hospitals are distributed through 17 southern and border States.

One of the largest and most modern hospitals erected for Negro patients during the past 5 years with the aid of P. W. A. funds is the Homer G. Phillips Municipal Hospital in St. Louis, Mo. Erected at a cost of more than $3,000,000, this hospital has a capacity of 685 beds. It is composed of five buildings including a nurses' home and training school. The nurses' home provides dormitories for 146 nurses and 24 internes.

Other projects include the $100,000 Norfolk Community Hospital, Norfolk, Va., and the $700,000 tuberculosis annex to Freedmen's Hospital in Washington.

Speaking at the dedication of the Homer G. Phillips Hospital in St. Louis in 1933, Dr. Numa P. G. Adams, dean of the Medical College of Howard University, asserted that for the whole population there was 1 hospital for every 18,737 persons; for the Negro, 1 for every 107,127 persons. For the white population there was 1 hospital bed for every 110 persons; for the Negro, 1 for every 999. There was an average of 6.7 hospital beds available to each white physician, and only 1.1 for each Negro physician.

Recreation and community projects

Recreational and community facilities for Negroes have been augmented in many cities by grants and loans from P. W. A. In Lexington, Ky., the P. W. A. granted $18,000 for the construction of a municipal swimming pool in Douglas Park. The pool, measuring 55 feet by 105 feet, has a capacity of approximately 200,000 gallons and will accommodate 350 persons. There is a separate wading pool for small children. Provisions have been made for dressing rooms and check rooms. The total cost of the project will be $40,000.

Employment

Negro building-trades workers have benefited directly through the nondiscrimination labor policy covering the development of Federal projects. This policy asserts that "there shall be no discrimination because of race, color, creed, or political affiliations in the employment of persons on the project."

In addition to building-trades workers, P. W. A. has employed 14 Negro architects and 8 engineers. In many instances Negro workers were employed in the development of P. W. A. non-Federal projects. Employment was also stimulated in the production, fabrication, and transportation of building materials, all industries in which thousands of Negroes are customarily employed.

Other employees of the P. W. A. included Negroes on the administrative staff, two Negro lawyers, research assistants, secretaries, clerical workers, and laborers.

THE CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Young Negro men throughout the country have participated in the rehabilitation and conservation program of the Civilian Conservation Corps. The program has afforded them employment, aided their families, many of whom have been on relief, schooled them in new trades and occupations, and contributed to the conservation of the Nation's natural resources.

The extent of this program among young Negro men is indicated by the following facts and figures. Approximately—

Two hundred and fifty thousand colored youths have served in the Corps since the Civilian Conservation Corps was initiated in 1933. Regular habits of work, training, discipline, fresh air, three well-prepared and ample meals a day have combined to improve the health and morale of all enrollees.

Thirty thousand young colored men and war veterans, one-tenth of the total C. C. C. enrollment, are actively participating in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Seven hundred thousand dollars a month for the past year has been allotted by colored C. C. C. boys to their parents and dependents back home.

Ninety thousand books have been supplied through the War Department and the Office of Education for colored camp libraries.

Twelve thousand colored C. C. C. enrollees in the past 5 years have completed courses in first aid through cooperation of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Red Cross.

Eleven thousand colored enrollees have been taught to read and write. More than 90 percent of the colored C. C. C. enrollees regularly attend C. C. C. classes from elementary to college level which are conducted in each camp's education building, which is well equipped and especially constructed for vocational instruction. Howard University, Wilberforce University, Tuskegee Institute, Hampton Institute, Florida Agriculture and Mechanics College at Tallahassee, Tennessee Agriculture and Industrial State College, and a number of other Negro colleges have granted scholarships and fellowships to C. C. C. enrollees.

Two thousand colored project assistants, leaders, and assistant leaders are on duty at C. C. C. camps.

Six hundred colored cooks are steadily employed in C. C. C. mess halls.

Nine hundred classes in Negro history were conducted in the camps during the past 5 years.

Eight hundred colored boys have gained business training in the capacity of store clerks and managers of the post exchanges in C. C. C. camps.

Four hundred colored typists are assigned to C. C. C. headquarters of the commanding officers, camp superintendents, and educational advisers.

One hundred and forty-seven colored college graduates are serving C. C. C. camps as educational advisers.

One thousand two hundred part-time, experienced teachers are actively engaged in instruction of these colored enrollees at C. C. C. camps.

Twenty-five colored medical Reserve officers and chaplains of the United States Reserve Corps are on active duty in the Nation's C. C. C. camps.

One hundred and six colored C. C. C. camps are located in forests, parks, recreational areas, fish and game reservations, and on drainage and mosquito-control projects.

Forty-eight colored C. C. C. companies are engaged on soil-conservation projects.

Two colored commanding officers with the rank of captain and lieutenant in the United States Reserve Corps are on active duty with the C. C. C., one at Gettysburg National Park, Pa., and the other at Fishers Landing, N. Y. Four other line officers are on active duty at these two camps.

Four colored engineers and six colored technical foremen have served Pennsylvania camps for more than 2 years. At Gettysburg the camp superintendent is a Negro.

One colored historian, who received his Ph. D. degree from Columbia University, is included in the camp personnel at Gettysburg.

Fifteen million dollars has been obligated for clothing worn by colored enrollees, including shirts, underwear, trousers, socks, denim jumpers, shoes, caps, raincoats, and overcoats.

Nineteen million dollars has been expended for food served colored boys and men at camps during the past 6½ years.

One million five hundred thousand dollars has been received by railroads for transportation of colored C. C. C. enrollees to camp and back home again.

THE FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Negro farmers and wage earners have participated in the program of the Farm Credit Administration, which makes available to farm owners loans on easy terms. F. C. A. also sponsors credit unions among small wage earners.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman favor putting the Farm Credit Administration into the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the gentleman mean making the appropriation for that agency as a part of the agricultural appropriation?

Mr. GROSS. No; I mean putting the Farm Credit Administration under Secretary Wallace in the Department of Agriculture, whereas it is now a separate and independent lending agency.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would not want to commit myself on that just at this point.

Mr. GROSS. Since the gentleman is discussing the benefits derived from the Farm Credit Administration, I thought he might be willing to express his opinion on that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yielded for a question only.

Mr. GROSS. I am only asking the gentleman a question. I hope the gentleman will answer.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have said I do not feel I can answer the question at this time.

Loans to farmers

The farm credit service is available to all farmers who can qualify, regardless of race. Last year 8,167 Negro farmers in Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina borrowed $1,798,934 through production credit associations under Farm Credit Administration supervision. These loans, averaging $220.27 each, ranged from $50 to $5,000. Approximately 6 percent of the colored farmers in these States obtained loans.

More than 5,000 Negro farmers secured short-term loans in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana. These represented about 20 percent of all such loans made in those States. Participating in the program, these colored farmers share in the ownership of $1,033,000 of voting stock purchased by member-borrowers of production credit associations.

Farmers borrow from production credit associations for various purposes, such as the producing, harvesting, and marketing of crops; to finance the breeding, feeding, fattening, and marketing of livestock; and for the repair, improvement, or alteration of farm buildings. Security must be furnished for every type of loan. Farm Credit Administration officials report that Negro farmers repay their loans promptly and are considered among the best credit risks in the country.

Federal credit unions

In June 1940, records of the Farm Credit Administration showed that there were 48 Federal credit units organized among Negroes with a total membership of 4,178 persons. In addition, Negroes are members of certain credit unions serving other races. Forty-two of those unions reported loans outstanding to members amounting to $44,471. They had made a total of 3,731 loans totaling $166,800. Their assets amounted to $55,843.

Credit unions, sponsored by Farm Credit Administration, are located at such institutions as Howard University, Florida Agricultural and Mechanical College, Tallahassee; Prairie View State College, Texas; Freedmen's Hospital, Washington; Stanley S. Holmes Village, public-housing project in Atlantic City; Veterans' Administration facilities, Tuskegee, Ala.; and University Homes, public housing project in Atlanta. School teachers, hospital attendants, and manual laborers are among members of Federal credit unions.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will not yield.

THE FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Negroes in America are still largely a rural people contributing importantly to the agricultural economics of the Southern States. The problems of the sharecropper, the tenant farmer, and the small-farm owner are problems confronting a considerable number of Negro families. To aid in the solution of these problems the Farm Security Administration was created by an act of Congress. The F. S. A. makes rehabilitation loans for 5-year periods at 5 percent interest. Through long-term loans repayable over a period of 40 years, it enables selected renters, sharecroppers, or farm laborers to become established as owners on desirable land. It seeks to develop better social and economic patterns in agriculture by establishing homestead projects. It establishes rental cooperatives and supplies without cost, a debt adjustment service available to all farmers.

Rehabilitation loans

These small loans enable the farmers to buy the things they need to make a living from the land—wagons, mules, milk cows, seed, fertilizer, and so forth. Farmers securing such loans cooperate with the F. S. A. farm and home management supervisors in carrying out plans for each year's operation. Approximately 50,000 such loans, representing 12.5 percent of the total, have been made to Negro farmers in the last 4 years. Negro farmers are 12.6 percent of America's farm operators.

Long-term land-purchase loans

Selected renters, sharecroppers, or farm laborers with energy, ambition, and good records may secure these loans for the purchase of desirable land. Cooperative supervision is stipulated in all such loan agreements. During the first year of operation, 1937–38, there were 265 such loans made to Negro farmers constituting 18.6 percent of the total for regions 4, 5, 6, and 8 where Negroes on farms are found in appreciable numbers. Applications for such loans steadily increase.

Homestead projects

In January 1940 nearly 1,800 Negro families were living in F. S. A. homestead projects in which effort is being made to develop better social and economic patterns in rural life. Some of these projects are new communities while others consist of scattered individual farms. Negro farmers are established on 31 projects in 13 States. Farmsteads are provided with dwellings, barns, and out buildings. Guidance is given to tenants of these projects by F. S. A. agents in cooperative farming.

Rental cooperatives

Through rental cooperatives, groups of tenants may improve their tenureship and living conditions by leasing large tracts of land through F. S. A. loans and operating these tracts cooperatively, usually with an option to buy within a given period. Thirty such rental cooperatives are being set up in the Mississippi Delta area. By January 1940 there were 427 Negro families living on 10 rental cooperatives. They constituted 47 percent of all families so located.

Economic and social services

Through the debt-adjustment service available to all farmers without cost, $78,807,693 have been saved to American farmers during the past 4 years. Negro farmers have shared in the benefits of this service. As a further service, F. S. A. offers loans to small groups of farmers unable to purchase livestock, heavy farm equipment, and other needed items individually, enabling them to purchase these for community use.

F. S. A. is shaping patterns in rural education by providing adequate school buildings and equipment on many projects and by stimulating the inclusion in courses of study of subjects carefully correlated with rural life. It supplies medical aid through the establishment of group medical care associations, through which members receive service of physicians and nurses at minimum rates.

THE NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

The National Youth Administration has insured the active integration and participation of Negroes in the program from the beginning. There are now 23 State supervisors of Negro activities in 23 State offices and approximately 500 or more project supervisors throughout the country. There are 65 Negro members on State advisory committees in 27 States, the District of Columbia, and New York City. In addition, there are 3 States with special State Negro committees. Local committees with Negro representation are established throughout the country in the planning of local Negro projects.

National Youth Administration employment figures

According to the 1930 census, Negroes represent 9.7 percent of the total population. Negro youth represent 10.9 percent of the youth between the ages of 15 and 24. In December 1939 it is estimated that approximately 78,300 Negro youth were employed on the student aid and work programs of the N. Y. A. out of a total employment of 708,000. This represents 11.1 percent Negro youth on the N. Y. A. program. Of this number, 41,500 are N. Y. A. school, college, and graduate students and 36,800 are employed on the work program.

Student aid

Under the 1939–40 college- and graduate-aid program, 113 Negro colleges received an allotment of $420,420. A special Negro college- and graduate-aid fund of $105,000 was also distributed to almost 650 college and graduate students who otherwise would not have been included in the regular college and graduate quotas. This makes a total of $525,420 which went directly to Negro students within the N. Y. A. college- and graduate-aid program. In addition, Negro youth received student aid from the regular fund allotment in colleges open to both white and colored students. Of the 41,500 Negro student-aid recipients, 7,200 were receiving college and graduate aid.

An analysis was made this year of the approved student-aid applicants, at which time 5.9 percent of the total college- and graduate-aid applicants were Negro and 11.3 percent of the high-school applicants were Negro youth. In those Southern States where the Negro population is over 25 percent of the total population, the proportion of approved Negro applicants to the total applicants for student aid was approximately 29 percent.

The average family income of all school, college, and graduate Negro students was $365. The average family income of the Negro high-school students was $334 as compared with the average family income of $664 of all school-aid recipients. Negro college students came from families with an average income of $554 as compared with $1,129 for the families of all college- and graduate-aid students on the program. Of the Negro student-aid recipients, 93 percent came from families receiving less than $1,000 a year income; 64 percent came from families making less than $500 a year.

Nearly 42 percent of the Negro school-aid recipients were members of families which had received some form of public relief or W. P. A. employment during the 5 years ending December 1938. Even more revealing is the fact that, according to a survey made last year, 55 percent of these students came from families whose livelihood is in the field of unskilled labor, domestic and personal service, and farming. In contrast, less than 8 percent came from professional, semiprofessional, and other white-collar groups.

Work projects

In March 1939 approximately 36,800 Negro youth were employed on N. Y. A. work projects, which is about 13 percent of the total project employment for that month. These Negro youth were employed on all types of projects. Many of the Southern States are emphasizing the repair and modernization of Negro schools and are building small rural schools for Negroes. For example, one State submitted applications to construct 9 school buildings and 1 children's home for Negroes. Another State submitted projects for 18 Negro schools, or other educational buildings. and 3 teachers homes.

Resident centers

There are 60 resident centers for Negro youth, with another three employing both white and colored youth. The planned capacity for the Negro resident projects is about 3,800.

These youth, drawn from nearby rural communities, are taught farming and industrial techniques, as well as home management. Boys earn their subsistence and tuition by work on the farm and in the shop, receiving related training in general farm shop work, soil conservation, rotation and diversification of crops and animal husbandry, auto mechanics, machine-shop practice, brickmasonry, printing, painting, and building construction. Girls work in cafeterias, kitchens, and dormitories with related training in the preparation of and serving of foods, home management, marketing, gardening, canning, sewing, personal hygiene, and laundry work.

Vocational guidance

Junior placement counselors are provided by the N. Y. A. to place young people in jobs and to supply applicants with information concerning job opportunities, training facilities, and in general to help young people to prepare themselves for employment. In a few cities these services are operated for Negro and white youth separately, but in most cities both Negro and white youth are eligible to register at the same office. In cooperation with the State employment services, the N. Y. A. has been responsible for the establishment of junior placement services in 142 cities of 41 States and the District of Columbia.

THE UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

The United States Housing Authority was established by an act of Congress to give financial assistance to local housing authorities in eliminating slums, developing safe, sound, and sanitary dwellings for low-income families living in substandard homes, and to reduce unemployment through stimulation of business activity.

Assistance to local authorities

The Government's public housing program is a decentralized program. Under terms of the United States Housing Act of 1937, the U. S. H. A. is authorized to grant loans to local housing authorities covering up to 90 percent of the development costs of projects and to grant annual subsidies for the purpose of keeping the rents within reach of low-income families. The initiation, development, operation, and management of the projects are in the hands of the local authorities. The U. S. H. A. acts as banker and offers technical and other assistance in the development of the projects.

Twenty-one cities in various sections of the country have appointed Negroes to the local housing authority, the policy-making body for the local program. In two States Negroes serve on the State housing board.

The development of projects

By February 1940 loan contracts between the U. S. H. A. and local housing authorities had received Presidential approval for the development of 134,056 dwelling units. These loans, totaling $597,633,000, will defray 90 percent of the development costs of 362 projects in 162 different communities throughout the Nation.

According to current estimates, Negro families will occupy approximately 44,754, or about one-third, of the dwelling units already approved. These new projects have been planned for development in 116 communities in 25 States and the District of Columbia.

Of the 178 projects under construction by the middle of February 1940, 55 were for predominant Negro occupancy, while plans provided for the inclusion of Negro tenants in 15 other projects then under construction. Negro tenants are now living in 7 of the 17 U. S. H. A. aided projects which have been opened for occupancy.

One of the larger U. S. H. A. aided projects is now under construction in Chicago's crowded South Side. This project, known as the Ida B. Wells Homes, will replace a slum area and provide decent new dwellings for 1,662 families. The project will consist of row houses, flats, and apartment buildings. There will be adequate recreational facilities and play spaces. When the project shall have been completed it will not only relieve congestion in that district but will represent the fruition of plans which were first projected in 1934 by the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, at that time the Government's public housing agency.

This is the largest of the projects to be developed in a predominantly Negro urban area. However, U. S. H. A. aided projects are being developed in Negro neighborhoods in many small cities throughout the Nation as well as in such metropolitan centers as Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Atlanta, Cleveland, and St. Louis.

Employment

The development of these projects has meant jobs as well as homes for American workers. Some $225,000,000 will be paid in wages to building-trades workers on the sites of projects. Millions more will be paid to employees engaged in the production, fabrication, and transportation of building materials. Negro workers are employed in all of these industries.

Under terms and conditions of contracts for the development of U. S. H. A. aided projects discrimination in employment because of race is forbidden. The contracts further stipulate minimum percentages for Negro labor, the fulfillment of which shall be considered evidence that such labor has not been discriminated against.

Already Negro building-trades workers currently employed in the construction of 141 U. S. H. A. aided projects in 84 cities have received $2,126,000 in wages. This sum represents 10 percent of the total wages paid construction workers on these projects. Of the amount paid to Negro workers, $464,000 went to skilled workers—Negro carpenters, masons, cement finishers, plasterers, and in some instances, as in Chicago, Negro electricians and steamfitters have been employed.

Employment, however, has not been confined to building-trades workers. Negro architects have been employed by local housing authorities to design projects in Charleston, W. Va., Baltimore, Washington, and Los Angeles. Negro engineers have supervised construction in Philadelphia and Chicago. Negro lawyers and real-estate men have been employed in land acquisition in Newark, Chicago, and Augusta, Ga. In many cities Negro social workers have been employed in tenant relocation and selection. In Pittsburgh and Newark Negro stenographic and clerical help have been employed in the central offices of the local housing authorities.

The management and maintenance of low-rent housing projects afford a new field of employment. Negro personnel has been selected for the management and maintenance of projects in Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Dayton, Ohio, Wilmington, N. C., and Augusta, Ga.

Negroes are employed on the administrative staff of the U. S. H. A. in Washington. Professional and technical workers who have been employed by the U. S. H. A., include two lawyers, two architects, two engineers, and an accountant. These are in addition to the staff of the Office of Racial Relations and the stenographic and clerical help employed in other divisions of the U. S. H. A.

Housing Division P. W. A.

The Government's public housing program was originally launched by the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration and was taken over by the U. S. H. A. after its creation by the United States Housing Act of 1937. Negro families now occupy 7,478 of the 21,317 dwellings developed under this earlier program. Sixteen of the forty-nine projects are occupied predominantly by Negro families and are managed and maintained by Negro staffs. Negroes also are among the tenants of 14 other of these projects, some of which include Negro personnel on their management and maintenance staffs.

Likewise Negro construction workers shared in the wages paid for the development of these projects. Negro building-trades workers employed in the construction of 33 P. W. A. low-rent housing projects in 21 cities received $3,115,695.86, or 15.36 percent of the total wages paid construction workers on these projects. Negro skilled workers received $774,437.11, or 5.51 percent of wages paid to skilled workers.

OTHER NEW FEDERAL AGENCIES

Negroes in large numbers have likewise benefited directly and indirectly from other agencies which have been established by acts of Congress since 1933.

Social Security Board

Chief among these agencies is the Social Security Board. Thousands of Negroes employed in mechanical and industrial occupations are eligible to receive unemployment benefits and will be entitled to old age and survivors' benefits. The Social Security Board contributes to the States in providing assistance to dependent children, widowed mothers, the blind and aged persons not covered by old age and survivors' insurance.

Two branch offices of the Social Security Board located in the Negro districts of New York and Chicago are staffed by Negro managers and workers. Other Negroes are employed in unemployment insurance offices in such States as New York, Ohio, North Carolina, Michigan, and Illinois. Their salaries are paid in part by the States and in part by the Federal Government.

Tennessee Valley Authority—Rural Electrifiation Administration

Thousands of Negroes residing in the Tennessee Valley are profiting from the cheaper electricity rates made available to them by the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Rural Electrification Administration has likewise made farm life less dreary and burdensome through bringing electricity to the farmstead.

Home Owners Loan Corporation—Federal Housing Administration

The Negro home owner and prospective home owner have been assisted by the Home Owners Loan Corporation in retaining their homes and by the Federal Housing Administration in purchasing new homes on easy terms.

National Labor Relations Board—Wage and Hour Act

Negro labor has been protected in the right to bargain collectively by the provisions of the National Labor Relations Board and has benefited by the minimum wages and maximum hours provided by the Wage and Hour Act in such industries as tobacco, transportation, and lumber.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION UNDER THE NEW DEAL

There has been a considerable amount of criticism voiced of late to the effect that the New Deal agencies have been operated so as to extend the areas of racial discrimination. In evaluating such criticism, it may be well to follow the lead of Al Smith and "let's have a look at the record."

In the so-called Hatch Act adopted by the present predominantly Democratic Congress, there appears in section 4 the following statement:

> It shall be unlawful for any person, of any employment, position, work, compensation, or any benefits provided or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or cpposition to, any candidate or any political party in any election.

This constitutes one of the first instances on record where the Congress, by general legislation, has specifically proscribed racial discrimination in the expenditure of funds.

Following out this injunction the Public Resolution No. 24, adopted by the Seventy-sixth Congress, which makes appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, states in section 28 that—

> Any person * * * who knowingly by means of any fraud, force, threat, intimidation, or boycott, or discrimination on account of race, religion, political affiliations, or membership in a labor organization, deprives any person of any of the benefits to which he may be entitled under any such appropriations * * * shall be deemed guilty of a felony and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years or both.

In section 30 (b) this joint resolution repeats the language of section 4 of the Hatch Act, quoted above, prohibiting discrimination on account of race. This resolution affects the entire W. P. A. relief and work-relief program.

In the case of non-Federal grants by the P. W. A. an agreement is entered into by the public body that received the funds, and the Public Works Administration. This agreement requires specifically that there shall be no discrimination in the selection of workmen for the project. This requirement is stated in part 4 of the construction terms and conditions, as follows:

The applicant will require that there shall be no discrimination because of race, creed, color, or political affiliation in the employment of persons for work on the project.

Much more decisive action has been taken by P. W. A. in instances where Federal projects are undertaken. This stipulation took the form of a prima facie nondiscrimination clause. It was required that in the employment of labor under the contracts Negroes be employed in certain proportions, such proportions to be determined by the 1930 occupational census figures.

The United States Housing Authority, in taking over the work of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, has actively carried forward and enforced this protection of Negro skilled and unskilled labor. The general terms and conditions for U. S. H. A. aided projects includes the following injunction:

The local authority will require that there shall be no discrimination because of race, creed, color, or political affiliations in the employment of persons for work on U. S. H. A. aided projects. In order to give effect to this requirement, insofar as it may affect Negro employees on construction, the local authority shall insert in all construction contracts a provision that payment to Negro skilled and unskilled labor of certain percentages of the amount paid under the contract for such labor shall be considered prima facie evidence that the contractor has not discriminated against Negro labor. The percentages to be used are those of Negro skilled and unskilled building construction laborers employed in the particular city as reflected by the last national census.

Under the operation of this clause, Negro labor at the end of the year 1939 had already received a total of well over a million dollars.

The U. S. H. A. goes even further in the protection of minority groups. In its policy bulletin on site selection there appears the following statement of policy:

Particular care should be exercised in site selection to safeguard the interests of minority groups which may be affected. Although it is the responsibility of the local housing authority to decide its own racial policy, certain desirable principles may be suggested for application in this connection. Some of these may be enumerated as follows: (1) The development of public housing projects for white occupancy in areas now occupied by Negroes or other minority racial groups is undesirable. * * * (2) Whenever exceptions are to be made to this general policy, the local authority should demonstrate the circumstances which it believes justify the exception, and there should be obtained, if possible, a statement of concurrence in the program from representative spokesmen of the racial groups to be displaced. (3) Any local program which involves the demolition of a number of houses available to minority racial groups which is considerably greater than the total to be provided for these groups in the new project is undesirable. * * * (4) If it is decided to develop sites which are either inhabited now by members of more than one race or, in the case of vacant sites, are contiguous to neighborhoods which are inhabited by different races, local authorities should plan projects open to the members of these different groups.

The National Youth Administration has taken definite steps in its written policy to protect Negroes in the extension of its benefits. In section 2, part 2, of its Manual on Student Aid Procedure, the Administrator directs that—

In assigning quotas, distribution of school-aid funds to provide assistance to young men and women of any minority racial group shall not represent a smaller proportion of the total State school-aid-fund quota than the ratio which this racial group bears to the total population of the school district or State.

In addition, the N. Y. A. has set aside a special fund in order that needy Negro college and graduate students may be reached by the benefits.

Eligible Negro students—

States the Student Aid Bulletin—

who cannot be cared for within a particular institution's quota for student aid, after it has made a fair allocation for Negro students from its regular quota, may apply for assistance from the special Negro college- and graduate-aid fund through the institution they desire to attend. Such institutions may then apply through the office of the State youth administration to the Washington office of the N. Y. A. for an additional sum for Negro college and graduate aid.

This special fund takes cognizance of the fact that in a large number of Southern States inadequate facilities for college and graduate study are now available to Negro students at public institutions.

In one Southern State which affords most inadequate high-school facilities for Negro pupils, it was found that it was impossible for N. Y. A. benefits to apply to a number of eligible Negro high-school students since there were no high schools for them to attend. The N. Y. A. met this situation by transferring almost $17,000 from the regular school aid funds designated for high-school students to the college and graduate aid fund for Negroes in that State in order to make possible the setting up of rural teacher-training units in six of the available high schools. These funds made it possible to train as "post graduate" high-school students close to 200 Negro teachers for the small rural schools of the State.

These policies were further implemented in such agencies as the W. P. A., N. Y. A., P. W. A., and U. S. H. A. by the presence in all of these New Deal agencies of Negro administrative staffs who were in position to do two things: First, to provide during the initiation and formulation of the program definite devices for the protection of Negro participants, and second, to keep track of the extent of racial participation in order to make possible their equitable sharing in the benefits, and to keep their entire organizations alert to guard against racial discrimination in the operation of these agencies. These various administrative devices and statements of policy under the New Deal agencies represent progressive steps made by the Federal Government in the protection of minority racial groups and in making it possible that these groups participate equitably in Federal programs.

What I have said shows that under this administration millions of Negroes at the bottom of the economic ladder have not only been helped, but have been kept alive. No administration at any time has ever shown half the interest in this group of citizens that the New Deal administration has shown.

You will note that I have said nothing about the high positions which Negroes have held under this administration. The fact is that aside from the millions of common people who have been helped, a larger number of the group have been recognized and appointed to responsible positions high up in the Government than in any previous administration.

In this connection, let me mention a few of them: Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, N. Y. A. Director; Dr. Robert C. Weaver, Assistant Housing Administrator; Dr. William J. Thompkins, recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia; Lt. Lawrence Oxley, special assistant in the Department of Labor; and many other men and women of high rank have been appointed to outstanding positions with salaries ranging from $2,500 to $10,000. Lester Walton, Minister to Liberia, receives $10,000; Armond W. Scott, judge of municipal court for the District of Columbia, receives $8,000; Hon. William L. Houston was appointed special assistant in the Department of Justice. The first Negro Federal judge appointed outside of the District of Columbia, Judge William Hastie, was appointed by this administration. Judge Hastie served for several years in the Virgin Islands; when he resigned the the judgeship, Judge Herman Moore, a Negro from Chicago, was appointed to succeed him and is now serving on the Federal bench in the Virgin Islands. But this administration, unlike all previous administrations, has helped millions in the lower brackets, while heretofore Republican administrations have helped a few outstanding persons, appointing them to key positions presumably for the purpose of satisfying the race. Through the New Deal administration this policy has been reversed, and the way has been opened for the Negro to take a firm stand and begin a definite and successful march toward real prosperity and equal opportunity and recognition in this country.

What then has the Negro to quarrel about insofar as this administration is concerned? There may be other groups who think they have some justification to complain about what they have received under the New Deal administration. The Negroes can have no such claim. Every well-thinking Negro in the United States today, if he is honest with himself, must confess that this administration has brought to the Negro his best opportunity and has created in him the strongest hope that he has witnessed during his days of freedom. Let the Negro go forward with serious thoughts about his welfare and future and in his heart show the gratitude which he feels toward those who have given him this great opportunity for which he has prayed and worked during the past 50 years. The record of New Deal achievement in our behalf has been made. It cannot be changed even by the few designing persons who would like to do so for selfish motives.

The President, his splendid wife, and the outstanding members of his Cabinet have all shown unusual interest in the welfare of the Negro. I know not what course others may take in the coming campaign, but I know for the best interests of the Negro, a third term by Franklin Delano Roosevelt would mean continued progress for the Negro. Personally, it is my desire to see the President serve a third term. If for any reason he cannot be persuaded to serve a third term, it is my opinion that he and the large number of forward looking statesmen in the Democratic ranks will see that the nomination goes to another genuine New Dealer who will carry forward the splendid work which this administration has so well begun. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore made the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] is entitled to be recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to let the gentleman from New York speak at this time, inasmuch as he is asking for only 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] while he was speaking if he would yield for a question. I wanted to ask him how many colored people are unemployed in the United States, and if there is not a far larger number of unemployed in the colored group in proportion to population than in any other group in America after 7 years of the New Deal; also, if it is not true that the colored people have suffered more under the New Deal because of unemployment than any other single group. I am convinced that there have been more unemployed Negroes during the past 7 years than ever before in our history.

I also should have liked to ask the gentleman who has just spoken how many colored men in America have been appointed to high offices under the New Deal, whether any colored men have been appointed to high official office in the southern States, and what colored men have been appointed to important offices in States north of the Mason and Dixon's line. Under Republican administrations the colored people did receive important appointments in Washington and in the South as well as in the North.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] to yield because I wanted to ask him a question, and if the gentleman will permit I will ask him to answer that question because the gentleman from Illinois refused to yield. The gentleman from Illinois boasted about the virtues of the New Deal as they affect the people of the colored race in America. I wanted to ask him whether he realizes that below the Mason and Dixon's line, which is in complete control of the New Deal, they drive the colored people away from the polls and will not even let them vote? They also make our colored people ride in Jim Crow cars and patronize colored restaurants, hotels, theaters, and so forth, and prohibit them from patronizing ones which are patronized by the people of the white race.

Mr. FISH. I also wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois, if he had yielded, where the President of the United States stands on the antilynching bill. We know where the President of the United States stands on all racial and religious questions in foreign lands, but we should like to know where he stands on enacting an antilynching bill at the present time in the United States of America. He has been strangely silent about that, a matter which vitally affects the security of some 13,000,000 colored people in America. One word from the White House and that bill would come flying through the Senate and be enacted into law. Day after day we hear about President Roosevelt's views affecting foreign lands, but when it comes to making democracy safe in America and safe for 13,000,000 colored people, he is strangely silent. The White House continues to be as silent as a tomb when the colored people ask for an endorsement of the Gavagan-Fish antilynching bill.

When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] speaks about all these different agencies of the Government I would like to have him put in the RECORD how many colored people hold important jobs in these different agencies or bureaucracies of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman, although the gentleman would not yield to me when making his lengthy speech.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say to the gentleman that that is in the RECORD and in my speech. I asked permission at the very beginning to extend my remarks because I knew the speech would be too long to bring it within the time allotted to me, but that will be found answered in the speech.

Mr. FISH. That is what I want. I want the facts and not campaign speeches for home consumption.

The gentleman from Illinois was speaking about these different agencies of the Government and what they are doing for the colored people, but is it not true that most of these buildings for the colored people are segregated? They are segregated for a certain group of people in America. Does the gentleman from Illinois believe in segregation?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to preface my answer by saying that this administration has refused to follow the example that the Republican Party has set, and we have a great many of these units that are mixed, such as the Republican Party has never given us.

Mr. FISH. Where are those mixed units?

Mr. MITCHELL. One of them in Chicago.

Mr. FISH. And they divide them 50-50?

Mr. MITCHELL. No; not exactly 50-50, because we are not half of the population; we are one-tenth of the population.

Mr. FISH. But the gentleman is also advocating these segregated units, is he not?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not advocating anything. I am talking from the record about what this administration has done. I am not trying to become President and I have no agitation to start.

Mr. FISH. I hope the gentleman will take the trouble to answer the question he would not yield to answer, and that is with respect to how many colored people in America are unemployed at the present time. Can the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman knows that is an impossibility, because the gentleman does not know how many are unemployed in the city of New York. That has not been determined and we have not the exact figures. The gentleman is asking the impossible, and I should like to observe that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is an adept in asking the impossible. I will say to the gentleman that the number of colored people unemployed at this time is not half as large as it was in 1932 when his party was in power.

Mr. FISH. That is the question and I did not think the gentleman would be competent to answer it and, evidently, he is not. The New Deal has made abundant promises to the Negroes but about all they have received is more abundant debts, deficits, and unemployment. They want permanent jobs to provide adequately for their families and not relief at 50 cents a day. The New Deal for 7 lean years has failed to give them permanent jobs and the only way I know of for them to once again become employed at American standard of wages and living is through the election of a Republican President. The gentleman has made a speech about the unemployment among the colored people and yet does not know how many are unemployed. That is the most important political and economic issue confronting his group. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in calling the Private Calendar on tomorrow, the omnibus claims bills be called first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the little speech I am about to make at this time is twofold.

First. To help us, as lawmakers, to get away from that partisanship to which it seems a majority are in some measure inclined.

Second. To study how to approach the subject of being an individual Congressman in Washington. There are many here who could make a better speech on the subject than I, but they have not done so; therefore I represent myself as stepping away from partisan behavior, believe it or not, and contributing my bit to this forum as an unbiased, broad-aimed, nonpartisan lawmaker elected to represent the people, and the whole people, of his district, and one who may, if and when the opportunity arises, put in a little plug for his whole country.

Perhaps one who has been here precisely the length of time I have is in the better position to handle this subject, having been here long enough to begin to get the congressional slant, and yet not for time enough to be entirely lost from that out-of-Congress, lay view that our 2-year-term set-up evidently seeks to preserve. The most earnest lecture the college freshman receives comes from the sophomore, the junior and senior have become too grown up, and besides, have other jobs to do; so it is with our station here. One who is only one notch removed will step forth and gladly hold out his lamp of experience. The two branches of purpose in this speech are really related, and, as is often true of kinfolks, that is why they are found here together. The first is the partisan bias, which is easily recognized as egocentric in its origin. A Congressman comes in here newly elected and mantled with a brand new authority booted and spurred by gifts of confidence from whatever political party gave his name the life, the required boost, that placed him high enough to strike out for Congress. So he comes here an heir to party enthusiasm. This alone is natural, healthy, and proper, of course, but did you ever see the swelling and inspired patriot breeze into Congress fresh and green from his home town with a new vision, a new commission, and a new necktie, a gleam in his eye, a well-worded, high-sounding speech in his mouth, feeling fully qualified to shed any light needed on any subject arising, whether or not connected with any committee with which he is connected—and scarcely has he warmed his seat—his seat in Congress, till the lightning speed of his expanding scope is such that he announces as a candidate for the Senate of the United States. Oh, mores; oh, tempora. Personally I have doubts as to its being any advantage or promotion to go from this body to the Senate.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to remark, so it may appear as a part of the gentleman's remarks, that the infant mortality here is very, very high.

Mr. PATRICK. I understand so, and I thank the gentleman for his excellent and timely contribution.

It is the House group under whose wise guidance that all revenue laws must arise. Each Member of the House must get a renewed letter of authority from Mr. and Mrs. America each 2 years; indeed, in the event of a vacancy the Governor may appoint a Senator, but not a Congressman; a Congressman must come out of the maw of democracy free, unshackled and unobligated.

Senators may by Governor be made,
By push and pull, an' a' that,
But Congress stands above the grade
The Governor must fa' that.

I do not suppose this is close enough to Bobby Burns to require an apology, but these gentlemen who come in with the feeling that they are specially endowed with the gifts of extreme wisdom, perspicacity, and foresight often, for all their greatness, appear pitiful partisans—well, Bobby Burns does have a word for them:

O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as ithers see us,
It wad from mony a blunder free us
And foolish notion.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I shall yield later.

Mr. TREADWAY. But I want to make a correction of what the gentleman has said.

Mr. PATRICK. I always yield for a correction.

Mr. TREADWAY. There are some States—and I am positive about one State—where the Governor has no constitutional authority in the State to make the appointment of a Senator.

Mr. PATRICK. That is true in some States, I understand, but I am talking about the matter as a general proposition. My purpose is to show that a Senator is in no true measure superior to a Congressman.

The Members who have been here for many terms, mellowed by the years, do not generally reflect this partisan slant. I am tempted to suggest the name of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]—others, of course. To be sure, every Member of this body is a patriotic, sincere American, but most certainly we can be sincere and can be as earnest as is in us as individuals to be without childishly feeling that those of the other major party are not proceeding for a fair and true conviction and because one is not a member of our party; is following some ulterior motive, or that his whole song is pitched on a false note. One thing we young ones must try to learn, and that is that we may be green without being fresh and may be serious without being audacious.

A few days ago the worthy gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and I had a friendly exchange of mutual respects upon the floor of the House, all in the best of humor, in which I made reference to never having seen him smile. Oh, it is not important, of course, as to whether the gentleman can find a smile in some old story of mine—incidentally I seldom indulge in story telling on the floor; however, whether I do or not is of no moment—but he should be able to get a smile from the keen and flashing wit of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT]; the clever observations of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], or the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON], or the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS; or the pointed and effective parries of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. However, I did the gentleman from Wisconsin wrong. It has been called to my attention by a Congressman from his own State that when he himself tells a story he not only smiles but laughs out in great glee, all of which is beside the point; and perish the thought that anyone should charge the esteemed gentleman from Wisconsin with having the qualities I have been referring to, but as one friend to another—one coworker to another—I do recommend to his observation the behavior of men who have been here for years, Democrats and Republicans, wise men, intelligent, and rich in the golden experience of legislation gathered in this very Hall who are also modest and retiring and who sit in counsel in this forum, day in and day out, to listen without the urge bringing them up to air their views of any subject coming before this body. It can do him no harm to observe them.

But enough of that. We—everyone in this body, approximately 435 of us—cannot we take our jobs seriously without taking ourselves so, and can we not think of what we have to do here rather than of the party which will get the credit in the event it turns out well? It seems so foolish for any Republican to assume that most any bill brought in is subject to suspicion because it was presented by Democrats, and Democrats appear foolish who ascribe each objection arising over there as directed at a measure on a partisan bias. Cannot we transcend all that, get away from it, and get to the complex job of being a Congressman in Washington, a Washington Congressman, here for the purpose of serving those who sent us, those who voted for us as well as those who had the foresight and vision to vote against us?

Now, that is getting to be a real job of this land of 130,000,000. Kindly oblige me and yourself for a moment by reviewing a few of the things that a Congressman undertakes to do when he lands in Washington as a district's Representative. There are now on file in the Congress of the United States 13,942 live bills, and bills still coming in.

We have bills to revise the calendar, bills to authorize the President to proclaim a day of fasting and prayer, bills for anniversary celebrations, bills to change the height-and-weight regulations for men in the Army, Navy, and marines, bills for Nation-wide marriage laws, Nation-wide divorce laws, bills to provide rotation of daylight saving, to take over relics of Christopher Columbus, a bill to provide for the employment of every person in the United States, a bill for the protection of the bald eagle, a bill to abolish chain-gang systems, a bill to send all Negroes out of the United States—and this is to mention only a slight few.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Briefly.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to suggest one other subject.

Mr. PATRICK. Very well; let us have it.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have been thinking to offer a bill to curb the matrimonial activities of hospital nurses. Would the gentleman advocate that?

Mr. PATRICK. I have not studied it, but I think it would be a delightful subject to study.

But your swelling daily job is to attend the demands of a neat percent of the some of 400,000 persons who are chalked up as your constituents. Our Government has announced itself in recent years, and no doubt properly so, as being of and for the people—and are they responding? They are responding, and in doing so they are traveling the congressional route. So, whether the Democrats, Republicans, Farm-Laborites, or Marcantonioites send us, examples of what a man and even a woman is expected to do here in Washington representing a congressional district, one of the 435 for the whole Nation, make a sincere study. I have assembled 10 simple rules for the use of the Members of Congress which I intend to mail to each of them. I hope you will find these useful in and about your daily chores. I shall now read these 10 rules:

RULES FOR A CONGRESSMAN IN WASHINGTON

1. Entertain with a smile constituents, their wives, their sons, sons' wives, etc. Go with them to the White House; show good reason why you are unable to personally have them meet the President; take daughters to meet midshipmen at Annapolis.

2. Explain what bill is up for debate; point for discussion; how it will be passed; how you will vote and why.

3. Attend to balcony and point out Speaker BANKHEAD, Leaders RAYBURN and MARTIN, HAM FISH, DEWEY SHORT, that man MARTIN DIES, and name each lady Member of Congress.

4. Respond to worthy causes; make afterdinner speeches, before-dinner speeches; learn to eat anything, anywhere, any night—work all day, dictate all night, and be fresh as a rain-washed daisy for next day's duties.

5. Be a cultured gentleman, a teller of ribald stories, a profound philosopher, preserve a store of "Confucius say" gags; be a ladies' man, a man's man, a he-man, a diplomat, a Democrat with a Republican slant, a Republican with a Democrat viewpoint, and admirer of the Roosevelt way, a hater of the New Deal, a new dealer, an old dealer, and a quick dealer.

6. Learn how to attend six to eight major functions, rushing home and back during each term on one round-trip travel pay.

7. Have the dope on hot spots in town, with choice telephone numbers for the gay boys from back home, and help to contact all local moral organizations and uplift societies in Washington.

8. Learn to be expert guide. Keep car in tip-top shape.

9. Know names and dates related to all points of interest, and be able to explain and supply information regarding public buildings and statuary about Washington.

10. Be an authority on history, travel, psychology, philosophy, education, economics, civics, finance, export trade, Government printing, international relations, neckties, and fishing tackle.

Understand, I do not claim to come up to it all, especially as to telephone numbers, hot spots, stories, and so forth.

A Congressman has become an expanded messenger boy, and employment agency, getter-out of the Navy, Army, marines, ward heeler, wound healer, trouble shooter, law explainer, bill finder, issue translator, resolution interpreter, controversory oil pourer, glad-hand extender, business promoter, convention koore, civic ills skirmisher, veterans' affairs adjuster, ex-service man's champion, watchdog for the under dog, sympathizer with the upper dog, namer of babies, recoverer of lost baggage, soberer of delegates, adjuster for traffic violators, voters straying into Washington and into the toils of the law, binder up of broken hearts, financial wet nurse, good Samaritan, contributor to good causes—there are so many good causes—cornerstone layer, public building and bridge dedicator, ship christener—to be sure he does get in a little flag waving—and a little constitutional hoisting and spread-eagle work, but it is getting harder every day to find time to properly study legislation—the very business we are primarily here to discharge and that must be done above all things. To go on would not help a lot. We are running our legs off on details but we must keep the approval of Mr. and Mrs. Voter, so we find here a subject upon which we can all agree; and regardless of these labors involved I for one prefer it to any job I have ever had and do not expect to relinquish it without a powerful fight. I hope I am here to stay many, I trust, useful years.

Now, one and all, do you not agree that it is much better for us to come here and study how we may best do the job that is expected of us, for the people who expect it, than to be here in Washington wigwagging the old, old bipartisan see-saw that has been bobbing up and down for a hundred and fifty years in practically the same spot?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; gladly.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am extremely anxious to know who this Uncle Sam is that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. PATRICK. There are 130,000,000 people in the United States——

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, that is an answer to my question.

Mr. PATRICK. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. GIFFORD. Therefore they are our neighbors, and I suppose they should know all about our business, and all about our income, and our privies and everything else. Our neighbors are Uncle Sam?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And they must know. I congratulate the gentleman that he answered so promptly that Uncle Sam is simply our neighbors, who should stick their noses into our business.

Mr. PATRICK. As a matter of fact, when we apply that to 130,000,000 people, that is a study by themselves about themselves, and it is not merely our neighbors at all, it is us, it is me, finding out about myself, so I should know what to do about myself and what ought to be done by myself for myself. Now, move it back into the Nation, as a unit, and you have the reason it appeals to one's statesmanship.

Statesmanship is an engaging subject of study, as entrancing as an old maid's dream, taking as many and varied shapes as a drifting summer's cloud. Now let me confess that my place is merely that among the humble politician group, and I am as yet unable to claim membership among the lofty body of statesmen, but I do delight to watch them work. A shining example of a special brand of statesmanship is recently being exhibited by the banker-manufacturer, ex-Governor of New Hampshire, who, of course, knows what he wants and chooses the star he would follow, but for one in my modest station, I would never select for my brand of statesmanship a quality at which any fishwife should be my equal and the average soap-boxer my superior. Perhaps this suggests the subject of the census.

Our beloved Uncle Samuel has been counting noses and so on trying to see how many eggs he has in his basket at the beginning of each decade since 1790—I believe it was begun that year. Now I am unable to find wherein it has been called bureaucratic snooping until this go-round. I do not wish to let my own partisanship color my convictions, but while it is true our good old Uncle has added a few questions to his list each time it has always impressed most of us as only an honest and worthy effort to find what is going on around here, in the hope he may know better what to do about it. Mr. Average Citizen is demanding more at the hands of his Government year by year, and it does seem only logical that the more our gentle Uncle can know about him the better he should be able to make out. He is merely going about the business of finding out about his people, homes, farms, businesses, mines, factories, and so forth, about all of which he can scarcely be too sincerely interested—and this information must largely serve as his working data for 10 years to come. Regardless of which political party is in the saddle presently, this seems to some of us to be a very good idea. I have examined all the questions on the list and am unable to find any that should do personal harm to one who is only trying to conduct his affairs on the level and do right by everybody. I get sort of leery of these folks who rear up and become too sensitive and touchy about matters that in the general course of things would not appear objectionable. Lord knows there are no questions in the list I should mind answering to my Government. True, it is the greatest research job ever undertaken, but as an American I was all cocked and primed to be very proud of it till some of our statesmen commenced to shout "improper snoopery," and I got kind of scared and commenced looking around to see what could be the matter. Well, the study is made. Now, I have settled back happy and undisturbed, because I think somebody is hollering "wolf" when no wolf is in sight that has not been grazing upon the hillside in plain view for some years—since 1932 at least.

You see, there is quite a little bit of stuff to be looked into. Uncle Samuel is held to a pretty high degree of responsibility regarding his lay-out of 7,000,000 farms, many of them washing away each year, 12,000 mines and quarries, 35,000,000 residence units, over 3,000,000 business concerns, over 170,000 manufacturing outfits, hogs, horses, cows, crops, automobiles, furniture, debts, births, and so on, and he feels that he should have as much of the needed information on all of it as he can get. As a matter of fact, the people have been so well warmed up with Literary Digest polls, Gallup polls, local chamber of commerce polls, newspaper polls, furniture dealers' polls, polls of radio listeners, and all, that we thought the folks would have most of the material added, on cards here and there, ready for the census taker on arrival. The Republicans asked "How much rent do you pay?" in 1930, and we Democrats never then got hot under the collar. In 1850, '60, and '70 the American citizen was asked detailed information about his finances, and he responded nobly and told Uncle Sam the facts—and then, behold, it was very good. Our President ventured the estimate that our Nation is ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-fed, and Uncle Sam would like to know how near his Chief Executive came to the facts, if he may have the facts.

So while we are trying to do the job of being a Congressman in Washington let us not get so partisan that we may be just a little bit inclined to go off too far on matters that tend to get people back home to thinking things exist that do not quite bulk into such proportions. We might get folks excited over things that do not exist, and it might possibly give a bit of trouble in years to come, where it should not, and might bob up when and where least expected, and, certainly, where least wanted, for, after all, this is about substance that has little or nothing, in the last measure, to do with parties or party lines.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the handsome gentleman from Wisconsin, who sheds so much light constantly upon the doings of the House.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. About this snooping by Uncle Sam. In view of the facts developed by the gentleman's colloquy with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], I would like to know whether that snooping is a part of the friendly neighbor policy of the New Deal?

Mr. PATRICK. Oh, no; we are just neighbors as between one another, having to do with things amongst ourselves. We are talking about ourselves now, and if any of the nations to the south of us should ask similar questions, we might tell them to go and jump into some friendly lake in South America. This census is nothing except us trying to find out something about ourselves. I think one of the biggest mistakes that we can make is to take ourselves as one group here and another group over there and then some other group. As a matter of fact, we are all one.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HINSHAW (at the request of Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT) for the week of March 18, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include a statement on farm imports.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INDIAN ROCK DAM

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] speaking on farm credits. I wanted him to state his position on placing the Farm Credit Administration in the Department of Agriculture. I wish he would acquaint himself with the fact that that means regimentation of agriculture, and that he would come out and take a stand on it.

I noticed in a news release of the National Economy League that the national debt is now pushed beyond $48,000,000,000. This would not be so if the Federal Government, in its various departments and projects, would apply better business methods. In the construction of the Indian Rock

Dam, which is a part of a flood-control project in Pennsylvania, in my county, York County, much money could be saved if the material purchased for the project had been obtained locally instead of being shipped in.

One of the objects of most of these Federal projects has been to supply labor for people out of jobs as well as to stimulate industry and I would like to know why labor and industry in the area of the project should not be recognized. Within a few miles of this dam all the products involved, except steel, could have been purchased. Also within a few miles of the dam we have one of the largest cement-producing mills in the eastern United States. If we check with the laboratory reports of the Pennsylvania Highway Department we will find that the limestone in the area has an unusually high cement content. The local sand meets with the specifications for this type of construction. It has long been established that limestone and sand produce a much better grade of concrete than river sand and gravel.

Quarries nearby have an investment of $500,000 and employ over 100 men with an average weekly wage of $25. Thus we find this community suffering a total loss in labor wages alone for stone and sand that could have been used in the construction of this dam totaling $22,500. Fifty thousand tons of stone and sand are going to be used at the dam. The low bid for the stone was $1.20 per ton f. o. b. job. That is $1 for stone and 20 cents per ton trucking 4 miles to the job. The low bid for imported gravel was $1.17 per ton f. o. b. job; car siding 62 cents for gravel and 55 cents for freight. There are to be used 40,000 barrels of cement, that is 200 carloads of about 200 barrels per car. The freight from the local plant to the job is $16 per car. From the Penn-Dixie plant it will be $98 per car. The Medusa plant, with an investment of over $2,000,000, employs 200 men who will suffer a labor loss of $12,000.

At a rate of 55 cents per ton for stone and sand the railroad will take a total of $27,500 for freight which should go to the 150 local dump truckers of whom 90 percent are owner operated. The difference between $16 and $98 per car for 200 cars of cement is simply wasted money. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

JAMES ROOSEVELT

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 6 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I shall take this time to read into the RECORD two exceptionally fine editorials from two of our Wisconsin newspapers. I now read an editorial from the Shawano County Journal of March 14, 1940:

AGAIN—JIMMY GOT IT

Jimmy Roosevelt's papa had William G. McAdoo appointed to the $25,000 job as head of the American President Steamship Line.

And Mr. McAdoo had the line give its insurance business to Jimmy's firm, Roosevelt & Sargent, Inc.

If you were to ask Jimmy's papa why he selected Mr. McAdoo, he might say that he considered "Mac" the best of all possible shipping operators. Maybe he is. Certainly he was a man of large experience in other affairs—for instance, he had been a promoter, a corporation lawyer, a Secretary of the Treasury, and had boarded the Roosevelt band wagon at Chicago at precisely the right moment.

If you were to ask Mr. McAdoo why he gave the insurance account to Jimmy's firm he might say that Jimmy's firm writes the best of all possible insurance policies. It must be a good policy to make Mr. McAdoo, whose headquarters are in Chicago, go all the way to Boston, headquarters of Roosevelt & Sargent, Inc.

Of course, this is none of our business, except for some slight indirect interest deriving from the fact that we are citizens and taxpayers and the United States Government owns 90 percent of the common stock of this shipping company and the R. F. C. lent it $4,500,000 and the United States Maritime Commission gave it a subsidy of $3,000,000.

And, of course, there is nothing illegal about it. It's only a question of taste—and smell.

I shall now read an editorial from the Wausau Record-Herald of March 14, 1940:

NEW ROOSEVELT ENTERPRISE

With stories of his $150,000 divorce settlement still in the news, James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, dropped into Chicago a few days ago for a series of conferences with his new business partner, Fred L. Mills. Jimmy has jumped from the insurance frying pan into the fire of the tavern slot-machine business. He's still interested, however, in Roosevelt & Sargent, the insurance firm which recently got a big chunk of marine insurance from the United States Line of steamships, to the presidency of which, worth $25,000 a year, his father appointed William G. McAdoo when the latter was defeated for reelection to the Senate.

While the President talks in toplofty terms about "economic royalists," Jimmy keeps an eye out for the main chance, even to grubbing for slot-machine nickels in taverns, drug stores, and filling stations. And Mrs. Roosevelt continues her lucrative lecture tours and her strange newspaper column, My Day. The name and the White House connection make good selling points for both.

The Mills slot-machine connections may prove rich. It's a big business, if occasionally dealing with shady layers of society, and Jimmy is supposed to have contracted with Mills to make a weekly short film for the slot-machine trade. It's the old penny-arcade racket elevated to nickel responsibility. Jimmy may have something there, although investors may ruefully recall his father's venture in the slot-machine vending business, the ill-fated Camco, a disastrous promotion which was F. D. R.'s only excursion into business. Jimmy seems to be a better businessman than his father.

Nevertheless, many will recall the days when a White House family respected Presidential dignity and prestige. That's one of the many traditions shattered by the present incumbent which we can ill afford to lose.

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at 10 a. m. Wednesday, March 20, 1940, for the consideration of H. R. 4582, to provide for the acquisition of certain property for public use in the District of Columbia.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

SCHEDULE OF HEARINGS ON FLOOD-CONTROL BILL OF 1940 BEGINNING MARCH 18, 1940, AT 01 A. M., DAILY

The hearings will be on reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the Flood Control Act of June 28, 1938, and on amendments to existing law. The committee plans to report an omnibus bill with authorizations of approximately one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five million dollars covering the principal regions of the country.

1. Monday, March 18: Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, Chief of Engineers, has been requested to make a general statement with his recommendations covering a general flood-control bill and the projects that should be included in the bill. He, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, the assistants to the Chief of Engineers, the division engineers, and the district engineers will be requested to submit additional statements as individual projects are considered and as desired by the committee.

2. Tuesday, March 19: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from New England, New York, and the Atlantic seaboard on all reported projects and pending bills.

3. Wednesday, March 20: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from the upper Ohio and tributaries, on additional authorizations for levees, flood walls, and reservoirs.

4. Thursday, March 21: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from the lower Ohio and tributaries, on additional authorizations for levees, flood walls, and reservoirs.

5. Friday, March 22: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, for the upper Mississippi and tributaries, and Missouri River and tributaries.

6. Saturday, March 23: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects on the Arkansas River and tributaries.

7. Monday, March 25: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects on the White River and tributaries.

8. Tuesday, March 26: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects in reports on rivers in Texas and the Southwest.

9. Wednesday, March 27: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects in the Los Angeles area and in the Pacific Northwest.

10. Thursday, March 28: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects in Colorado and other western areas.

11. Friday, March 29: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for the lower Mississippi River and other tributaries.

12. Saturday, March 30: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for other drainage-basin areas for other projects in other parts of the country.

13. Monday, April 1: Senators and Members of Congress, Department of Agriculture, and other governmental agencies.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1464. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to authorize an exchange of lands between the people of Puerto Rico and the United States; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1465. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a request for modification of the views expressed in letter of January 15 concerning the provision "that all personnel employed on such work and occupying skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, and supervisory positions shall be citizens of the United States"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1466. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1940 in the amount of $1,000,000 (H. Doc. No. 663); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1467. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a certified volume comprising the acts of the second special session of the Fourteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico, May 11 to 19, 1939; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WARREN: Committee on Accounts. House Resolution 429. Resolution to pay a gratuity to Belle G. Schmoyer, widow of the late Harry A. Schmoyer (Rept. No. 1790). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 8423. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Coast Guard," approved January 12, 1938; without amendment (Rept. No. 1799). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES of Texas: Committee of conference. S. 1955. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture (Rept. No. 1808). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 8916. A bill to reimpose the trust on certain lands allotted to Indians of the Crow Tribe, Montana; without amendment (Rept. No. 1809). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MASON: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 2856. A bill for the relief of Nicola Mordeglie; without amendment (Rept. No. 1791). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MASON: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 5417. A bill for the relief of Isaac Surmany; without amendment (Rept. No. 1792). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the ruler of the world's destiny, draw us closer, hour by hour, within the folds of the divine-human mystery of this Holy Week, with its consummate tragedy of Christ upon the cross, dying that we might live. Grant to each one of us the Christlike spirit with its youthful, noble ideals of service, with its genuine desire to help men and to give up many things for the common good, lest when life goes on, and the flame dies down, prudence usurp the throne of adventure, and mediocrity find complacency more comfortable than the challenge of a great emprise.

God of our fathers, help us, we beseech Thee, to realize that though men may be made heroic by the plaudits of a sympathetic crowd, it takes men of far finer stuff to be heroes amid the jeers of the very people whom they set out to serve with complete self-sacrifice.

Give us at once, dear Lord, the humility and the courage to follow only Thee in our ministry of service, even up to Calvary's hill, where we will wait and worship in the darkness till the shadows flee away and our world emerges into the light of love and peace.

In Thy holy name and for Thy sake, we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MINTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, March 18, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

GEORGE R. MORRIS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 166)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 263, "for the relief of George R. Morris."

It is the purpose of the bill to make a legislative determination of certain facts in respect to the claim for compensation filed by George R. Morris under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act on account of an injury sustained by him on November 9, 1936, while in the employ of the Works Progress Administration. The record in this case shows that the claim for compensation was duly filed with the Employees' Compensation Commission. The Commission, under existing law, has continuing jurisdiction over the claim and may at any time, on its own motion or on application, review its decision denying the benefits of the compensation law in this case and, in accordance with the facts found on such review, may award compensation or take such further action as may be authorized by law.

I am informed that the Commission, acting under this authority of law, has, since the enactment of this measure, reviewed the record in this case and has found that the decision denying compensation benefits on the ground that the injury occurred while the employee was proceeding to his work, failed to take into account the fact that he was in a pay status at the time. This decision, made under a mistake of fact, has accordingly been rescinded and the claim has been approved.

In view of such administrative action, approval of the bill appears unnecessary.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 18, 1940.

APPOINTMENT OF CERTAIN DEPUTY BUREAU HEADS UNDER CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide that assistant or deputy heads of certain bureaus in the Department of the Interior shall be appointed under the civil-service laws, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

AMERICAN-PHILIPPINE RELATIONS—WAR CONDITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of resolution No. 37, adopted by the Philippine National Assembly on September 6, 1939, and copy of a message of the President of the Philippines delivered on September 5 before the assembly, both documents relating to American-Philippine relations in the face of war conditions existing abroad, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, Keystone, S. Dak., transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Commission for the 6-month period from June 1, 1939, to December 31, 1939, inclusive, with related reports, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the sixtieth annual St. Patrick's Day celebration, held under the auspices of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, at Chicago, Ill., requesting that the United States use its good offices to effect the withdrawal of the British Army and Government from northeast Ireland so as to restore the territorial integrity of the Irish Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the board of directors of the Business Women's Legislative Council of California, favoring prompt adoption of the so-called equal rights amendment to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPLOSION IN THE CONSOLIDATED SCHOOL AT NEW LONDON, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace relative to the investigation by his Department of the explosion in the Consolidated School at New London, Tex.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 29, 1940.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: In reply to your letter of February 14 with reference to the investigation by this Department of the explosion in the Consolidated School at New London, Tex., your recollection that the investigation was made at the request of Governor Allred and other Texas officials, including Senator CONNALLY and yourself, is correct and in accord with the facts. That explosion occurred in a rural community school building and resulted in the death of 276 boys and girls and 17 teachers—a total of 293 lives lost.

The explosion occurred about 3:10 p. m. on March 18, 1937, and on March 19 the Department received two telegrams from Gov. James V. Allred asking for assistance in the investigation of the cause of the explosion, and further whether an expert from the Department could be sent by plane that afternoon to meet personal representatives of the Governor at Dallas. The Department complied with the request of Governor Allred and the other Texas officials, and sent Dr. David J. Price, Chief of the Chemical Engineering Research Division of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, to assist the Texas authorities in the investigation. State Fire Marshal Marvin Hall met Dr. Price in Dallas and they joined the military commission in charge of the State's investigation at New London. The Department specialist was able to assist the commission in determining the cause and circumstances under which the explosion occurred.

The findings of the Department, together with recommendations for precautionary measures for the prevention of similar occurrences, were sent in a telegraphic report to Governor Allred on March 29, 1937. Governor Allred wired immediately his appreciation of the report and assistance rendered by the Department. This preliminary report was inserted by you in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Tuesday, March 30, 1937, and appears on pages 3665 and 3667. Congressman Morgan G. Sanders, of the Third Texas District, also inserted this report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Thursday, April 1, 1937, pages 3877 and 3891.

The final complete report of the investigation by the Department was forwarded to Governor Allred on April 14, 1937, and copies were mailed at the same time to Vice President GARNER, Senator CONNALLY, and yourself. Upon receipt of this report, Governor Allred, under date of April 17, 1937, again expressed the "deep appreciation we feel of the fine assistance and cooperation your Department extended in the New London disaster." In his letter the Governor stated further that "the conclusions arrived at and suggestions made will be of great value in preventing any similar tragedies in the future and will help us immensely in preparing proper legislation."

The report was published in complete form as Senate Document No. 56 (75th Cong., 1st sess.). The report has been widely distributed and the Department feels that the precautionary measures developed and recommended as the result of its investigation have been instrumental in the prevention of explosions of this character in school buildings and similar institutions in rural communities.

With reference to your inquiry as to what effect the elimination by the House of the $30,000 for research on agricultural dust explosions and fire prevention will have, I wish to advise that it will mean the complete discontinuance of these investigations, for the Department will have neither the funds nor the authority to engage further in this research. This means the discontinuance of investigations relating to dust explosions and fires in grain elevators and other plants handling agricultural products, as well as the work to develop methods for providing protection against this hazard.

This research work is designed to provide authoritative information for the farmer on all phases of explosion and fire prevention and protection. It is the only agency in the Department where such information is available. If the Department is compelled to terminate this research work, it will not be possible to study the following major problems which we are being called upon to handle:

(1) Development of safety measures for prevention of dust explosions and fires in country (rural) grain-handling plants: The Department has accepted leadership in the work of a national committee recently organized to develop methods of providing protection against dust explosions and fires in country grain-handling plants. There are approximately 10,000 of these rural plants with a capital investment of more than $450,000,000. These combined country elevators and feed-grinding plants are largely owned and operated by farmers' cooperative organizations, and these groups look to the Department for help in reducing the dust-explosion hazard. The losses have been estimated at $3,000,000 annually. The work is being carried on in cooperation with the National Grain Trade Council, the Country Grain Elevator Association, the National Fire Protection Association, and other interested agencies.

(2) Development of methods for applying air suction for the removal of explosive dust from grain shipments: The Department is cooperating with the Terminal Grain Elevator Weighmasters' Association, Terminal Grain Elevator Merchants' Association, National Fire Protection Association, dust-collection equipment manufacturers, and other interested organizations in the development of suitable equipment, apparatus, and methods for applying air suction in grain-handling plants which will provide adequate protection against the dust-explosion hazard and at the same time guard against any abuses which might affect grain weights. Recent explosions in grain bins require immediate investigation to determine the possibility of such explosions being caused by electrification of dust clouds while grain is entering storage bins. Losses of life and property from dust explosions in terminal grain elevators cannot be reduced until these methods are developed. Fifty-six grain-elevator explosions have been reported since 1930. Forty persons were killed and 145 were injured in these explosions, and the property losses amounted to more than $7,500,000. These 56 explosions were approximately 36 percent of the total number of explosions reported during that period.

(3) Development of effective grounding system for fire prevention in all-metal cotton-ginning plants: The demands on the Department for information on grounding systems for the removal of static electricity from all-metal cotton gins in all-metal buildings have emphasized the urgent need for additional work on fire prevention in cotton-ginning operations, particularly the dry regions of Texas, Oklahoma, and the Southwest.

(4) Development of effective measures for protection of firemen against dust explosions during fire-fighting operations in plants handling agricultural products: Firemen in rural districts are calling upon the Department for help in developing farm and rural fire departments and for advice and assistance in fighting fire during the handling and storage of farm products.

The International Association of Fire Fighters, the International Association of Fire Chiefs, State associations of volunteer and rural firemen, and many other fire-fighting organizations are continually calling upon the Department for assistance, instruction, and advice on the development and adoption of safe methods of fire fighting where the dust-explosion possibilities are a serious hazard to firemen. Many firemen have been killed or seriously injured from explosions while engaged in fighting fires in plants handling agricultural products.

I hope this will answer your inquiries, both as to the effect which the House action will have on this research work and also give you the facts that resulted in the Department's investigation of the New London school explosion. Copies of the complete correspondence are on file and will be sent you if you desire.

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6751) to repeal certain laws with respect to manifests and vessel permits, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1328) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 231) favoring the deletion from the Sixteenth Census population schedule of inquiries Nos. 32 and 33, relating to compensation received (submitted by Mr. TOBEY on February 7, 1940), reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1329) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 3620. A bill to provide for Federal cooperation with the States in the development of aircraft landing areas adequate to provide for the national defense, the postal service, and civil aeronautics; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 3621. A bill to provide for reimbursing the city of Hoboken, N. J., for the loss of taxes on certain property owned by the United States and known as the Hoboken Terminal; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 3622. A bill authorizing the issuance of patents in fee to Bert Kennerly for land allotted to him on the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

S. 3623. A bill to amend the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 2194), and for other purposes; and

S. 3624. A bill authorizing a per capita payment of $12.50 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

S. 3625. A bill for the relief of W. J. Hance; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GREEN:

S. 3626. A bill for the relief of Daniel B. Golden; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DOWNEY:

S. 3627. A bill to amend the Panama Canal Act; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

S. 3628. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Ben White, Arch Robinson, Lee Wells, W. S. Wells, A. J. McLaren, A. D. Barkelew, Oscar Clayton, R. L. Culpepper, W. B. Edwards, the estate of John McLaren, the estate of C. E. Wells, and the estate of Theodore Bowen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 3629. A bill to provide for the use of 20 percent of the grazing receipts from national forests for the making of range improvements within such forests; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(Mr. LODGE introduced Senate bill 3630, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 3631. A bill authorizing the naturalization of Alvina Pryor and James F. Pryor; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 3632. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Fort Caroline National Monument in Duval County, Fla.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 3633. A bill to amend section 24e, National Defense Act, as amended, so as to eliminate the requirement of 2 years' practice for eligibility for appointment in the Dental Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR (for himself, Mr. STEWART, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. RUSSELL):

S. 3634. A bill to provide for flood-protection works at Chattanooga, Tenn., and Rossville, Ga.; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and a joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 952. An act for the relief of Indians who have paid taxes on allotted lands for which patents in fee were issued without application by or consent of the allottees and subsequently canceled, and for the reimbursement of public subdivisions by whom judgments for such claims have been paid;

H. R. 5477. An act for the benefit of the Indians of the Crow Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes;

H. R. 8024. An act to provide for the leasing of restricted allotments of deceased Indians in certain circumstances, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8499. An act relating to adoption of minors by Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 1788. An act to confirm title to certain railroad lands located in the county of Kern, State of California; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 6767. An act to provide additional compensation for employees killed or injured while performing work of a hazardous nature incident to law-enforcement activity, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

H. R. 7643. An act to facilitate and simplify national-forest administration; to the calendar.

H. R. 8450. An act to extend for 5 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and land bank commissioner loans; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H. R. 8537. An act to provide for the enlargement of the Coast Guard depot at Seattle, Wash., and for the establishment of a Coast Guard servicing base at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 8540. An act to authorize an increase in the White House police force; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 7421. An act to provide for terms of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas at Fayetteville;

H. R. 7737. An act to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section thereto, designated as section 266a, to provide for intervention by States in certain cases involving the validity of the exercise of any power by the United States, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8702. An act to amend the Judicial Code with respect to the continuation of grand juries to finish investigations;

H. R. 8822. An act to extend original jurisdiction to district courts in civil suits between citizens of the District of Columbia, the Territories of Hawaii or Alaska, and any State or Territory; and

H. J. Res. 437. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CLARK of Idaho submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the control of predatory animals and injurious rodents from $675,000 to $1,000,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DOWNEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 45, line 14, in lieu of the figure "$2,000,000", proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment, insert the figure "$3,000,000."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 83, line 12, strike out "$85,000,000" and insert "$113,000,000."

Mr. MEAD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1941, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

On page 62, line 13, strike out "$725,000" and insert "$825,000."

And—

On page 64, line 14, strike out "$1,130,000" and insert "$1,205,000."

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. OVERTON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. OVERTON to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 64, line 14, after "$1,130,000", insert a comma and the following: "of which $5,000 shall be available for the maintenance of a market news service at New Orleans, La."

Mr. BILBO (for himself and Mr. LEE) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them jointly to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amend the paragraph entitled "Parity payments", on page 82, by striking out lines 16 to 25, and on page 85, strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive, and insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco, pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $607,000,000, which sum shall be apportioned to these commodities in proportion to the amount by which each fails to reach the parity income: Provided, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm-acreage allotment established for the commodity under the agricultural conservation program."

FINANCIAL AND OTHER DATA PERTAINING TO SUNDRY GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES AND CORPORATIONS

Mr. BYRD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 247), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the report of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the financial condition and operations of certain corporations and agencies of the Government, transmitted to the Senate on February 15, 1940, in response to Senate Resolution 150, agreed to June 27, 1939, be printed as a Senate document, and that —— additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

PUNISHMENT FOR ESPIONAGE AND OTHER CRIMES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1398) to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act, which were, to strike out all of sections 1 and 2 and insert:

That section 1 of title I of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

On page 2, line 24, to strike out "3" and insert "2"; on page 3, lines 4 and 5, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on the same page, line 7, to strike out "4" and insert "3"; on the same page, lines 11 and 12, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on the same page, line 18, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on pages 3 and 4, to strike out all of section 5; on page 4, line 3, to strike out "6" and insert "4"; on the same page, line 7, to strike out "not less than 10 years and"; on the same page, line 10, to strike out "7" and insert "5"; on the same page, line 14, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on the same page, line 17, to strike out "8" and insert "6"; on the same page, line 22, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on the same page, line 25, to strike out "9" and insert "7"; on page 5, line 4, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on the same page, line 7, to strike out "10" and insert "8"; on the same page, line 11, to strike out "not less than 5 years and"; on the same page, line 14, to strike out "11" and insert "9"; and on the same page, line 18, to strike out "not less than 5 years and."

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills, asked conferences with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conferences:

H. R. 3481. An act for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy; and

H. R. 4126. An act for the relief of Warren Zimmerman.

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC AMERICA

[Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the text of a speech by Senator BRIDGES at a luncheon meeting of the Wilmington Rotary Club, Hotel du Pont, Wilmington, Del., Thursday, March 14, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SILVER PURCHASE ACT

[Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Journal of Commerce of March 19, 1940, relative to the Silver Purchase Act, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE FARM PROBLEM—ARTICLES BY ROGER W. BABSON AND MRS. BEN OHNSTAD

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Roger W. Babson entitled "Instead of Handouts, United States Should Encourage Families to Move to Farms," and an article by Mrs. Ben Ohnstad entitled "Anyone Can Go Back to Eden," which appear in the Appendix.]

THE CENSUS OF 1940

[Mr. TOBEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD various articles, a letter, and an editorial bearing on the census matter, which appear in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS ON BRITISH DEMANDS

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by William Philip Simms entitled "Britain's Demands," which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE FROM FORTUNE MAGAZINE ON WESTERN FREIGHT RATES

[Mr. SCHWELLENBACH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article on the subject of western freight rates, published in Fortune Magazine for February 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair state the parliamentary situation? The unfinished business is the agricultural appropriation bill, the formal reading of which has been dispensed with by unanimous consent. No committee amendment has yet been stated. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to address himself to the bill or to the first committee amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Simply to one part of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the subject of parity income of farmers is the paramount question involved in the pending appropriation bill. The parity objective has received very earnest consideration since the present administration went into power on March 4, 1933. Different ways of finally reaching the desired result have been put into operation. Considerable success has been achieved, but much remains yet to be done in order to place more than one-third of our total population on a basis of economic justice with the people engaged in other activities.

I know that most, if not all, Senators are familiar with section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. It provides for parity payments to farmers "if and when appropriations are made therefor." As it contains the first basic authorization for parity-payment appropriations, I am going to quote section 303. It is as follows:

> If and when appropriations are made therefor, the Secretary is authorized and directed to make payments to producers of corn, wheat, cotton, rice, or tobacco on their normal production of such commodities in amounts which, together with the proceeds thereof, will provide a return to such producers which is as nearly equal to parity price as the funds so made available will permit. All funds available for such payments with respect to these commodities shall, unless otherwise provided by law, be apportioned to these commodities in proportion to the amount by which each fails to reach the parity income. Such payments shall be in addition to and not in substitution for any other payments authorized by law.

Section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 defines "parity" and "parity income" as follows:

> Parity as applied to prices for any agricultural commodity shall be that price for the commodity which will give to the commodity a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of such commodity in the base period. The base period, except for tobacco, is the period of August 1909 to July 1914.
> Parity as applied to income for agriculture shall be that per capita net income of individuals on farms from farming operations that bears to the per capita net income of individuals not on farms the same relation as prevailed during the period from August 1909 to July 1914.

What is meant by net income from farming operations? It means income available for living, income that is left after fertilizer, feed, taxes, interest, and the ordinary business expenses of a farm are excluded. By deducting these ordinary expenses we determine the net income from agriculture and compare it to nonfarm income. Agriculture's share of the total income must be the same, comparatively speaking, that it was in the 1909–14 period, if farmers are to get parity income.

I recently heard a comparison which illustrates parity income very well. The net income from farming operations and the nonfarm income were compared to a pie. To receive parity income, agriculture's share of the pie must be as large by comparison with the whole pie as it was in the pre-war period.

We use the 1909–14 period as a yardstick for measuring parity prices and income. So far as we have been able to determine, this was a period when farm prices and income were balanced with other prices and income. Farm commodities flowed freely to the cities and manufactured goods flowed freely to the farm. Workingmen had jobs. It was a stable and prosperous period, for agriculture was on a plane of economic equality with labor and industry.

After the first World War farm prices fell but other prices did not. The prices of manufactured goods, the wages of labor, taxes, interest, debt charges, and other things remained high. The farmer has been trying to get back on an even footing with other groups since then, and we have been trying to help him.

From the standpoint of farm prices and farm income there is no question about the need for parity payments. In the calendar year 1939, for example, the farmers' incomes fell $1,600,000,000, or 25 percent below parity income. This failure on the part of agriculture to get its fair share of the annual national income is a habitual one. The last time farmers got parity income was away back in 1919. Agriculture's cumulative deficit has grown each year. At the end of 1939 farmers' incomes, over a 20-year period, had fallen $35,000,000,000 below parity income.

The question before us is not the restoration of that deficit; we are not even considering an appropriation large enough to give agriculture parity income in 1941. What we are discussing here is whether to appropriate enough money to raise the income of the producers of five basic commodities to 75 percent of parity.

The men who grow cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, and rice do not grow these crops exclusively. Many of these producers are dairy farmers, fruit farmers, truck farmers, livestock producers, poultry producers, and so on through the list. By a conservative estimate, 80 percent of the Nation's farmers grow one or more of the five crops I have mentioned. The overwhelming majority of the farmers of the country have a direct interest in parity payments. Furthermore, the producers of the basic commodities are the farmers who make most of the sacrifices that are required by the soil-conservation and marketing programs practiced for the last 5 or 6 years. For example, in the 6 years ending with 1932, the acreage of cotton in the United States averaged 40,174,000 acres. For the 6 years ending in 1939, cotton acreage averaged 27,655,000 acres, a reduction of 31 percent. The acreage in 1939 was 40 percent below the pre-1932 average.

The sacrifice made by the producers of basic commodities, the unusual difficulties facing them because of the export situation, and the importance of these growers in the general scheme of agriculture are good reasons for parity payments. The welfare of the producers of the five basic crops is of sufficient importance to us all to make it important that every effort should be made to assure them a fair and adequate income. On that fact we are all agreed.

What of the income from the five basic commodities named in the act? Measured in terms of pre-war purchasing power, the deficit in the income from these products in 1939 amounted to $450,000,000, or more than double the $212,000,000 appropriated for parity payments for the 1939 crop year. The total deficiency in income from sales of corn, wheat, cotton, rice, and tobacco in the last 10 years has been about $5,600,000,000.

For the information of the Senate, I am submitting for the RECORD a table showing the annual income received by farmers in the years from 1924 as compared to parity income, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Farm income available for living, parity income, and deficiency in available farm income, United States

Year	Available farm income	Ratio available farm income to parity [1]	Parity farm income [2]	Deficiency in available income [3]
1910–14	$4,518,000,000	100.0	$4,518,000,000
1924–29	6,966,000,000	84.2	8,271,000,000	−$1,305,000,000

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, what about the prospects for 1941? It will be argued, and justifiably so, that the Congress cannot be expected to appropriate money to compensate agriculture for failure to get its fair share of the national income in past years. What we are concerned with is the need for parity payments now.

Farm prices rose during the last World War. Many people apparently feel the pattern will be repeated in this war. This memory of wartime high prices is in line with the fortunate tendency of human beings to remember pleasant experiences and to forget the unpleasant. The first effect of the first World War on farm prices was depressing. In 1915 the prices of farm commodities in the United States were lower, on the average, than they were in 1914. Furthermore, the farm situation in 1914 and the farm situation in 1939 were entirely different.

The President, among others, apparently thought that the war in Europe might raise farm prices to the point where parity payments would not be necessary. This, I wish to emphasize, is responsible more than any other factor for the President's failure to include provision for parity payments in the Budget. As my authority for that statement I invite attention to the Budget message of the President. I find the Chief Executive's language very significant, and if words mean anything, it disposes of the claim in some quarters that the President opposes parity payments. On the other hand, he says, and says clearly, that they may have to be appropriated. Let me quote just what the President said:

> Under the broad heading of agricultural programs I have included agricultural adjustment benefits, the surplus removal program and parity payments arising from 1940 appropriations.
> Despite a gratifying general increase in farm income, agriculture is still not receiving its proper share of the national income. I am, therefore, proposing to continue substantially undiminished the various agricultural programs.
> I have not, however, included estimates for new appropriations for parity payments in 1941. I am influenced by the hope that next year's crops can be sold by their producers for at least 75 percent of parity. I do not suggest in any way abandonment of the policy of parity payments heretofore adopted, and future events may call for some appropriation to this end. I note, however, in passing that the Congress has failed to make any provision for the financing of these payments already made or obligated for 1938 and 1939 crops.

Again, if language means anything, the President not only does not reject the principle of parity payments, but he flatly states that "future events may call for some appropriation to this end." Nor can I find in his language anything which indicates that the President will insist upon additional taxes to raise parity payments, although the President's wishes in this matter are well known.

What, then, are the prospects of the coming of the future events mentioned by Mr. Roosevelt?

The following table shows comparative prices of the basic commodities as of August 15, 1939, September 15, 1939, and February 15, 1940.

Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Compiled from records of the Agricultural Marketing Service.

Mr. President, the war began on September 3, and in February farm prices, on the whole, were only 3 percent higher than they were as of September 15. Realities have cooled the speculative fever which followed the beginning of the war. On March 4 the Bureau of Agricultural Economics said flatly that the European war had reduced the export demand for farm products. Britain and France are going to spend their cash for the products they need most. These products are industrial products, munitions, airplanes, and other implements of war. The Allies can buy farm products elsewhere. They can exchange their manufactured goods for farm products in other countries. It is to their advantage to trade with the dominions, and to conserve their exchange here for airplanes and munitions. The war has already greatly reduced exports of tobacco and fruits.

Since the outbreak of war, the price of wheat has advanced sharply. We need to go no further, however, than unfavorable crop conditions in this country, and the effect of the Triple A programs themselves, to discover major reasons for the increases. Barring the most unusual conditions, there is little likelihood of a wheat shortage in this country or elsewhere in the world. The world supplies of wheat for 1939 far exceed anything known in 1914. The total world supply is estimated to be one thousand eight hundred million bushels larger than in 1914, while world consumption is only about 900,000,000 bushels larger.

I am profoundly disturbed by the potential effect of the war upon our agricultural exports. If the adverse trend in industry continues, the agricultural problem will be further complicated. In the face of declining industrial activity and decreased exports, to refuse parity payments to farmers would be like throwing away life preservers during a storm at sea.

As of February 15 last, the farm price of cotton was 9.97 cents per pound, while 75 percent of parity price was 11.90 cents a pound. With the exception of tobacco, every basic commodity was below 75 percent of parity. Despite sharp rises, wheat lacked eight-tenths of a cent per bushel of bringing three-fourths of parity. I have here a table which shows this situation, and the payments which would have been required to bring 75 percent on the 1939 production. I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Estimated parity payments required to bring total returns from basic commodities to what they would be if farm prices were 75 percent of parity [1]

[1] Prices of all types of tobacco are above 75 percent of parity. In this computation it seems best to use most recent prices as indicative of what prices may be in 1940-41. Production in 1939 was used, in absence of definite indications of 1940 production. Actual amounts required, therefore, may be greater or less than indicated.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want to interrupt the continuity of the Senator's thought, but I call attention to the fact that the statement has been made repeatedly that the parity payments would not be made until the latter part of the summer of 1941, and the question has been asked why we are making the appropriation at this time. The Senator perhaps is going to answer that question later on.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; but I shall be glad to answer it now.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wanted the Senator to answer that question. I am one of the committee who voted on this matter, but I think the Senator is so conversant with the subject that it would be possible for him to handle it in his own time and in his own way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are two purposes for the parity payments. One is to secure as full cooperation as possible in the programs which in a way are designed to adjust production to the market demand, so that the extent of the cooperation in these programs is always a matter of the very highest importance. That is one purpose or reason. The second, however, and more important reason, is that this amendment, as all previous parity payment provisions and price adjustment provisions have done, requires the participants in the parity payments to comply this year with the agricultural adjustment program.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it not true that parenthetically in his statement there come this thought, that the payments must be assured in order to have those who comply entirely insured with respect to the outcome of their compliance?

Mr. BANKHEAD. To have them what?

Mr. McCARRAN. To have them entirely insured. In other words, if the farmers of the country comply with the program, they must begin to comply at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is absolutely essential, in order that there be complete compliance, that the program be made out now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. Here is an offer on the part of the Government that if the farmers comply the parity payments will be made.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is familiar with the fact that winter wheat planted this year, in 1940, will not be harvested until 1941, next year. It is absolutely essential that compliance with the program be had this year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say that it is also absolutely essential with respect to all the other crops that must be planted now, in the spring.

Mr. HATCH. Yes. I do not mean to say that the other crops are not essential, but I pointed out winter wheat to illustrate the point the Senator made.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think I can add anything to the Senator's statement. I merely wish to point out, as I undertook to do yesterday, that no farmer, particularly a wheat farmer, would have any idea where he stood in respect to parity payments, unless Congress took action in respect thereto in this bill, and that the failure to make the appropriation now, if the Congress intends to make it at all, would absolutely disrupt the compliance with the farm program. If no appropriation has been made, the farmer planting winter wheat, as suggested by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], will attempt to gamble with the market. He may fear that wheat prices will be down next year. In that event he may plant more acreage to make up the reduction in his income due to decreased prices resulting from more production. As a matter of fact, it was opinion of that kind that brought into being the huge surpluses that have been a constant problem to the Congress since 1931 and 1932.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is not the situation expressed in this way, that in order to carry out the program the Government may now say, "You carry out the program, and if we can get an appropriation later on we will carry on our end of the bargain"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It will be that way unless the money is appropriated now. And I call attention of the Senate to one of the crops, cotton. Farmers have already planted crops in some parts of the country, but certainly they are approaching the planting season now, and unless this appropriation is known to be available there will be an encouragement to producers to stay outside of the program, and in that way break down the effectiveness of the program, so it is highly important to make known now to all producers who participate in these payments that they are available; not may be, but are available.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope I did not interrupt the Senator's thought by my questions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me for that purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wanted the Senator to explain the matter because I knew that he was a master of the subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator, and I am glad he brought the subject up, because I had not intended to deal with that specific phase of it.

The average per capita farm income available for living—that is, the income available for each person on farms in the 1909–14 period—was $140. By farm income available for living I mean the income left after the ordinary business expenses of operating the farm are paid. Each person on farms in the 1909–14 period had approximately $140 to spend for clothing, food, amusement, schooling, and all the many things for which money can properly be spent. Certainly, this sum is not very large, and this fact should be kept in mind when persons begin to talk about the "golden age of agriculture," and to hint that farmers were better off in 1909–14 than they deserved to be. Farmers were well off only by comparison with their condition most of the time since then.

After the World War unorganized farmers faced an organized world. Industry organized to protect itself through tariffs and in some instances through monopolies. Labor organized to increase wages and decrease working hours. This organization was made possible by the aid of the Federal Government. For example, there might be a furor while the tariffs were being raised, but once the new duties went into effect, they worked more quietly than any well-oiled machine. The public, as a whole, tended to forget about the tariffs, but the effects of the duties continued just the same.

Our capitalistic economy depends for its very existence upon balance—balance between the various groups of our population. If through tariffs and other legislation, Government favors industry and labor at the expense of the farmer, Government eventually must help the farmer too. Otherwise we set up a series of disturbances that can be just as disastrous in their effects as interferences with circulation in the human body. If we clog the channels of trade through governmental favoritism to some groups, we tend to cripple the country. We cause arthritis of the economic system.

I do not think there is the slightest doubt that tariffs cost farmers money, or that other legislation which increases distribution, transportation, and labor costs takes money out of the farmers' pockets. If the Government takes money unjustly out of farmers' pockets, it is only fair that the Government should put that money back.

With Government payments included, farm incomes over the past 5 years averaged $166 for each person living on farms. As Senators have seen, this compares with $140 per person for the 5 years prior to the World War.

At first glance this might seem to contradict our statements about farmer difficulties. Let us look then for a moment at the income of the nonfarm population. During the past 5 years it averaged $625 per person, as compared to an average of only $408 in the period before the first World War. The income of people not on farms, even if we include the unemployed, has been averaging 50 percent higher than it did in the prewar period. Farm income has been running only about 20 percent greater.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator says there was $166 income for every person living on a farm, the Senator does not mean by that $166 per family, does he?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I mean the individual.

Mr. NORRIS. If a farmer had five members in his family it would mean that each member of the family had, under that average, $166?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. During what period was that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the past 5 years.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the average in the last 5 years?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and that includes Government benefit payments, price-adjustment payments, and soil-conservation payments, and originally the land-rental payments.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean that this $166 constitutes entirely the Government payments of one sort or another?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; that is the total. That included all of his earnings and Government payments.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I understood. Mr. President, my interest was aroused by the statement of the Senator from Alabama. I am not questioning the figures the Senator has given.

I do not question that the figures were accurately given from whatever source the Senator obtained them in the Agricultural Department. However, it is possible, as suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], that there ought to be some explanation for what appears to me on the face of it to be an inaccuracy. Can the Senator tell whether or not the figures he has given represent the net income after all expenses have been paid?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is, the business expenses of operating the farm?

Mr. NORRIS. Including taxes, and so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and fertilizer.

Mr. NORRIS. After they had all been deducted?

Mr. BANKHEAD. These figures constitute the net income. The factors mentioned by the Senator are deducted.

During the past 5 years the income of the nonfarm population amounted to $625 per person on the same basis of calculation, a surprising figure, which shows how very low is the income of the farmer in comparison with the industrial, commercial, and business population of the country.

The farmer is in the position of a man whose salary has increased just a little, while his rent, fuel, taxes, interest, and all living expenses have gone sky high.

Approximately $15 of the income of each person on farms during the past 5 years has come from Government payments. This is called a subsidy. It is a pitiful one by comparison with farmer needs, and I call attention to the fact that the farmers were not the first group to receive Federal subsidies out of the Treasury. They were among the last.

What are some of these other subsidies? The tariff, of course. The amount is not definitely ascertainable, but it is staggering. The Government pays approximately $8,000,000 in subsidies to the Post Office Air Mail Service, around thirty to forty million dollars a year on subsidies to ocean shipping, and an indirect subsidy of around $87,000,000 a year through carrying second-class mail below its cost. We aid the several transportation industries in many ways. Public costs of operating air fields and airways amount to $50,000,000 a year. Expenditures for maintenance and interest on public investment on waterways run $100,000,000 a year. Federal and State expenditures for construction and maintenance of roads are $1,200,000,000 a year. The original construction of many railroads was aided by the Federal Government, both in grants of land along the right-of-way, and in some cases large grants in cash.

The relative size of some of these subsidies can be realized when we divide the subsidies to each industry by the number of persons employed in each. Here are a few averages for recent years: Aircraft engaged in air mail received $448 for each employee. The construction and operation of ocean shipping received $633 for each employee. Manufacturing as a whole probably received through tariffs $213 per employee. But farmers received only $46 per farm worker.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, anyone could compute the total, but I think it would be well for the Senator to insert in his remarks at this point the aggregate of all these other subsidies.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not totaled them. I have only enumerated them. However, I shall follow the Senator's suggestion and ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the total of the subsidies.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include as part of my remarks the total of the subsidies which I have listed in my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the totals may be inserted in the RECORD.

The totals are as follows:

Subsidies—annually
Air Mail Service	$8,000,000
Ocean shipping, $30,000,000 to	40,000,000
Second-class mail	87,000,000
Public costs of operating air fields and airways	50,000,000
Expenditures for maintenance and interest on public investment on waterways	100,000,000
Federal and State expenditures for roads	1,200,000,000
Total	1,485,000,000

Farmers have received only $46 per farm worker during recent years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, we have heard statements about the farmers' plight many times, and perhaps they have grown a bit wearisome with repetition. It is hard to reduce it to specific terms, to things that all of us can readily understand. The Secretary of Agriculture, in a recent appearance before the Senate Appropriations Committee, used some effective illustrations to show what has happened to the farmer. He compared prices for some of the things that farmers buy to the prices they paid in 1913. He made comparisons by using a 1913 and a 1940 Sears, Roebuck catalog. I shall quote a portion of the Secretary's statement. This is what he said:

Work shirts could be ordered from the 1913 catalog for an average price of 57 cents. The average price in the 1940 catalog is 73 cents, an increase of 28 percent. At January 15 prices in 1913 it took 4.7 pounds of cotton to buy a work shirt. The cost now is the equivalent of 7.2 pounds of cotton, based on January 15 prices, or 53 percent more than in 1913. The cost of bib overalls has increased 39 percent in dollars and cents. In terms of cotton, the cost has increased from 5.8 pounds to 9.6 pounds, or 66 percent.

In each of these examples I have tried to pick articles that are essentially the same now as in 1913. Common nails haven't changed much, if any, since 1913, but the price has gone up 74 percent. At January 15 prices for hogs in 1913 it took 31 pounds of hogs to buy 100 pounds of 8-penny nails. But at January 15 prices in 1940, in took 70 pounds of hogs to buy 100 pounds of 8-penny nails, an increase of 126 percent.

The quality of an ordinary 4-pound ax probably is no better now than in 1913 but the price has almost doubled, arising from 96 cents to $1.89—an increase of 97 percent. The amount of wheat required in exchange for a 4-pound ax has increased from 1.2 bushels to 2.2 bushels—or almost double what it was 27 years ago.

The cost of a 60-tooth, 2-section spike-tooth harrow in 1913 was $10.06, but the cost is now $19.75—an increase of 96 percent. At January 15 prices for wheat in 1913 it took 12.9 bushels to buy a spike-tooth harrow. At January 15 prices in 1940 it took 23.4 bushels of wheat to buy one, or 80 percent more.

Corn planters are essentially the same now as in 1913, but the price has gone up from $31.25 to $65.95—an increase of 111 percent. The important point for the corn producer is the amount of corn it takes to buy a corn planter. In 1913 it took 63 bushels of corn to buy a two-row, check planter. Today it takes 124 bushels. Thus the real price to the corn producer is now double what it was in 1913. At January 15 prices this year it took 124 bushels of corn to buy a two-row corn planter.

In 1913, a long-handled round-point shovel could be purchased for 48 cents. The cheapest shovel of this type quoted in the 1940 catalog is for sale at 79 cents, an increase of 65 percent. Twenty-seven years ago a three-tine hay fork could be bought for 39 cents. A similar fork today costs 79 cents, or 103 percent more.

That is the story, told in terms of harrows, nails, shirts, axes, shovels, and pitchforks. The farmer receives less now for what he sells than he did in 1913. He pays more for the things he buys.

An adverse balance of trade, if repeated over a long period of time, will ruin any individual, any group, or any nation. No wonder that for every farm foreclosure in the 1910–14 period, approximately six were foreclosed in the early 1930's.

Distribution and processing costs took 47 cents of every dollar spent for food in 1913; they took 59 cents of every dollar in 1939. Legislation for labor and labor organizations has become so effective that union wage scales are above parity as compared with farm-commodity prices. The hourly wage of a carpenter in 1913 averaged 69 cents; it now averages $1.66. A plumber received an average of about 57 cents an hour in 1913; he now averages about $1.52 an hour.

I am not criticizing wage increases. I am glad that these groups of industrial workers have improved the volume of their income. Perhaps there are justifications for increases in distribution costs. I am simply trying to show how the farmer lagged behind—so far behind that Government had to step in to keep our economic system on a stable and democratic basis.

Unorganized, the farmer was as helpless before compact and organized groups as the Poles were before the trained precision and massed striking power of German militarism. It is all very well to talk about rugged individualism and the God-given right of the farmer to be left alone. The truth is that Government did not leave him alone. As the result of adverse legislation and of inaction, his rugged individualism became ragged individualism.

Since 1933, the Government has paid out slightly more than $3,000,000,000 in conservation and benefit payments to farmers. One billion of that amount was collected in processing taxes on their own commodities. These payments have been termed subsidies. What about the subsidies the farmers have given the rest of the country? If farmers do not receive their fair share of the national income, if they have to sell at prices below the cost of production, someone is being subsidized; and that someone certainly is not the farmer. The farmers have produced abundantly, too. There has not been a day in the past quarter of a century when supplies of food in the United States were not ample. Even though farmers received much less than parity prices and parity income, they never went on strike. The farmers received parity in the 1909–14 period; they received more than parity in the next 4 years and paid for those 4 good years with 20 bad ones. During this period they have clothed and fed the Nation, and have done it without adequate compensation. This has been equivalent to a farmer subsidy for the rest of the Nation.

In the past 10 years, if farmers' prices had been in line with prices received by other groups, they would have received $20,000,000,000 more than they reecived.

If anyone wants any proof of the interdependence of city and country, the giddy twenties and the dismal early thirties should furnish the necessary evidence. The farmers, with 25 percent of the population, conduct the largest single industry. Twenty billion dollars in additional puchasing power for farmers during the past 10 years might well have been the difference between chronic unemployment and a job for everyone wanting to work.

Suggestions have come from unfriendly sources that the farmers' demand for parity payments is proof that the agricultural programs have failed.

Let me say emphatically that the programs have not failed; but let me say just as emphatically that they will fail unless we appropriate enough money to make them effective. However sound in principle, farm programs without money to make them operative are just as useless as an automobile without gasoline.

Out of the efforts to adjust burdensome surpluses and raise farmer income grew another great objective—the conservation of our soil. When we looked closely at our farms, we found both the land and the persons living upon it in a bad state. Now, for the first time, we are making a concerted national effort to preserve the most basic resource we have—the land. So popular is this part of the program that everybody claims it.

Yet, important as soil conservation may be, income conservation is important, too. If farmers had not been hard pressed for cash, many of them would have treated their land better. They would not have abused it by growing soil-depleting row crops year after year. More farmers would have been owners and would have had a bigger stake in caring for the soil.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator referred to parity payments. Does the Senator conceive that it is possible for the Senate to refuse to make the parity appropriations contained in the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think there is any possible chance of the Senate not doing so. The only reason I am making this statement is for the benefit of the RECORD and the information of others who are probably not as well informed as we are. I doubt if there will be more than 25 votes in the Senate against the parity payment amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I had assumed, of course, that the Senate would pass the parity payment amendment contained in the bill, because otherwise it would certainly fail to measure up to its obligations and duties.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I feel sure that the Senator's assumption is based upon solid ground.

The lack of parity payments next year is bound to weaken these farm programs. The total payment to wheat farmers in 1940 is estimated at 19 cents a bushel on the normal yield of the acreage allotments. For example, if a participating farmer had an allotment of 50 acres with an average yield of 10 bushels an acre, he would get a payment equal to 50 acres times 10 bushels times 19 cents, or $95. Without parity payments next year, his total payment next year is estimated at 9 cents a bushel, or less than half his payment this year. In other words, his payment will be confined to what he receives from the soil-conservation program. Under these circumstances, a good many wheat farmers are likely to decide that they can make more money out of the program than they can in it.

Without parity payments next year, the payments for cotton will be only about half what they are this year. The payments for corn will be reduced about 5 cents a bushel; payments for rice would be reduced; and this year, for the first time since 1933, tobacco growers may need parity payments. Tobacco growers—flue-cured growers in particular—face a discouraging prospect.

The triple-A programs can be successful only if there is enough farmer participation to make them effective. At the outset of these programs, the decision was made to pay farmers who took part in them. This decision was a wise and necessary one. Money still is necessary if farmers are to participate freely and fully in these programs.

What about the effect of an ineffective farm program upon the rest of our economy? Would we save any money by failing to appropriate for parity payments or for other essential items in the agricultural appropriation bill? Our experience has been that no money spent in the recovery effort has done more good than the funds spent on these farm programs. In the early 1930's every drop of $100 in farm income was accompanied by a drop of $80 in rural retail sales. Every increase in farm income, after the farm programs began, was accompanied by an increase of $74 in rural retail sales. Factory pay rolls and farm income rise and fall together. Estimates have been made in well-informed circles that every dollar added to farm income means an additional dollar for the factory worker and $7 for the Nation as a whole.

Businessmen in the farming areas do not have to be cited figures and statistics about the effects of increased rural buying power. They know. Rain during a drought was never more welcome than the payments and price advances after these programs began in 1933.

Industrial areas benefit, too. A study by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of half a million freight waybills and waybill abstracts shows in a striking manner what happens when farmer purchasing power is restored. The study compares the year ending June 30, 1933, with the year ending June 30, 1934, and the succeeding year. So far as most farmers were concerned, recovery did not begin until after June 30, 1933. Farm prices had risen but few farmers had anything to sell.

The study covers carlot shipments from 16 Northern and Eastern States to the principal agricultural areas—the Southeast, the Southwest, and the Northwest.

The shipments originated on more than 125 railroads operating in the North and East. I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD, following my speech, statements and table showing the increases in industrial shipments during the period I have described.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statement has been made that farmers would not continue to pile up surpluses after prices fell, and that adjustment would become automatic. Let me cite Senate Document No. 13 for the Seventy-fourth Congress. This is a study by Gardiner C. Means on Industrial Prices and Their Relative Inflexibility. The following table tells the relation of price drop and production drop for 10 major industries from 1929 to the spring of 1933.

I ask to have the table printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

	Percent drop in prices	Percent drop in production
Agricultural implements	6	80
Motor vehicles	16	80
Cement	18	65
Iron and steel	20	83
Auto tires	33	70
Textile products	45	30
Food products	49	14
Leather	50	20
Petroleum	56	20
Agricultural commodities	63	6

Mr. BANKHEAD. What did the farmers buy when they got money? Apparently, first of all, they bought farm machinery. Shipments of farm implements increased 160.9 percent in the year ending June 30, 1934, and in the next year the shipments increased 309.3 as compared to the year ending June 30, 1933. Tractors and tractor parts gained by 111.3 percent in the second year and 302.9 in the third year. Shipment of steel fence posts increased from 145.9 percent in the year 1934 to 197.3 percent in the year 1935.

Shipments of refrigerators increased 82.4 percent in the year 1934, and they jumped to 259.6 percent in the year 1935. Plumbing fixtures and fittings increased 23.8 percent in the year 1934 and 105.1 in the year 1935. Shipments of sewing machines increased 445 percent in the year 1934 and 1,340 percent in the year ending June 30, 1935, as compared to 1933. Farm housewives had been needing sewing machines, and needing them badly, but they could not buy them until times got better, until the recovery began.

A decrease in farm purchasing power means a decrease in the purchases of farm implements, automobiles, tractors, clothing, radios, sewing machines, fencing, books—all the thousands of articles made in our factories. That every dollar added to farm income means several dollars added to the national income is indicated by the close relationship between farm income and factory pay rolls and the relationship between farm income and the national income.

Any action which saves one dollar and loses several is not true economy.

I am for economy. I want to balance the Budget. But I cannot see how the Budget can be balanced by reducing farm income and weakening farm programs, and thereby reducing the purchasing power of millions of our people.

This country spent about $1,162,000,000 for national defense in 1939; an estimated $1,604,000,000 will be spent in 1940; and the estimates for 1941 are almost $2,000,000,000.

I am for national defense; but my definition of national defense includes a sound and stable agriculture. I fail to see how weakening agriculture, and making farmers poorer, will make this country any stronger and better able to resist a foe. As I define it, national defense includes a prosperous agriculture, farmers who have a stake in preserving our system of government.

Let me cite an example of the value to national defense of a stable farm population. The Finns are an agricultural people. The country is known to be made up of small landowning farmers. Attacked by giant Russia, the Finns made a fight that has evoked the admiration of the world. The Finnish farmers have made that fight—a fight in defense of their land, their families, and their country.

One of the most effective means of weakening this Nation would be to go back to the conditions of 1932. As you will recall, farmers were in a sullen mood. Some of them resisted foreclosures with force. Rich men were afraid, for they knew that both workers and farmers were desperate.

One of the prices we have paid for stability since the depression has been our farm programs. They have been worth many times what we have spent on them. In times like these everything possible should be done to make them stronger.

We have seen that the present war has not helped the American farmer, and is not likely to help him; but a sudden cessation of the war might bring chaos if we did not have the machinery to protect agriculture and industry. The end of the war probably would put an end to purchases of airplanes and other material that is keeping factories busy. The decrease in farm exports has been offset to a certain extent by our increased industrial activity. If that prop fails, what will happen unless we have a strong farm program?

If we needed parity payments for 1939 and 1940, we need them now. If we were going to see this job halfway through and not continue it, perhaps we should never have begun it at all. Cruel as it might have been, perhaps we should have let the deflation continue.

Instead, we promised the farmers Federal assistance. Carefully testing each step with experience, we built a farm program. We improved it, and farmers came to depend upon it, to plan their activities within its framework. The goal was parity—parity of income and parity of prices. I do not see how we can turn back when the goals still remain before us. To reverse the policy already laid down without justification for the reversal would, in my opinion, stamp us as irresponsible, as a body incapable of planning a wise course and holding to it.

Let me repeat, if the parity provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act mean anything, if parity payments were needed this year and the year before, they are needed for next year. Certainly we have not removed the handicaps to agriculture. We talk about the size of farm appropriations; yet the tariff, by the very conservative estimates of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, costs farmers $600,000,000 each year. I have seen estimates that the tariff costs the consumers of the country at least $3,000,000,000 annually. I do not know how accurate that figure is, but I am certain that the tariff costs the people much more than these farm programs.

We have not removed the handicaps to agriculture imposed by monopolistic practices. Does anyone doubt that these practices exist? Then study what happened to farm prices and farm production during the depression, as contrasted to the course of industrial prices and industrial production. Industrial prices stayed up, while farm prices went down. Why? Industry, or much of it, at any rate, was well organized. It could cut production. Farmers could not. Industry could put a brake on falling prices. Farmers could not.

We have not removed the handicaps to agriculture imposed by high freight rates, and many other handicaps remain. Before we begin to economize at the expense of the farmer, should we not put him on an equal basis with labor and industry?

From every standpoint we should provide for parity payments.

We should do this from the standpoint of simple justice to agriculture.

We should do it to provide additional markets for our industries, and to help relieve unemployment in commerce and industry.

We should do this in the interests of the national defense.

We should do this in the interests of genuine economy.

We should do this in the interests of the welfare of all the people in these United States.

STUDY SHOWING INCREASES IN INDUSTRIAL SHIPMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL STATES AFTER 1933

The following study covers carlot shipments from 16 Northern and Eastern States to the principal agricultural areas, the Southeast, the Southwest and the Northwest. (The 16 Northern and Eastern States, the industrial States were: Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wisconsin. The agricultural States were: Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming.)

The shipments originated on more than 125 railroads operating in the North and East. The following table tells the story—a story which should be of interest to every Member of Congress from a manufacturing State or section:

Shipments by groups of commodities, total shipments, all groups

Group	Year 1 (July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933)	Year 2 (July 1, 1933, to June 30, 1934)	Percentage of increase year 2 over year 1	Year 3 (July 1, 1934, to June 30, 1935)	Percentage of increase year 3 over year 2	Percentage of increase year 3 over year 1

PUBLIC HEALTH

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the importance to a nation of having its citizens healthy cannot be exaggerated, and the strides which the medical profession has made toward improving the Nation's health cannot be too highly praised. It is also natural and proper that government should interest itself in health. Indeed, no government which purports to have in mind the welfare of its citizens could disinterest itself in a subject which is so vital to every citizen.

From the beginning of the Republic, the States and their subdivisions have done most of the work of public health, and certainly there is no reason to believe that their responsibility will lessen. That the Federal Government has a part to play—and a significant one—is also not to be denied, and it is to this that I particularly address myself here.

In studying the part of the Federal Government, it is well to recognize that, although the advance of medical science is inspiring, there is a deplorable amount of bad health in the United States. In this connection the President's committee on medical care, a nonpartisan body, has pointed out that one reason why persons of precarious means do not receive proper medical care is that they are unable to pay for it. To this might be added the further surmise that not only does poverty preclude proper medical care after sickness has set in; it also tends to facilitate the beginning of disease where, without poverty, it would not occur.

In studying the duty of the Federal Government, therefore, we are, first of all, struck by the fact that some bad health is due to poverty, and that the Federal Government has never succeeded in eradicating poverty. In this aspect of the matter it would appear that the best course for the Government to follow would be to try to promote the growth of real and widespread prosperity in the United States. This would undoubtedly do much to improve the general health.

Looking further into the question of inadequate medical care among large groups of people, it is well said that it is due to the following factors, in the following order: First, lack of a sufficient number of qualified general practitioners of medicine; second, lack of essential medicines and lack of essential clinical facilities; and, third, lack of hospitals.

An orderly approach to the question of making more widely available a proper standard of medical care would, accordingly, work for a more widespread prosperity as an indirect attack on the problem, and would, in its direct attack, seek first to increase the number of good doctors, and then provide medicines and clinical facilities.

Pending proposals, however, seem to approach the problem from the other end—the hospital end. This raises the question as to whether a sparsely settled section, which cannot afford to maintain a good general practitioner, can afford to maintain a hospital; and, failing the necessary medical personnel of doctors and nurses, the question may well be asked whether the proposed building, even though the word "hospital" is carved over its front door, would, by virtue of that inscription, become a real hospital in the finest sense of the word. It is far, far better never to go to a hospital than to enter an inferior one and there be subjected to the indescribable dangers and agonies coming from ignorant hands.

Questions like these show the need for deep and far-reaching study into all phases of this problem before final action is taken. We do not want the Government to be involved in further expenditure; nor do we want any half-baked schemes to be written on the statute books. The record of the past few years proves that hasty and ill-digested legislation sets back the cause of true reform, and gives a bad name to really worth-while and progressive measures. In this spirit I am introducing a bill as an alternate to the measures now pending, and for study along with all these other schemes. My bill represents a new approach to the problem; it is not yet a complete whole. I want it to be studied by the committee now considering the question and by the medical profession throughout the United States. In a matter involving the health of the American people there should be no wild experimentation, and there should be no false starts. I should like to introduce the bill and have it printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3630) to amend the Social Security Act, as amended, for the purpose of providing health insurance for workers in severe economic distress and making more adequate provision for the care of the sick was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Health Insurance Act of 1940."

SEC. 2. The Social Security Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 202 the following new section:

"HEALTH-INSURANCE BENEFITS

"SEC. 202 A. (a) Every individual, who (1) is a fully or currently insured individual (as defined in section 209 (g) and (h)) in any month; (2) was registered as unemployed for at least 4 consecutive weeks immediately prior to the beginning of such month at a public employment office or other agency approved by the Board; (3) has made application for a health-insurance benefit with respect to such month; and (4) is not entitled to any other benefit under this title with respect to such month, shall be entitled to a health-insurance benefit with respect to such month.

"(b) Subject to the limitations of subsection (c), such health-insurance benefit shall be equal to the reasonable value of the medical, dental, or hospital services rendered during such month to such individual, his wife, his child under the age of 16, or his wholly dependent parent, and such benefit shall be paid by the Managing Trustee to the doctor, dentist, or hospital rendering such services.

"(c) The total health-insurance benefits payable with respect to any such individual (including benefits payable with respect to services rendered to his wife, child, or parent) shall not exceed $40 in any one calendar year; and no payment to any doctor, dentist, or hospital shall exceed the amount with respect to which the individual entitled to the benefit makes application for payment to such doctor, dentist, or hospital.

"(d) As used in this section—

"(1) The term 'doctor' includes any medical practitioner licensed in the State in which the medical services were rendered with respect to which an application for a health-insurance-benefit payment is filed.

"(2) The term 'dentist' includes any dental practitioner licensed in the State in which the dental services were rendered with respect to which an application for a health-insurance-benefit payment is filed.

"(3) The term 'hospital' includes any health, diagnostic, or treatment center or institution, and related facilities, administered by persons licensed to practice medicine, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, in the State in which the hospital services were rendered with respect to which an application for a health-insurance-benefit payment is filed.

"(e) No health-insurance benefit shall be paid pursuant to this section with respect to any month unless application therefor is filed prior to the end of the third month immediately succeeding such month."

SEC. 3. Section 203 (d) of such Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after "under this title" the words "(except section 202 A)."

SEC. 4. (a) Section 209 (h) of such Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) The term 'currently insured individual' means any individual during any quarter if it appears to the satisfaction of the Board that such individual was paid wages of not less than $50 for each of not less than 6 of the 12 calendar quarters immediately preceding such quarter."

(b) Section 209 (i) of such Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after "The term 'wife'" the words "(except when used in section 202A)."

(c) Section 209 (k) of such Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after "section 202 (g)" the words "and section 202 A".

SEC. 5. The Social Security Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting after title VI the following new title:

"TITLE VI–A.—GRANTS TO STATES FOR MEDICAL SERVICES AND FACILITIES

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 605. For the purpose of enabling each State to provide medical services and facilities which are standardized in their nature, but which, because of their high costs, are not used in many cases in which their use is desirable, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Board, State plans for furnishing medical aid.

"STATE PLANS FOR FURNISHING MEDICAL AID

"SEC. 606. (a) A State plan for furnishing medical aid must (1) provide that it shall be available to all political subdivisions of the State; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; and (4) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes as a condition of eligibility for medical aid a residence requirement which denies aid with respect to any person who has resided in the State for 1 year immediately preceding the application for such aid.

"PAYMENT TO STATES

"SEC. 607. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for medical aid, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1940, an amount which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter under such plan.

"(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

"(1) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-half of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, and (B) such other investigation as the Board may find necessary.

"(2) The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior quarter.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amount so certified.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 608. In the case of any State plan for medical aid which has been approved by the Board, if the Board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

"(1) that the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence requirement prohibited by section 606 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

"(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 606 (a) to be included in the plan;

the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied, it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 609. As used in this title, the term 'medical aid' means making available, free to needy persons, and at a minimum cost to other persons, X-ray treatment, respirators, and any drug which is of substantial, accepted, and specific value in the treatment or prevention of pneumonia, streptococcus infections, diabetes, pernicious anemia and other anemias, congestive heart failure, glandular and nervous disorders, nutritional deficiency, and typhoid fever."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my bill does two things: First, it provides voluntary health insurance for workers in severe economic stress; and, second, it makes more adequate provision of those medicines and medical services which have become standardized in their nature, but which because of high cost are not used in many cases where their use would be unquestionably desirable.

1. HEALTH INSURANCE

Whether for reasons of pride or of unfamilarity with our existing health system, the fact is that there are many who will not take advantage of the generous willingness of American doctors and hospitals to supply medical care free of charge. It seems desirable that some plan be devised which will, first, enable these persons to help themselves; and, second, reduce the heavy load of free cases which our medical men so uncomplainingly carry.

The first part of my bill proposes an amendment to the Social Security Act which will provide health insurance for those who are in severe economic need. Under the terms of the bill, unemployed workers who have contributed to their own protection through pay-roll taxes are eligible to receive adequate sums up to $40 to pay doctor and hospital charges. The total cost of this plan in 1940 would be approximately $15,000,000, which is a mere fraction of the tremendous old-age fund from which the payments would be made. According to Senate Report No. 734, Seventy-sixth Congress, the total of the old-age reserve trust fund will be $1,871,000,000 at the end of 1940.

This is substantially the same scheme which I introduced last year, and which I have redrafted so as to meet the points raised by Mr. Paul V. McNutt, who at that time was interesting himself in these matters on behalf of the administrative branch of the Government. The points raised at that time were:

First. That my bill was drafted on the basis of the original Social Security Act instead of the amended version. This technical detail has now been cared for.

Second. That the bill only sought to serve those without means. I have added new provisions which extend the benefits to the families of workers as well as to the workers themselves; which cut the period of waiting from 15 weeks to 4 weeks; and which permits larger groups to participate. I have increased the benefit payment to as much as $40 a year. The bill now includes dental service. The coverage provisions have been considerably relaxed.

Third. Finally, that the bill of last year only assisted those who were in need, which, according to Mr. McNutt, was inconsistent with the provisions of the existing Social Security Act. It must be apparent that, if funds are limited, preference in paying benefits must be extended to some persons over certain others. No way of avoiding this dilemma has been suggested by anyone. If preference is to be extended, should not those who need this health service the most receive the preference, assuming, of course, that existing laws governing preference are also kept in force?

I hope this measure will be acceptable to the Congress and to all Americans who acknowledge their stake in the development of a healthy America. The needy will receive immediate relief. The taxpayer will not be affected, for there are no new taxes involved. Doctors and hospitals will receive compensation for furnishing medical care to those whose slender resources hitherto have not been able to stand the strain of essential medical assistance.

2. EXPENSIVE MEDICINES

I now come to part 2, the last half of the bill which introduces another distinct idea into the field of public health. The first part of the bill is a redraft and a perfection of something offered last year; but the second part, I think, represents a new departure.

Mr. President, this suggestion springs from the fact that there are at present a number of medicines the manufacture of which has become thoroughly standardized, and which are properly regarded by the layman as specific remedies for well-defined diseases. These particular medicines, unlike the majority of medicines, are so expensive that they are beyond the reach of many persons. For example, big hospitals will make gifts of small quantities of most types of medicine. For these hospitals, however, to give away the medicines to which this bill refers would be to strain their finances to a point which they could not bear.

The bill therefore provides Federal aid, on a matching basis, to those States which have a plan for making these medicines available to those who are entitled to them. The medicines covered by the bill are as follows:

1. Sulfapyridine. Used for pneumonia, streptococcus infections, and other infections.

2. Insulin. Used for diabetes.

3. Liver extract. Used for pernicious anemia and occasionally for other anemias.

4. Mercupurin ampoules and Mercurin suppositories. Used for patients with congestive heart failure.

5. Endocrine products—most of these except thyroid gland are expensive. Used for glandular and nervous disorders.

6. Vitamin preparations—thiamine chloride, nicotinic acid, viosterol, vitamin K. Used for a variety of conditions, especially nutritional deficiency.

7. Typhoid vaccine. Used to prevent typhoid fever and is already compulsory in some States.

This list covers medicines which enter into the field of internal medicine. I hope and believe that with the publication of this bill additional medications used in other branches of medicine, such as dermatology and obstetrics, will be proposed and included.

The same philosophy is carried into the field of medical services. It provides for Federal aid on the same basis, so that persons in need of these services may obtain the use of respirators, the so-called iron lung, and, above all, of large-scale X-ray facilities. I believe it is not disputed that countless instances occur every day in which X-ray examinations are desirable—nay, essential—but are not given because of the prohibitive cost.

The suffering which could be prevented by prompt X-ray examination is indescribable. Needless to say, the prevention of disease automatically tends to reduce the cost of caring for the disease once it has been allowed to take hold. The use of respirators and X-rays involves a technique which has become relatively standardized. There is really no longer any mystery about them. In the case of the X-ray it is not inconceivable that it would become a routine part of every physical examination were it not for the cost. In the case of people of moderate means the cost prohibits its use. In the case of persons who can afford it, the use of X-ray is known to be so unusual that its prescription sometimes causes alarm.

At a later date I shall submit data showing the amount which might be initially authorized. Until the list of medicines to be provided is complete, the sum to be authorized could not be stated with any exactitude. It is safe to say, however, that in comparison with the total outlay for social services in which the Government is now engaged the figure would be most moderate.

This measure would not regiment. In all cases the initiative would rest with the individual. He himself would choose his own doctor and his own hospital. The Federal Government would merely give full recognition to the work of private enterprise, and simply set up the machinery whereby the self-respecting man might help himself. Questions of medical personnel and hospital standards would remain where they now are, in the devoted hands of professional physicians. The part played by the State and local governments is recognized and enhanced. There is no invitation to haste and waste.

There is to be no large scale splurging of money in building programs and in contracts for materials. There is to be no setting up of a bureaucracy or of any other obstacles between the patient and his health. This scheme is as direct as a governmental scheme can be. It provides specific, concrete, definite aid for definite diseases. It is believed that in giving everyone a chance to have these medicines and services according to his ability to pay, very great good can be done.

In recent years we have taken important steps looking toward the establishment of a well-rounded, integrated social-security program. Workmen's compensation for many years has provided financial aid to those who have suffered from injuries sustained during the course of their employment. Unemployment compensation aims to protect the unemployed from loss of wages. Old-age pensions should be developed which will safeguard our people from the hazards of insecurity. A well-conceived health-insurance program should bring measurably nearer the day when the American people will be physically fit.

This bill is a humble first step toward this inspiring goal.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts has really gotten to the meat of a very important problem in the course of the program which he has outlined, and I am wondering whether he has any figures or any general idea as to the cost of this program as compared with the so-called Wagner scheme. I realize that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is socially-minded, but it has always appeared that his social-mindedness is very expensive financially to the United States. I wondered whether the Senator had a general idea as to the cost.

Mr. LODGE. The first half of my bill, that is, the purely health-insurance part of it, on the basis on which I have it set up, would, if it were in existence today, cost about $15,000,000 for the first year, for 1940. As to the second half of the bill, which relates to providing certain specific medicines for specific diseases, I have not yet been able to compute the cost, because it is very difficult to ascertain the number of people in the United States who have these various diseases. The list of medicines which I have included here is an absolutely meritorious and well considered list insofar as it goes, but undoubtedly it is not yet complete. There will be medicines added in the field of dermatology and in the field of obstetrics, to give just two which are not covered at the present time. Of course, until we know what all the medicines are and what their unit cost may be, it is very difficult to give an accurate figure. I do feel perfectly certain, however, that this program will be far, far cheaper than a scheme which involves a great deal of construction, and a scheme which goes into the wholesale distribution of moneys without regard to the specific individual need for assistance. I have no question that it would be much cheaper than that. I believe that if it should ever be put into effect, the expense would be very low compared with the other social services which are now being conducted.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. The subject of the bill just introduced by the Senator is one in which I am very much interested. It is a most important subject, to which I have been giving a great deal of thought and study. I am, indeed, very grateful for the splendid and constructive contribution the very able Senator from Massachusetts has just made to this important field. I rise to comment along the very line of the colloquy a moment ago between the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New Hampshire.

I feel that it can be said without fear of contradiction that the Senator from Massachusetts is not only correct in stating that this program would be far cheaper, in the proper economic use of that word, but it is obvious, on reflection, that there could not possibly be any other approach which conceivably could be as economical as the one the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested. When his program has been thoroughly analyzed, this fact will be established. That, in a sense, answers the question of the Senator from New Hampshire, even without any figures or other data; and better, really, than could be done, certainly at this time, with figures or data.

Mr. LODGE. I am obligated to the Senator from New Jersey for his observation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts, for the information of the clerks at the desk. The bill proposed would amend the Social Security Act, which was originally considered by the Committee on Finance. Some of the measures along the line of the Senator's bill have been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Does the Senator from Massachusetts have any preference as to which committee should consider his bill?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the bill go to the subcommittee which is making a study of all of these health matters, so that they can study my bill along with the rest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A subcommittee of what committee?

Mr. LODGE. I believe it is a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor. They have all these health measures pending before them. I should like to have this one studied along with the rest. It is my understanding that there will be no legislation along this line at this session, but that something may be brought in at the next session, and I should like to have the program covered by my bill considered along with the rest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I favor the amendments offered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations to the pending agricultural supply bill, H. R. 8202. In this connection I want to call attention to the fact that the status of agriculture and of the American farmer today is a condition, not a theory. I say we should face the facts, and deal with the farm problem in the light of realities.

Viewed in the light of reality, I say no conclusion can be reached other than that the appropriations suggested by the committee are necessary, and should be made.

We have in operation a farm program. I have great respect for Secretary Wallace, and am glad to give him credit for trying very hard to do something for agriculture. But I will not discuss at this time whether or not it is the best kind of a farm program, whether it is sound or unsound, whether it is working in the direction of a solution of the farm problem, or whether it is operating in a vacuum, so far as a permanently helpful and successful program is concerned. I intend to discuss the farm program as a program at some other time. I have some views on that subject that I wish to convey to the Senate later.

What we have before us today is an appropriation bill to carry out the promises of the present national farm program. Whether we like it or not, it is the only farm program we have. It calls for certain appropriations if Congress is to make more than a gesture toward keeping promises made in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to the American farmers.

Mr. President, so far as the farmer himself is concerned, the goal of the present farm program is to restore parity income to the American farmer as a whole—to bring about a normal and equitable exchange of farm commodities for the products of industry.

I have information from Secretary Wallace that farm income over the past 10 years has averaged $2,000,000,000 a year under parity.

In the farm act itself we have a yardstick for measuring parity income—it is, that net income from farming operations per person living on farms shall bear the same relation to net income of persons not living on farms as prevailed in the 5 years before the World War, the years selected as a base period.

The 1909–14 yardstick was selected by Congress on the assumption that farm and city incomes were relatively in balance during that period, as shown by the fact that farm goods flowed freely to the cities and city goods flowed freely to the farms.

Where does farm income stand today? If it were not for Government payments, farm income and farm purchasing power would be more than $2,000,000,000 short of parity. With Government payments, farm income is at least $1,500,000,000 short of parity. That means the farmers' ability to purchase products of industry is $1,500,000,000 short of that necessary to keep factories going.

Industry has as big a stake as agriculture in parity income for agriculture.

Perhaps it will be easier to see this picture if we put it in terms of things that farmers sell and farmers buy. I think Secretary Wallace did a good job in that respect before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The prices I am comparing are taken from two mail order catalogs issued by the same mail-order house, one for January 15, 1913, and the other for January 15, 1940; and farm prices for the same periods as shown by the reports of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Take nails—ordinary eightpenny nails. In 1913 a farmer could buy 100 pounds of these nails with what he received from the sale of 31 pounds of hog. In 1940 it takes 70 pounds of hog to buy the same quantity of eightpenny nails—an increase of 126 percent. If he pays for the nails in cotton instead of hogs, at 1940 prices, it takes 36 pounds of cotton instead of 17. In terms of beef, it takes 53 pounds instead of 39; in terms of wheat, 3.3 bushels instead of 2.4 bushels; in terms of corn, 5.3 bushels instead of 3.7 bushels.

Suppose the farmer buys a corn planter, 2-row check. In 1913 he could have bought it with 258 pounds of cotton, in 1940 he could buy it with 653 pounds; 168 pounds of wool in 1913, 235 pounds in 1940; 579 pounds of beef in 1913, 956 pounds in 1940; 460 pounds of pork in 1913, but 1,238—more than a half ton—in 1940; for 63 bushels of corn in 1913, but 124 bushels of corn in 1940; 40 bushels of wheat in 1913, but 78 bushels in 1940.

One more illustration of this kind is sufficient to show how short agriculture is of the purchasing power it must have before we can hope for a return of national prosperity.

In 1913, 5.8 pounds of cotton would buy a pair of overalls; this year it takes 9.6 pounds to buy the same pair of overalls. It took 10.3 pounds of hog in 1913 to buy this pair of overalls; today it takes 18.7 pounds. The wheat grower could get them for nine-tenths of a bushel of wheat in 1913; in January 1940 it took 1.15 bushels of wheat. Where it took 1.4 bushels of corn to buy the overalls in 1913, it requires 1.8 bushels in 1940. Even the cattleman, better off at the present time than most of his neighbors, would have to use 14.1 pounds of beef to buy the overalls that he could have bought with 13 pounds in 1913.

The wool grower fares better. His wool will get him more cotton goods than it would in 1913, but if he buys nails, axes, harrows, or corn planters it will take noticeably more.

Taking it as a whole, Mr. President, the purchasing power of the farmers' products today is little more than three-fourths what it was in the pre-war base period.

And under present world conditions, with what foreign markets are left after the war and post-war world-wide depression still further reduced, there is little likelihood of improvement in farm prices or income.

Mr. President, when the war started last September, there was a sharp upward turn in prices of several farm products, based more upon prospects of high war prices than upon any actually increased foreign demand for American farm commodities.

There was an immediate cry raised that farm prices were on their way back to the high war levels of the latter months of the World War. But that speculative boom in farm prices flattened out as the fall months dragged along. Up to the present time, the European war has actually resulted in the loss of export markets for farm products instead of increasing exports.

Now it is not necessary to go into all the reasons for this situation. Very frankly, the repeal of the arms embargo was a factor, perhaps only a minor factor. At any rate, since that repeal became effective, France and Great Britain are using their dollar exchange in the United States to buy airplanes and munitions. They are buying farm commodities from their colonies and dominions, on credit, where they can get lower prices, and where their purchases will injure Germany the most. The sum total of it all is that the United States is exporting less and less of farm products as an immediate result of the war.

Exports of aircraft engines and parts were 410 percent larger in January of 1940 than in the same month in 1939. On the other hand, exports of wheat were 73 percent less.

Tobacco and fruit markets abroad have been sharply curtailed by the war. That means further surpluses for the American producer and presumably not a good price in the future. Hog prices are very low today. Unless Great Britain turns to the United States for pork, the prospect for the coming months is far from hopeful.

The point I am making here is that there is little if any prospect in sight of farm prices approaching parity, to say nothing of reaching parity, in the next year or so. Congress, in effect, has promised at least an attempt to give the farmer parity income through parity payments when these are necessary.

It seems to me parity payments clearly are necessary, under present conditions and immediate future prospects. And as for the war, it has increased the need for parity payments, not lessened that need.

Mr. President, at times I am almost inclined to feel resentful when I hear people who should know better crying out against farm subsidies, and denouncing the farmer for accepting help from his government.

Mr. President, I maintain that the American farmer is, and has been, subsidizing the rest of the people of the United States for years past, by furnishing them foodstuffs and fibers at prices far below the cost of production.

The American farmer is not being subsidized. He is subsidizing the rest of us, to the tune of $2,000,000,000 a year. In the past 10 years American farmers have subsidized the rest of the public to the amount of some $20,000,000,000.

From farm-program payments American farmers have been subsidized some $3,000,000,000.

Compare the $3,000,000,000 of subsidy received by the farmers with the $20,000,000,000 of what amounts to subsidies given the rest of the population by low farm prices—prices away below parity, prices away below cost of production. That is why farming has been on an unprofitable basis for several years. The farmer has not received his fair share of the national income.

About 150 years ago a man by the name of Benjamin Franklin, also known as Poor Richard, spent some time in England. In England at that time the Government was preventing exports of foodstuffs, thereby holding surpluses inside the country and getting cheap foods.

Ben Franklin was so impressed by the injustice done the farmers of England and so indignant over the cry of the manufacturers for cheap foods that he wrote a letter to the public, in which he advocated payment of subsidies to farmers to compensate them for their losses due to the corn laws.

In part Benjamin Franklin said, and I quote from the letter published in an autobiography of Benjamin Franklin:

> Are we farmers the only people to be begrudged the profits of our honest labor? And why?
>
> O, but the manufacturers, the manufacturers, they are to be favored, and they must have bread at a cheap rate.
> Hark ye, Mr. Oaf: The farmers live splendidly, you say. And pray, would you have them hoard the money that they get? Their fine clothes and furniture, do they make them themselves, or for one another, and so keep the money among them? Or do they employ these, your darling manufacturers, and so scatter it again over all the nation?

The world would produce a better price if suffered to go into the foreign markets, but that, messieurs the public, you will not permit. It must be kept at home that our manufacturers must have it the cheaper. And thus, having yourselves thus lessened our encouragement for raising sheep, you curse us for the scarcity of mutton.

Some folks seem to think they ought never to be easy until England becomes another lubberland, where it is fancied that streets are paved with penny rolls, the houses tiled with pancakes, and chickens, ready roasted, cry, "Come and eat me."

You say poor laborers cannot afford to buy bread at high prices unless they had higher wages. Possibly. But shall we farmers afford our laborers higher wages if you will not allow us to get, when we might get it, a higher price for our corn?

But it seems we farmers must take so much less that the poor may have so much cheaper.

That operates then as a tax for the maintenance of the poor. A very good thing, you will say. But I ask, Why a partial tax? Why laid on us farmers only? If it be a good thing, messieurs the public, take your share of it by indemnifying us a little out of your public treasury.

I merely wish to call attention, Mr. President, to the fact that Ben Franklin, 150 years ago, had a very clear and broad vision of the farm problem as we have come to learn it today.

He knew that national prosperity depended upon a free and equitable exchange of products of the farm and the factory—a free flow of city goods to the country, and of country products to the city.

Ben Franklin knew, and pointed out clearly, though ironically, that the manufacturers who insisted upon cheap foods so they could pay lower wages were thereby destroying the market among farmers for their own manufactured products.

Ben Franklin knew, and pointed out, that if foodstuffs and fibers are marketed at less than cost of production, so there might be cheap food and clothing, then in effect the farmer was being taxed for cheap bread.

And he faced this as a reality, and pointed to indemnification from the public treasury as justifiable under these conditions. I might add, and this is common knowledge among students of tariff history, that Alexander Hamilton, in his report on manufactures, nearly 150 years ago, stated that if the protection given manufacturing unbalanced the exchange of goods for farm products, it would be justifiable and necessary to grant bounties to farmers to make up the difference.

I think there can be no doubt that the conditions which Franklin saw in England, and Hamilton foresaw for the United States, have come about.

In the United States today one-fourth of the population are on farms. This one-fourth of the population gets 11 percent or less of the national income, and is required to keep itself and also to educate one-fourth of the children of school age in the entire Nation.

Figured from any angle—from per capita income, from share of the national income, figured from a comparison of prices paid and received, figured on the basis of production costs—I say the American farmer today is operating at a loss of from 15 to 25 percent.

He is supplying the rest of the people with food at that much below his cost of production. Thanks to tariffs, to corporations, to fixed transportation costs, to high wage levels, all sustained by law, by government, he is being steadily squeezed and dropped into a lower level of living.

Mr. President, since 1913 the farmer's percentage of the consumer's dollar on 58 typical food articles has dropped from 53 percent to 40 percent. In 1913 he got 53 cents of the consumer's food dollar; in 1938 he got only 40 cents.

In the last decade, according to testimony of Mr. Eric Englund, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, before the House Appropriations Committee, the ownership of farm real estate by Federal land banks and Land Bank Commissioner has increased 372.4 percent; by joint-stock land banks, 173.7 percent; by life-insurance companies, 485.6 percent; by State credit agencies, 172.9 percent.

Twenty-six of the larger life-insurance companies in the United States now own more than one-half billion dollars' worth of farm lands—all acquired by foreclosure. The life-insurance companies are not in the business of buying farm lands; they acquire them only when farmers cannot meet their mortgage obligations.

These are the figures on increased insurance-company holdings by the 26 companies, figures placed in the record at hearings before the Temporary National Economic Committee:

Farm real estate owned by 26 largest insurance companies:

In 1929	$81,907,000
In 1932	235,026,000
In 1933	502,443,000
In 1938	529,392,000

Mr. President, I say this is a deplorable situation. Thousands and thousands of farms have been foreclosed, their owners dispossessed, thrown off the land, becoming tenants or going on relief. In the face of these facts what else can we do except support appropriations for agriculture, pending a real solution of the farm problem?

I realize that we cannot cure this situation by payments of subsidies from the Treasury. A workable farm program in cooperation with a coordinated national recovery program is needed to correct the causes of this evil condition.

The plight of the American farmer justifies the conservation program and the conservation payments. It also justifies and makes necessary the parity payments recommended by the committee.

I am for economy in Government expenditures, but not solely at the expense of the farmer.

In view of war conditions abroad, and their serious effects on crops covered by the parity payments program, there is no question in my mind that this Congress should appropriate at least the $212,000,000 provided in the Senate amendments. Nearly three times that amount would be required to bring parity prices on farm products.

There is another item which I believe should be approved. I refer to the $85,000,000 recommended for disposal of surpluses. There will be about $90,000,000 available for this purpose from customs receipts; the eighty-five millions will be in addition. At the last session Congress appropriated directly one hundred and thirteen millions for this purpose, in addition to the ninety millions available from customs receipts.

This surplus disposal money is used not only to help dispose of surpluses in foreign markets, but also to finance disposal of surpluses of all kinds of farm products in the domestic market, especially to relief clients.

The food-stamp plan, and the cotton-stamp plan, both of which are highly popular with consumers as well as producers, are financed out of the surplus-disposal funds.

I am also strongly in favor of the provision for $50,000,000 R. F. C. loans to further the farm-tenancy program. The program is inadequate, but in the right direction.

In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that both the farm tenancy and surplus-disposal items have the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, though the Budget figures were seventy-two millions for surplus disposal and only twenty-five million direct appropriation for farm tenancy.

Both these items, Mr. President, as well as the farm-program payments, mean the difference between hanging on and going under to large groups of our farm population.

While the tenancy program is woefully inadequate, it is moving in the right direction; and while the program is continued it inspires the hope that keeps men going in the face of discouragements. Without any such program most tenants can look ahead with little hope of ever becoming farm owners.

The food-stamp plan is of value and interest to more than the farmers and the needy families in the cities, who are the direct beneficiaries. It also meets with the approval of businessmen as helpful to city business, especially in the retail trades.

Mr. President, in closing may I express the hope that the Senate approve the recommendations of its Appropriations Committee for increasing the appropriations for agriculture.

The farmer needs the money, and the country needs the farmers to have it, pending national recovery through solutions of the farm and unemployment problems.

Mr. President, I have received many appeals from Kansas farm groups asking me to support the pending bill and the amendments reported by the committee. I ask unanimous consent to have these telegrams and letters printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the communications will be printed in the RECORD.

The communications are as follows:

NESS CITY, KANS., February 14, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

I request that you as one of our spokesmen in Washington take a firm stand to secure an appropriation adequate to finance the agricultural-conservation program and parity payments for the future. I recommend that you work toward a plan to permanently finance through some type of processing tax our present farm program. I assure you this is the opinion of our 500 members and others in this county.

WM. SHANK,
President, Ness County Farm Bureau.

SCOTT CITY, KANS., March 15, 1940.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER, Senator.

DEAR SIR: Farmers of Scott County feel you should do your utmost to obtain increase in Senate agricultural appropriation bill. Farmers are interested in balancing Budget, but still are entitled fair share of national income.

O. M. BROWN,
President of Scott County Farm Bureau.

LINCOLN CENTER, KANS., March 13, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.:

By far majority of members of the Farm Bureau and Agricultural Conservation Association in Lincoln County feel that they do not yet receive parity prices for their products. We ask that you support parity appropriations to this end.

LINCOLN COUNTY FARM BUREAU.
LINCOLN COUNTY AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION.

PHILLIPSBURG, KANS., February 3, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: We note over the radio and the papers that the agricultural appropriations are being cut severely. We know that you are interested in agriculture in our good old Kansas; therefore, that the large majority may go ahead since agriculture is a basis of prosperity in our view, we ask that you exercise every effort possible to secure a satisfactory agricultural appropriation. We do not feel that the major reduction in appropriation being made by Congress should be unloaded on agriculture. We realize that the proper defense must be provided, but this war situation has not helped agriculture to any extent. It is primarily an industrial enterprise and it seems that this cut in appropriation for agriculture is only doubling the effects of the war in the Middle West.

We trust that you will exercise every effort in our behalf.

Yours truly,

GEORGE C. LARSON,
Secretary, Phillips County Farm Bureau.

CLAY CENTER, KANS., February 2, 1940.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We are farmers in Clay County and feel that we are unanimous in favor of the present program, including the loan- and crop-insurance provisions of the set-up, so as a rule the present program fits in with good diversified farming practices, in giving him a fair price for his products and also gives him a chance, with some Government help, to build up his land.

We would appreciate any help that you can give us in giving the farmer a fair chance with other business.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN H. MUGLER.
E. J. MALL.
FRED J. HARTNER.

ULYSSES, KANS., February 6, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to urge you to work for continued financial support of the farm program. In Grant County only two farmers have not cooperated with the farm program in the past. We believe it is a good program for everyone—producers and consumers alike.

If Congress wishes to adopt an economy policy, we will not object to a proportional reduction in the farm program, but we do not believe it is logical to reduce the appropriation for the farm program and the Department of Agriculture if the other phases of Government continue to receive the same or additional appropriations. I am sure you realize that the farm program has only partially brought the farmer's income up to parity as compared with other industries. Any reduction in payments under the farm program will result in more disparity. In some cases the price of farm products has increased the past few months, but it is also true that the things the farmer needs to buy have increased in cost so that the farmer has not gained by the increase in farm prices.

Very truly yours,

E. A. KEPLEY,
President, Grant County A. C. A.

KANSAS FARM BUREAU,
Manhattan, Kans., February 17, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: I am writing in regard to the parity payments in the agricultural appropriation bill. I feel that it is false economy to do away with parity payments, because what little recovery farmers have had so far has been due in a very great measure to parity payments to agriculture. Farmers believe in economy, too, but feel that they should not have to sustain the principal cut because they already are so far below the economic position of the rest of the country. We are expecting you to support full parity for agriculture as our honorable representative in the Senate.

Sincerely,

M. N. HENDRIKSON.

GREENLEAF, KANS., February 19, 1940.

Hon. Senator CAPPER: I am writing you and asking you to support coming legislation which will provide parity payments to the farmers in 1941.

Knowing your influence has much weight, I am trusting you will work for this much-needed and equitable legislation.

Yours,

DAN H. COMBOW, Greenleaf, Kans.

PARSONS, KANS., February 14, 1940.

To Hon. Senator ARTHUR CAPPER:

Analysis of local farm conditions has convinced us beyond any doubt that there is a definite agricultural problem in Labette County. We find this problem to be due to both improper land utilization and low economic return. We feel that the agricultural conservation program with payments to farmers for good land use can and is doing much toward adjusting crop rotation toward a cropping system which will conserve the natural resources of the soil and aid in raising crop yield to an economic production level.

We feel that various control programs, crop-loan programs, crop insurance, and other supporting programs have helped to hold up the general price level of farm commodities, and together with the direct assistance of cash payments have helped farmers of this county with economic problems of agriculture.

In view of these existing needs to farmers we sincerely hope that you will give your full and whole-hearted support to agricultural conservation payments, farm parity payments, and such other farm appropriations that come before Congress this session.

PHIL. J. HELLWIG,
President, Labette County Farm Bureau and Chairman, Labette County Land Use Committee.
ARTHUR H. HUNTER,
Chairman, A. C. P.
CARL W. HELLWIG,
County Committeeman.
EDWARD DICKERSON,
County Committeeman.

DODGE CITY, KANS., February 28, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

Urge that you make a firm stand for present agriculture conservation program and parity payments and that sufficient money be appropriated to make benefit payments to farmers for 1941 same as they are at present.

BERT ANDERSON,
President, Ford County Farm Bureau.

HADDAM, KANS., February 17, 1940.

Mr. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. Mr. CAPPER: I wish to commend you upon the stand you are taking for the Kansas farmer through legislation.

I assure you that the average farmer is grateful for the aid he receives as benefits from the A. A. A. and other sources.

I wish to impress upon you the necessity of parity payments for 1941 in connection with the A. C. P. program, and wish you to stay right on the plate and bat for the farmer.

We must not lower the morale of the average dirt farmer or the Nation as a whole will head for disaster.

I feel that I am expressing the sentiments of the majority of the farmers of this community and therefore wish you to use your influence keeping a view, The plight of the farmer, before you at all times.

Wishing you more power and influence, I remain,

Respectfully yours,

W. E. PELESKY, Dirt Farmer.

GIRARD, KANS., February 15, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you concerning the parity payments for the 1941 program. It seems to me—and I believe that it is safe in saying that it is the opinion of nearly every farmer in the county—that the economy slicing is directed too much at agriculture. The agriculture of the western half of Kansas is in a more or less perilous condition and will be in a worse condition if parity is left out of the 1941 program.

I believe you are doing everything in your power that is to be done for agriculture, but I am writing and urging others to write in order that you may point to our solid support concerning the benefits for agriculture.

Very truly yours,

DWIGHT S. TOLLE,
County Agent.

JUNCTION CITY, KANS., March 16, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR A. CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: As president of the Geary County Farm Boosters Club, who sponsored a banquet and program on Friday, March 8, 1940, celebrating the seventh anniversary of the founding of the A. A. A. program, I am enclosing a copy of the resolutions adopted by 150 Geary County (Kans.) farmers and businessmen.

We had a very fine local nonpartisan program before the broadcast. In it bankers, businessmen, and farmers all expressed their ideas of how the A. A. A. program had benefited the county and stressed the need and value of a continuation of the farm program.

We realize that without your tireless work and support the agricultural situation would be in a much worse condition than it is today.

Very truly yours,

WALTER R. HASLETT,
President, Geary County Farm Boosters Club.

[Resolution]

Whereas we believe that the agricultural conservation program and the Triple A program, as amended and passed in 1938, has been an immeasurable benefit to agriculture and industry and the country at large;

Whereas we believe that under present economic conditions that are world-wide it is imperative that we have a strong farm program for the benefit of agriculture, industry, and labor; let it be resolved that we go on record as commending each and every one of our Government officials and legislators for the excellent work that they have done in the writing up and passing of the farm program in the past few years;

Whereas we feel that it is necessary that we have a strong agricultural program in future years for the conservation of our natural resources, and especially the fertility of our soil, as all wealth comes from the soil; be it

Resolved, That until such time as the leading agricultural commodities are on a parity in price range with the incomes of the other industries that the Government set aside a sum sufficient to bring such agricultural products up to a parity; and be it further

Resolved, That the President and Congress devise such means as to make this parity payment permanent by setting up a permanent way of financing such payments rather than under the present system of appropriations each individual year; and be it further

Resolved, That this fund be created from some such tax or revenue for this purpose rather than a definite grant from the United States Treasury; and be it further

Resolved, That we feel that the Government can well afford to appropriate as much or more money than at present for the maintenance of the fertility of soil as set up under the agricultural conservation program.

Whereas the following men are especially favorable and are working hard for the agricultural program, we resolve that these men be sent a copy of these resolutions:

To wit: President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, Senator Arthur Capper, Senator Clyde Reed, Representative Edward H. Rees, and Representative Clifford Hope.

LA CROSSE, KANS., March 9, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR C. CAPPER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: Enclosed find a copy of resolutions unanimously approved by the farmers of Rush County assembled at the farm program anniversary dinner held at La Crosse March 8.

Yours very truly,

W. J. LAUGHLIN, Chairman.
J. A. BOTT, Secretary.

[Resolution]

A representative group of between four and five hundred farmers assembled here at La Crosse, Rush County, Kans., for the purpose of celebrating the seventh anniversary of the beginning of the A. A. A. program, do hereby express our appreciation and support of the farm program and urge a continuation of the same.

We further register our conviction that the farm program has contributed much to the welfare of the farm family, the community, the State, and the Nation.

We further recommend that in interest of the stability of such a program, a method of financing other than direct appropriation from the Federal Treasury be worked out.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We the undersigned farmers of Anderson County, Kans., represent each and every community in the county and in our opinion the passing of the agricultural appropriation bill without any provision for farm-parity payments and with other severe cuts in a number of budgeted items is a severe disappointment to the farmer in this district.

While the farmers naturally approve of any practical move toward economy, they do not feel that agriculture should be expected to sustain the principal cut.

Agriculture has not as yet been brought up to the economic position, relative to the rest of the country, that it is entitled to, or that the welfare of the country as a whole requires.

The farmers are better than 85 percent in the fight to maintain the present farm program and feel that they are justly entitled to its benefits, and are depending upon their Congressmen to secure the appropriation necessary to provide funds to maintain the program including parity payments.

We hereby petition you as our Senator to get in and battle for the agricultural appropriation bill including parity payments and all other budgeted items.

GRANT COUNTY FARM BUREAU,
Ulysses, Kans., February 6, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to take this opportunity to urge you to do all you can to see that the financial support for the farm program is not lost this year. We represent the Grant County Farm Bureau with a membership of 200 members. All the members cooperate with the program. In addition, it might be stated that in the past over 99 percent of the farmers of Grant County have cooperated with the program and they feel it is a good thing for the farmers and the Nation as a whole.

Yours truly,

A. D. HARMON,
President, Grant County Farm Bureau.
S. J. EASTHAM,
Secretary, Grant County Farm Bureau.

MINNEAPOLIS, KANS., February 6, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We are writing to request that you do all within your power to obtain an appropriation for the continuation of the farm program and parity payments.

We recommend that you work toward a plan to permanently finance this appropriation.

In regard to the 1940 farm program, we wish to urge that the soil-building-practice payments for the seeding of alfalfa and sweet clover be increased to $3 and $1.50, respectively.

We feel that if the season is favorable the increased payment would greatly encourage the seeding of alfalfa and sweet clover in this county.

We would greatly appreciate hearing from you in this regard.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. CONNER,
EDWARD ANTENE,
RAY EVERLEY,
Ottawa County A. C. Committee.

Hon. CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Representative of Seventh District.

DEAR SIRS: We respectfully ask that you use every effort at your command to have parity payments restored to the Agricultural appropriation bill for 1941. Not only are farm interests at stake but the property of the entire Nation depends on the farmers' return to parity income and a fair share of the national income.

Thanking you for your support in the past and hoping we can depend on you to take care of the farm interests of Kansas, we are Respectfully yours.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senator from Kansas, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: At a joint meeting of the Jewell County Farm Bureau Executive Board and Land Use Planning Committee we went on record as urging you to support the farm program as it has been operating in 1939 and 1940, including the financing of parity in 1941.

Sincerely yours,

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We demand that the Federal farm program be continued and improved upon, irrespective of which political party prevails at the next election. We wish to thank the township committees and county committee of Dickinson County for the courteous and efficient way that they have been handling their work. They are fair-minded and conscientious gentlemen. We say to them, "We thank you for the fine spirit with which you are performing your work." We also wish to thank the President of the United States, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and all Members of Congress, both Republican and Democrat, that have supported the farm program. We ask you to continue the good work, and we are grateful and appreciative of your efforts. We also think that having the farmers get together and discuss the farm program is a mighty good thing.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I am writing to you briefly in behalf of the parity payment for agriculture which the House of Representatives has recently denied the farmers. While we would all desire a reduction in unnecessary national expenses I do not feel that it is wise to economize at the expense of agriculture. Wheat prices are far below parity and to deny us parity at this time is to give a serious blow to recovery. I am sure the farmer has enough friends in the Senate, if they all work together, to restore the parity provision again. As president of the Stafford County Farm Bureau and as a farmer of Stafford County, I respectfully urge your most earnest efforts in giving to agriculture the aid it needs and deserves. I should like to see a move made in this session of Congress to restore the processing tax or some similar effective system as a means of financing aid to agriculture without drawing from the Treasury.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES W. TANNER.

Resolutions adopted by a group of farmers assembled in Leoti, Kans., December 18, 1939:

Be it hereby resolved by this group assembled, First, that we hereby approve the present agricultural program and believe that it should be continued without material change.

Second. We recommend that parity payments on our major crops be continued and that some method such as the processing tax be developed to finance such payments.

Third. We recommend that commodity loans be continued on all special commodities and that no material change be made in this program.

Fourth. We favor the continuation of the Federal crop-insurance program, but recommend that more equitable yields and rates be worked out.

Sincerely yours,

AUGUST STOLTENBERG,
Chairman.

[Resolution]

Whereas this 8th day of March is the seventh anniversary since the enactment of our present farm program, and that many thousands of farmers have kept their farms as a result of the benefits from the farm program; and

Whereas the wheat farmer is still in financial distress as a result of the many years of disparity prices, and that many thousands of farmers are barely hanging onto their farms; and

Whereas the farmer has no purchasing power, with low prices, and cannot buy the things he needs, thus causing a delay in the return of the Nation to prosperity, and as the Nation's welfare depends on whether or not agriculture is in distress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we farmers assembled at Holyrood, Kans., on March 8, 1940, go on record expressing our hearty appreciation to the President, Secretary Wallace, and all Members of Congress who gave us our present farm program, and that we are 100 percent for the program and want it to continue, and that we urge Congress to provide the funds for full parity payments by enacting some form of processing tax, instead of appropriations, and that such legislation be made permanent, as the protective tariff now is permanent for the manufactures; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, Secretary Wallace, and to our United States Senators and Congressmen in this and other States.

DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed find a petition signed by many farmers of Phillips County requesting adequate appropriations for agriculture for 1941.

We farmers know you favor adequate appropriations, but we believe these petitions will help you secure support from other Senators and Representatives.

Yours truly,

OTTO WERNER.

[Petition]

We, the undersigned, hereby use this method to express our sentiments to the legislative body of our Government in reference to the following:

It is highly important that the agricultural appropriation be secured in sufficient amount to provide adequate funds to properly administrate all of the present programs with their various phases. This cannot be done with the proposed reduction. Agriculture must not suffer for the benefit of other appropriations.

GARDNER, KANS., February 17, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: The agricultural problem is one of great importance to Kansas. The writer having spent 25 years of the past 40 as cashier of a farmers' bank, is now operating 450 acres of inherited Johnson County land that was bought, mortgaged, and paid for in the eighties and nineties. The stockholders and directors of our two small banks, with a combined capital of $40,000, consolidated and took care of more than $100,000 of worthless farm paper without a dollar of loss to the depositors. This large percentage of loss started in 1921, when any aid to the farmer was unknown, and at a time when the businessmen of this Nation did not realize the importance of prosperity through agriculture.

With past experience and knowledge of the needs of the farmer of eastern Kansas, I feel free to speak in favor of a continuation of the A. A. A., and especially the soil-conservation part of the program. This land has been under the program from the beginning, and under my active work since 1936, and we have been more than well pleased with all results. We have returned every dollar of farm income back into the channels of trade, either through new farm implements or through electrification and modernization of this old homestead farm. Without the efforts of the Federal Government to give us some form of parity, this trade would not have been turned to industry.

We see the need of soil conservation on our land as well as the land of our neighbors, and we are strongly in favor of Federal control and organization in an effort to bring about a farm parity. We favor a processing tax on wheat as a just income. The factory worker in the city is better off with a 10-cent loaf of bread and a job than a 9-cent loaf and no job. When we buy his farm implements—combines and tractors—we pay plenty of processing tax. It is just as sensible to put a part of our farm to grass as it is for the big lumber corporation to let the trees stand in the forest because they cannot be turned into lumber and sold at a profit. If they will produce lumber for me at 2 cents per foot, I will produce wheat for them at 50 cents per bushel.

When more of our neighbors can realize that the agricultural program is not political they will join in the concentrated effort. The present overproduction of hogs is just a sample of what we would have in the wheat, corn, cotton, and tobacco without Federal efforts toward control.

Yours very truly,

H. O. CRAIG.

ABILENE, KANS., February 20, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: I have been very much surprised at the action taken in the recent session of the House of Representatives in regard to parity payments to farmers. I hope the Senate will not make the same mistake but will show that they can rise above politics in a question as serious as this one is. On this issue rests a number of important questions, and until it is settled we will have the farm problem with us. Along with the farm problem is unemployment, which is the aftermath of low farm prices, and they cannot be separated. Also the unbalanced Budget and the huge national debt go hand in hand.

It will not make any difference which political party is in power, either. But the issue is clear, and the farmers of the Nation are expecting this Congress to provide funds for the parity payment for 1941. If prices get above parity in the year named, that will be fine. It will make the Budget look that much better. If prices are not at parity, then the appropriation is allowed.

Farmers today are not going to ask any favors above that which is for the benefit of the Nation as a whole, because we know that if agriculture prospers, the Nation prospers, and if agriculture fails, all other business fails in time. Farmers are expecting cooperation from all industry in matters of legislation which is so vital to them.

Whenever a consumer demands lower prices for a commodity he is buying, he should first see if it is out of line with his or her wages. Because the little more that commodity may or may not bring may be the cause of some of his friends' unemployment. The difference between the price of all agricultural products and parity in the retail trade would not be noticed to any extent. Why any people, if they understand the condition and what brought that condition, can ask for low farm prices is a puzzle to me. I think it the duty of every American to give the facts to the public by newspapers, radio, screen, and platform. If this is done, our farm problem is solved.

We appreciate your efforts in the past and know we can count on you to go to bat in this matter. We expect the funds to be made available either by appropriation or, better still, by a plan to make the farm program self-supporting and not be an issue at every session of Congress. It should be elastic, so that in years when parity is reached no payment is made. But in years when that isn't true the funds are on hand. We are going to measure every man in Congress as to how he has handled this question during this present session of the Legislature.

Yours very truly,

GRANT ENGLE,
President, Dickinson County Farm Bureau.

GOODLAND, KANS., February 6, 1940.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senator from Kansas, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: The farmers of this community are deeply concerned with the efforts of certain factions of our Congress in attempting in the name of economy to do away with parity payments which, as you know, are provided for in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

We feel that it is deeply vital to the continued existence of our democracy that agriculture be on a relative equality with industry. On behalf of the farmers of Sherman County we are therefore asking your active support in demanding that the appropriation for parity payments be reinstated.

After years of constant battle, we feel that we have, through the Agricultural Adjustment Act, secured a piece of farm legislation which, although not perfect, means everything to the farmers of this area.

Further, we feel that in order that this program can be maintained, it is not only practical but just that it should be self-supporting, and we are, for that reason, asking that you also actively support one of the so-called certificate plans of financing this program.

Very truly yours,

WALTER J. TRACKEL, Chairman,

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Hon. CLYDE M. REED,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATORS: Possibly no one in public life, in a position to render worth-while services to the farmers of Kansas and the Nation are the better qualified to render a greater service or to exercise intelligent judgment as to the crying needs of the western farmers than our United States Senators from Kansas.

I want to commend both of you gentlemen for what you have tried to do as well as what you have been instrumental in the way of accomplishment for the betterment of the farmers' situation.

Our State has lost half of our farm population during the past 40 years, thousands of our farmers have lost their farms, urban home owners have lost their homes, and we are rapidly drifting toward tenancy and sharecroppers for our farmers and tenantry among our urban population.

I believe both of you will agree with the mandates of the Kansas Farmers Union in conventions assembled, that the losses of Kansas farms have been due to the lack of farm income due to low prices for the products of the farm, the wide spread between the prices the farmer received for those farm commodities and the prices he was obliged to pay for the same commodities in the form of the finished products, which were all out of proportion to the prices he received for what he produced.

This disparity and loss of income has heaped upon the farmer a burden of debt, made it impossible for the farmer on the family-sized farm to support himself and family upon that farm, with the result that he was forced to abandon the farm as an owner, descend into tenancy, and finally into the small towns and cities, where he has entered the markets for the employment as laborers in competition with those already of the urban population, causing a further complication.

On behalf of the farmers of Kansas and the Kansas Farmers Union, I am soliciting your support for our debt-adjustment bill, S. 3509; the Lee tenancy bill, S. 1836; and the Farmers Union domestic-allotment bill, supporting the protection for the "family-sized farm as the ideal farm unit" to relieve the present urgent needs of the country.

Our farmers are unable to reconcile the opposites or the two extremes of abnormal surpluses of the necessities of life and practically a famine for nearly half of the Nation's population at the other extreme end of the income scale.

In the absence of a better program or policy that will solve the problems before us, we are making the appeal to you as our legal representatives to give us your best endeavors, lending yourselves to the enactment into law of our sponsored programs during this session of the Congress, or in the event there should be developed a better plan or program, so advise us and we shall do our very best in the way of any assistance that the present unjust situation as it affects our farmers might become a reality and the farms and homes of our farmers might be preserved unto their present owners.

Soliciting your continued assistance and support of our State and national Farmers Union program and the projects indicated, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. P. FENGEL,
President, Kansas Farmers Union.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We greatly appreciate the action of the Senate Appropriations Committee in restoring the parity funds to the agricultural appropriations bill. However, to bring agriculture to a full parity position, we respectfully urge your support of our request for an appropriation of $607,000,000 for parity payments and $100,000,000 additional funds for disposal of surpluses.

Based on prices as of December 15, 1939, this amount is necessary if farmers are to attain parity income under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, whose principles we uncompromisingly support. We invite your attention to our testimony in support of these recommendations appearing on pages 518–544 of the Senate committee hearings.

Farmers are mindful of the sympathetic interest and action taken by the Senate in recent years in meeting the farm problem. Nearly 6,000,000 farmers are cooperating under this law you have given us. They are doing their part; they are looking to you to do your part by appropriating the necessary funds.

We reaffirm our belief that the restoration of agriculture to a parity position with industry and labor is a first essential for the sound solution of the unemployment problem and for complete national recovery.

Sincerely yours,

EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We are enclosing our statement in regard to agricultural appropriations, filed with the secretary of the Subcommittee on Appropriations. We trust the views of our two large farm groups will be of real interest to you.

Cordially,

M. W. THATCHER, Chairman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1940.

To the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, Senate Committee on Appropriations, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with resolutions approved by recent conventions of our two national organizations representing a great segment of the farm folks of the West and Central West, we desire to place before you for consideration our statement, as follows:

PARITY BENEFIT PAYMENTS

We have fully supported the operations of the programs of the United States Department of Agriculture, carried on under the 1938 Farm Act. Great benefit has accrued to the farmers of this country as a result of the administration of that act. While we have for some time past urged on the Congress of the United States legislation which would provide the revenue for carrying on the national farm programs, yet and until more definite and sound legislation for agriculture is adopted, we will continue to support subsidy appropriations directed by the language of the 1938 Farm Act.

Since we have no data that we believe we could reasonably use to indicate the amount of appropriations requisite to provide parity of income for the basic agricultural commodities designated in the 1938 Farm Act, for application to the next fiscal year, we suggest that it would be quite safe for the Congress to appropriate a minimum of $300,000,000 for this purpose. If production and prices during the next fiscal year disclose that an appropriation of $300,000,000 is in excess of the funds needed, of course such excess funds could be covered back into the Treasury of the United States.

Our organizations look with disfavor upon a system of distribution and its price-making devices which calls upon the Congress to appropriate huge subsidies each year as an implement to agricultural income and which program of subsidies as directed under the 1938 Farm Act requires farmers through their legislative representatives to come to the Congress each year and literally panhandle for these subsidies. We look upon continued increases to the national deficit as unnecessary in this regard, and, as we have suggested by the bills that we have caused to be introduced in Congress, we hope that national legislation will soon be forthcoming which would use the income-certificate plan for those commodities to which it is readily applicable.

We will continue to give our full support to the 1938 Farm Act, and for continued subsidies in connection therewith for those commodities that apparently cannot well be protected with the use of the income-certificate plan.

FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

We consider the creation of this Corporation and its administration one of the most fundamental programs of this administration. It enjoys our enthusiastic support. Universal approval is accorded to it throughout our country. The only criticism that is offered is the failure of this administration to extend and expand the usefulness of the stamp plan. We are informed that the so-called stamp plan is in use at 50 points, and that there is need and demand for it at some 700 places in the United States. We think it is logical and fair to state that, if it has proven usefulness, it ought to be used to the hilt. Conversely, if it is not a desirable program, it ought to be discontinued. If it is most desirable at 50 places, and is needed and desirable at 700 places, it seems fair to state that we are only making use of one-fourteenth of its possible value to the economy of this country.

Based on such information as we can obtain, an appropriation of $72,000,000, along with the funds available under section 32, would carry on reasonable operations for a 12-month period in 100 areas, and, with an additional $75,000,000, the program can be carried on in 200 areas. Based on the best estimates we can make, an appropriation of $350,000,000 could blanket the United States in a most useful and important operation of this character. We urge that not only the $72,000,000 item be restored, but that an additional $75,000,000 be appropriated in order that this most worth-while institution may carry the program for the next year into 200 areas.

This program is of the greatest value to agriculture, as well as to those who actually have been living below a required minimum diet. It materially affects those farmers who do not enjoy receipts of parity benefit payments. Under the stamp plan, there has been a great increase in the consumption of butter, eggs, beans, prunes, and other fruits and vegetables not designated as basic commodities under the 1938 Farm Act.

We have studied furnished data which indicate under a full national stamp plan an increase in the consumption of butter over 13 percent, 12 percent for eggs, 23.7 percent for beans, 34.2 percent for dried fruits, 30.9 percent for raisins as the result of the so-called stamp-plan program. Obviously, that shows the program working at both ends of the problem—overproduction and underconsumption. This meets the calamity cry that refers to plowing under cotton, killing pigs, etc., with an intelligent plan which feeds hungry people who have been plowed out of factories and dumped on relief agencies.

Certainly no thoughtful person in the Congress or the Nation would suggest, as a part of the program to balance the Budget, the denial of 2½ cents a meal to those who must have this little increase in expenditure for their diet if they are to have reasonable health and (for some of them) be physically able to carry arms. There could hardly be any point in making huge appropriations for armament and at the same time fail to maintain the physical well-being of those who would be first called upon to use the arms.

Our organizations resent the suggestion that the so-called stamp plan find its appropriations from that which is provided under the caption of "relief." We firmly believe that this so-called stamp plan is to remain with us for many years. The prospective international markets for our farm products, and the prospective market within the Nation for our farm products, while so many are unemployed, is the concrete evidence that the stamp plan carried on by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation is an inevitable and required part of the program to rehabilitate not only business but people. We appropriate—and properly so—$500,000,000 against erosion of the farm lands, but we shudder to appropriate a comparable amount against the erosion of our people. The land is of no value without the people, except for those who can afford hunting lodges and feudal estates.

BANKHEAD-JONES ACT

We fully support the appropriation for $25,000,000 with which to carry on tenant purchase loans.

TAXES

We fully support the use of an internal tax which would cover the difference between an unbearably low cash price and a fair parity price for agricultural commodities. It is the declared purpose of the Congress, and it is now generally supported by the people, to provide ways and means for securing parity prices and parity of income for agriculture. Therefore no one giving such approval could logically oppose the use of a tax on an agricultural commodity which merely equalizes the difference between the low price and the fair exchange price. We are opposed to a general sales tax or a general manufacturers sales tax because we cannot find any fair method by which it may be employed.

We urge the Congress to appropriate the amounts suggested in this statement.

Respectfully submitted.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF GRAIN COOPERATIVES,

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Office of Information—Printing and Binding", on page 8, line 7, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$1,590,000" and insert "$1,684,870", so as to read:

For all printing and binding for the Department of Agriculture, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $1,684,870, including the purchase of reprints of scientific and technical articles published in periodicals and journals; the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the acts of January 12, 1895 (44 U. S. C. 111, 212–220, 222, 241, 244), March 4, 1915 (7 U. S. C. 418), and June 20, 1936 (5 U. S. C. 108), and in pursuance of the act approved March 30, 1906 (44 U. S. C. 214, 224), and also including not to exceed $250,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, and equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, but not including work done at the field printing plants of the Weather Bureau and of the Forest Service authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, in accordance with the act approved March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111, 220).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, after the word "Information", to strike out "$1,940,000" and insert "$2,034,870", so as to read:

Total, Office of Information, $2,034,870.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of Experiment Stations—Payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico for Agricultural Experiment Stations", on page 11, line 6, after "386–386b)", to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$70,000", so as to read:

Hawaii: To carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii," approved May 16, 1928 (7 U. S. C. 386–386b), $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, before we proceed further with the amendment, I should like to make a brief statement with reference to two or three items in the bill which appear to me to be of vast importance. I shall not delay the Senate long.

The first one is with reference to parity payments. I think the statements made by the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] with reference to parity payments are most sound. However, I wish to leave one further thought with the Members of the Senate.

There seems to be some question as to the correct name of this particular item. It is called parity payments. To me it appears only as a question of guaranteeing something to the farmer. In many instances it is not a parity payment. If the prices of the products which the farmer produces reach a certain point, not a cent of the money appropriated for parity payments will be spent. All the amendment does is to guarantee that if the prices of the commodities of the farmers do not reach 75 percent of parity, then the farmer will receive a part of the appropriation.

Mr. President, I believe that anyone who feels that we should legislate in matters beneficial to all citizens of the United States, appropriate money for this, subsidize that industry, and take care of labor in the matter of wages and hours, should feel that we are justified in telling the farmer that he shall also be protected by the law and by the money of this country.

Mr. President, another item in the bill which should be of deep concern to the American people and those who think of the Government is the question of farm tenancy. This morning I heard the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] give his definition of national defense. He believes that it should include a satisfied American people, including the farmers. There is no better way to bring about the proper kind of national defense than by having farm owners and home owners in the United States.

Farm tenancy has increased rapidly in this country during the past 50 years. I want the Members of this body fully to realize the importance of this particular item. Today in the United States more than 42 percent of all farmers, representing about 2,865,000 families, are tenants; and the number of tenants has been increasing at the rate of 40,000 a year. We can talk all we wish about national defense; but if we keep on increasing the number of farm tenants we shall not have the proper kind of national defense. If this trend is not checked in the near future there is great doubt whether this Nation's traditional system of family-sized farms can long survive.

Three years ago Congress took the first step toward a remedy by passing the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Under this legislation, the Farm Security Administration has made loans to nearly 7,000 tenant families to enable them to purchase land of their own. Congress provided that this program should be started on a cautious, experimental basis, authorizing appropriations of $10,000,000 for the first year, $25,000,000 for the second year, and $50,000,000 for each year thereafter.

Today, however, the experimental period is over and the program has proved itself ready for a sound and reasonable expansion. Repayments under the Bankhead-Jones program have exceeded expectations. Although only $92,544 fell due at the end of the first year of operation, the borrowers repaid $152,779, or 165 percent, of maturities. There is every reason to expect that the second year's collections, now under way, also will be more than satisfactory. In view of this splendid repayment record, there can be little question that the tenant purchase program has been established on a sound, self-liquidating basis. The Government is not giving anything to the farmer. The Government is only advancing some money by which he can obtain a home of his own. Every one of these loans is secured by a first mortgage on real estate, conservatively valued both by Government appraisers and by a county committee of three farmers who are thoroughly familiar with conditions in their locality. Moreover, the loans are repayable over a 40-year period at 3-percent interest. This means that in the great majority of cases the annual installments, plus taxes and insurance, amount to less than formerly was paid in rent for the same farm.

As a further protection for the Government's investment, every borrower must be approved by a committee of local farmers, who inquire carefully into his character and ability to make a success of a family-size farming enterprise. Loans are made only to American citizens, preferably with families, and additional preference is given to applicants who can make a down payment or who own the necessary livestock and equipment for operating a farm.

This year, although applications have been accepted in only about 1,300 counties, more than 133,000 requests have been received for the estimated 6,971 loans which it will be possible to make. This means that nearly 20 families have applied for every loan during this fiscal year. Moreover, almost 148,000 applications were received during the 2 previous years, and many of these must be reconsidered along with the current applications.

In view of these facts, it is obvious that the present tenant purchase program is by no means meeting the full needs of our farm people. Even if the full $50,000,000 authorization were appropriated each fiscal year, it would be possible to make farm owners out of only about 10,000 tenants annually.

During the period from 1930 to 1935 the number of tenants was increasing four times this fast; and although no census information is available on the growth of the tenancy since 1935, it is safe to assume that the rate of increase has not materially changed.

What I should like to impress upon the Members of the Senate is that one of the most serious problems in this country is that of the tenant farmer, the man who cannot or does not own his home. A country, whether it be the United States or any other country, that has home owners, is a country whose people will defend themselves. They will defend their government. They will defend their homes. They will defend their flag.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has been making a very interesting speech on the subject of the elimination of farm tenancy, and has emphasized national defense, and what the elimination of farm tenancy means to national defense.

During the past few months the whole world has stood in awe and admiration of the example of heroism and valor the people of Finland have set. As the Senator knows, between 90 and 95 percent of the farmers of Finland—and that is a great rural, agricultural country—own their own farms, their own homes, and doubtless one factor which made those people stand and fight with such courage and heroism and valor was the fact that they were fighting for their own homes and their own firesides. An interesting thing to note is that not many years ago most of those people had no homes or farms of their own, and that they have been able to become home owners and farm owners because of the help and leadership of the Finnish Government.

Wherever the problem of farm tenancy has been met and has been solved, whether in Finland or in Denmark or in Ireland, it has always been done through the help and the leadership and the guidance of the government. Is not that true?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is true, and that is the way it should be.

Mr. HILL. That is the way it should be; and yet in this country, with all of our vast wealth and vast resources, priding ourselves on having perhaps in many ways the highest civilization of any nation in the world, we find each year, as the Senator has said, a minimum of 40,000 farmers slipping out of the owner class into the farm-tenant class. We find that 42 percent of all the farmers of the Nation today are farm tenants; and in some States, like my own State of Alabama, we have a farm tenancy of about 65, or at least 64 percent.

I may say here that we Alabamans take pride in the fact that the farm-tenancy legislation under which we are making this appropriation to go in the pending bill was sponsored by my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has played such a leading part in writing on the statute books so much legislation for the benefit of our farmers.

I do not wish to take too much of the time of the Senator from New Mexico; but some dozen years ago I heard Dr. William E. Dodd, then professor of history at the University of Chicago, refer to the American farmer as "the vanishing American." Certainly during these latter years since the World War he has been the vanishing American, in that he has been slowly but surely slipping out of the status in which he enjoyed the economic conditions and the economic opportunities that we think of as rightfully belonging to an American. Unless we go forward with this farm-tenancy elimination program and make substantial appropriations to carry it out, we shall no longer have a nation of farmers. We shall have a nation of peasants. Is not that true?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I believe the Senator is correct.

There is nothing that brings more pride to the average human heart than to see a young couple who actually believe in the American institution of marriage striving and sacrificing to own even a little shack and say, "This is ours. It is our home." In my opinion, Mr. President, no legislation passed since the coming of the New Deal is more important to the welfare of the American people and the Government itself than that sponsored by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in saying to the American people, "We are going to help you. We are going to let you have some money. You will have to work; but in recompense for that work you, sir, when you pay as you are now paying, and as the record shows you will pay, will one day say, 'This is my home. This is my land. I am a free American.'"

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. The late Mark Twain expressed the thought several years ago by saying that almost any man worthy of his salt would fight to defend his home, but no one ever heard of a man going to war for his boarding house. The same thing certainly would apply in the case of the farm that is rented or is being occupied by a sharecropper, as all of us know who are familiar with the general type of buildings and facilities which are offered to those who are tenant farmers and sharecroppers.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Men will fight for a home when they will not fight for anything else.

Mr. President, the past actually comes back like a dream. Those of us who dare call ourselves free American citizens only have to go back and examine the progress of this country to find out readily how hard the American has fought for a home. After the Revolutionary War, and with the expansion of the United States through the vast areas to the west and the northwest and the south, what was the desire, what was the program which led to people from the eastern border or along the Atlantic coast making their way into Kentucky, into Missouri, into Illinois, and other places? They went there for the purpose of getting homes.

Another great piece of legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States in years past had the same idea and purpose. When the Homestead Act, affecting the national domain, was passed it was done for the express purpose of providing the American citizen with a piece of land, so that he could say, "This is my home. This is where I want to rear my family"; and see what that kind of progress has done in 150 years.

Through many circumstances, however, millions of families who formerly owned homes are now tenant farmers. Is it not good, sound policy to have the Government go ahead and carry out the purposes of the Bankhead-Jones Act?

Mr. President, there is another item that deals with the question of homes, the question of rehabilitation, and the question of good economics. That is the item which refers to water facilities. It is in the bill, beginning on page 86. That particular item is identical with the one contained in the 1940 appropriation act and in the 1941 Budget estimates. The item was eliminated from the House bill. It is believed by those who have investigated the matter that the item was disallowed by the House committee through a misunderstanding of the purposes for which the money would be used, since it was stated in the committee report on page 15 that it is the belief of the committee "that this activity, if it is to be continued, could be more efficiently conducted under the Reclamation Service."

The water-facilities program of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. President, which is financed from this item, stresses the development and construction of small water facilities, such as stock water tanks and ponds, wells, pumps, small dams, development of springs, water spreaders to guide floodwater onto hay bottoms or pasture lands, and similar improvements with a view to promoting better utilization of water and land resources in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States.

In that connection, Mr. President, let me say that out in the West water is the lifeblood of the existence of the people. Persons who have seen the Potomac and the Mississippi and the Hudson, but have not seen the semiarid country of the West, do not know what water is. Life itself depends upon trying to protect what little water one has. The rainfall is small. Hence this particular item has more to do with and will bring about more actual rehabilitation of farmers than anything else that can be done in certain areas of the country.

The emphasis of the water-facilities program is placed on improving agriculture, including stock-raising operations. The engineering problems are simple and of minor character. The water-facilities program is aimed at the rehabilitation of existing farm units. A poor farmer needs to put down a well on his place, even for domestic purposes. Can you not imagine the benefit the Government will confer upon that man by advancing him a few paltry dollars with which he can sink that well and actually keep his family in existence—money that he eventually pays back?

Water facilities are administered and maintained under agreements between the Department and the landowners, who agree to carry out essential land-use and water-conservation practices, and to repay the Government according to their ability within a 20-year period at 3-percent interest. To date an average of approximately 60 percent of the Government expenditures is being repaid. Facilities developed under this project during the fiscal year 1939 averaged only $600 of direct costs per item. Facilities are installed on individual farms and in small groups of farm families. To date most of the facilities installed have been on individual farms.

The House struck that item out completely, saying in its report, in effect, that the Reclamation Service is better able to handle that particular class of work. The Reclamation Service has been in existence for many, many years, and it has only 27 projects in the entire United States. That is proper, because it is dealing with big matters, it is dealing with construction that runs into millions of dollars, and it would not be in position to carry on the small work that is so necessary and so vital to the lives and the property of thousands of citizens.

I say to the Senate that it can be proven that in my State, with a little help in the way of appropriations for water facilities, we can do more good than by 10 times the expenditures in the way of relief. Go to some little community and the people will be found not to be in position to improve the little irrigation system, perhaps, not having the means to start with, and finally they abandon their little places and go over to the central point of relief distribution in order to get relief from the Government. Does it not seem fairer, and a sounder policy, to help those poor folks in communities with a little two-by-four advance of money, and let them carry on as they have been doing for years and years, being self-sustaining, having self-respect, instead of sending them to the relief rolls? I would rather have $50,000 for small dams and improvements of little irrigation ditches in country villages and the little valleys between the mountains of my State than $500,000 for relief. We would be doing more for human beings, more for the homes, really doing rehabilitating work.

Mr. President, the $500,000 would not be expended in any particular area. The money would reach to thousands of places and, in my opinion, the expenditure would be in keeping with what we are trying to do for the farm tenant, saving someone's home, keeping a man in his home, giving him security and adequacy of income from water, which is so essential in my State and in Nevada, Colorado, and southern Texas that it is, as I have before stated, the lifeblood in those areas.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement with reference to the remarks of the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

Several members of the committee which handled the pending bill and conducted the hearings are not nearly so familiar with the subject matter of the so-called little dams and their value as is the Senator from New Mexico. He has certainly rendered a valuable service to all those who are interested in this program by his activity on the subcommittee which reported the pending bill. He has made a great contribution to the program.

I may further state, in passing, that no member of the subcommittee was more diligent in attending all the long and tedious sessions of the committee and all the hearings than was the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, during the course of the debate on the pending bill I intend to offer two amendments, neither of which will affect the bill to any noticeable degree insofar as the total appropriations carried in the bill are concerned. One of the amendments which I will send to the desk relates to the Agricultural Marketing News Service with respect to truck movements of fruits and vegetables. The second amendment which I shall send to the desk relates to an added item for crop and livestock estimates, especially as to fruits and vegetables.

Mr. President, in connection with the consideration of the pending bill, I assume that every Member of the Senate fully realizes the energy and the patience and the deep sympathetic consideration displayed by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which held the hearings, not only to the Department of Agriculture, not only to the representatives of farm agencies, not only to the individual Members of the Congress who have appeared before the committee, but to the entire agricultural activity, to the entire agricultural industry, and because I know and can appreciate the great amount of work which was so sympathetically done I wish to pay tribute to the chairman of the subcommittee who is handling the bill on the floor of the Senate.

Certainly everyone who was interested and desired to appear has been heard; certainly every item in connection with the bill has been considered; certainly every person interested in a subject in any way related to the provisions of the bill has had opportunity to speak freely and to present his cause. However, I realize the necessity for compromise in all legislation. I appreciate the difficulties which beset the Senate committee in the consideration of the bill. I know what the Bureau of the Budget recommended, and I realize the attitude taken by the committee at the other end of the Capitol. I know that as a practical, realistic matter the chairman and the members of the committee have gone a long way toward giving us a well balanced, reasonable, logical, and practical measure. As I stated a moment ago, compromise is always necessary, and in this case I believe that one or two other items can well be considered in connection with the current law and added to the pending bill.

Mr. President, much objection will be raised against the bill because of the fact that it does not in all particulars carry with it the approval of the Bureau of the Budget. Some objection will likewise be presented because of the present unbalanced condition of the Federal Budget, and while I believe, as a natural inclination, that it is well for us to be guided, in some degree, at least, by the attitude of the Bureau of the Budget, while I realize how commendable an undertaking it is to effect at an early date a balance in the Federal Budget, I am different in my approach to that ultimate objective than are some of those who will vote against adding the items which may be called for by my amendments, or recommended by other Members of the Senate in connection with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, I believe that agriculture, a basic industry, is suffering from an ailment kindred to that which is evidenced in every other agricultural nation on earth, viz, the steady and ceaseless tendency toward overproduction. I also believe that if we are to have any semblance of balance in our Budget, we must have a balance in the Nation's economy; there must exist a balance between that which we are able to produce and that which we hope we will be able to consume. There must be a balance between available workers and job opportunities.

Because every agricultural nation in the world is suffering from overproduction, they have, in imitation of our own country, attempted by some method to eliminate devastating surpluses. Here, we have tried repeatedly, since the coming of these agricultural surpluses, with their attendant rural impoverishment, to buoy up our agricultural economy by various methods. In the Hoover administration, surpluses were purchased and stored in warehouses, in elevators, and in ships, but we found that surpluses, repeated year after year, rose up to destroy our agricultural prosperity. The present administration, taking over the responsibilities of government at a time when chaos and confusion characterized the national state of affairs, ordered immediate crop reductions all along the line where surpluses existed.

Everyone here knows that while that was essential to save our national well-being, while everyone appreciates the fact that we were then in the midst of the most devastating crisis in the peacetime history of the United States, and while history, when fairness and impartiality takes the place of bitter partisanship, will relate that the work accomplished by the leadership which took over the control of affairs in 1933 was unparalleled in history, yet we were severely criticized for the methods adopted then to care for our farm surplus problem. Plowing under, the slaughter of pigs, the limitation of farm acreages, and all the other efforts and methods met with bitter partisan denunciation from those who admitted they could not solve the farm problem when it was theirs, and from those who confessed they had no solution for it when it was ours.

WE NOW HAVE AN ADVANCED AND INTELLIGENT FARM PROGRAM

Mr. President, in the light of experience both here and abroad, under the leadership of the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, with the guidance of the Committees of the House and Senate, and the sympathetic cooperation of Members of Congress, we have devised what, in my judgment, is the most advanced and intelligent farm program in the history of our country.

The country has seen the work of this administration in rehabilitating tenant farmers and sharecroppers, in providing parity payments, in the many improved services for those engaged in the production of fruits and vegetables, the liberal farm credit policy of the Government, the attempt to rebuild rural community areas by a rural housing construction program, and the extension of electrical services to thousands of farm homes that never before enjoyed the benefit of these advanced facilities. Many other devices, methods, and agencies have been developed by the present administration. The farmer is better off today than when this administration came into being. So I wish to pay my respects to the tireless energy and the zeal of the administration in general and to the Secretary of Agriculture in particular.

Let me say that while I come from New York and while a great many persons believe that New York is just one great financial street we are, as a matter of fact, one of the largest agricultural producing States in the Union. We lead the United States in four or five crops, both in value and in volume of production. The value of our dairy industry exceeds that of any other State.

New York is a great agricultural State, one of the greatest in the Union, and as its representative in the Senate I should take a deep interest in an agricultural appropriation bill. I have an interest in the farmers of my State and I have evidenced that interest ever since I came to Congress, even though I represented an urban district, rather than a rural area, while I served as a Member of the House.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HILL. What the Senator has said is, of course, correct. We who live outside the great State of New York sometimes think of New York simply as a great industrial State.

Mr. President, I had the honor to serve with the distinguished Senator from New York for many years in the House of Representatives before he and I came to this body. In fact, as I recall, the Senator from New York and I entered the House of Representatives at the same time. I want to testify to the fact that the farmers of the country have no more faithful, no more devoted, or no more able friend than the Senator from New York. Just as we find him here today looking out for the farmers' interests and endeavoring to do what he can to promote the farmers' interests, so he was ever diligent and ever faithful when he was in the House of Representatives.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague for that very complimentary, though undeserved, interjection.

Many years ago, while a Member of the House, I became extremely interested in the McNary-Haugen bill. We organized an unofficial group of Representatives who were in sympathy with agriculture, and who recognized even at that time that farm income was diminishing, and that unless we realized the situation confronting agriculture, a severe crisis would certainly come upon us.

I was selected by that body as the chairman of its executive committee and, as such, I tried with all the energy at my command to convince my colleagues of the great need for enacting legislation along the line provided for in the McNary-Haugen bill. I do not know how much of the failure was due to the chairman of the executive committee, but we could neither convince the Congress nor the administration at that time that there was need for serious action in order to save agriculture.

At any rate, we failed until the present adminstration came into being.

MARKETING NEWS SERVICE

At this point I want to suggest two added amendments which, in my judgment, will add to the perfection of the measure now under consideration.

One of the amendments which I sent to the desk calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for marketing news service on the truck movement of fruits and vegetables. The truck movement, so far as fruits and vegetables are concerned, affects the general movement of these commodities, and is rather a recent development. It grew up with the automobile industry, unnoticed at first, until today it affects a large volume of the commodities moved from farm to market. If we are going to furnish the farmer with information concerning these commodities by other methods of transportation then this new method of transportation must have the same care as every other method.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McNARY. I may be pardoned for making this statement, but when I was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture many years ago I assisted in advancing the marketing news service, and, of course, have been interested in it since, and am now. I thought the offices we established throughout the country did take into consideration data concerning the shipment by truck of fruits, vegetables, and perishables. Is that not true?

Mr. MEAD. That is true to a certain extent.

Mr. McNARY. Then the Senator simply wants to expand that service now to different sections of the country?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; to make it more complete, as I said.

Mr. McNARY. When the Senator used the word "complete" I thought he wanted to obtain further and additional data which might be applicable to trucks, which used to be applicable only to commerce borne by water and by rail.

Mr. MEAD. I wanted it to be complete for every section of the country and every method of transportation. I appreciate my distinguished colleague's interjection, and I realize his deep and sympathetic attitude toward agriculture.

Truck movement of fruit and vegetables is playing an increasingly important part in distribution. It is estimated that approximately 50 percent of fruits and vegetables move to consumer markets in trucks. That gives Senators an idea of the development of this industry, and of the need of a complete news service affecting the marketing of these commodities.

When this produce came to market by trains and by ships, the reports of the Department of Agriculture made it possible to estimate in advance the probable market situation. This service provided a stabilizing influence to the market. With the advent of the truck, however, and the lack of information as to truck movements, the sudden arrival at the market of several truckloads of commodities has made the establishment of fair and reasonable prices difficult for both farmers and buyers. In other words, it leaves a chaotic condition when a stable condition would be more helpful to producer and consumer.

To alleviate this distressing condition, $75,000 additional is needed in order to have a more complete service with respect to the movement by truck of fruits and vegetables.

The Market News Service conducted by the Department is the only comprehensive service the farmers have to keep them advised of day-to-day changes in market conditions. Its value to the farmers and distributors has been firmly established. They could hardly do without it. The absence, however, of adequate reports of supplies moving by motortruck seriously impairs the value of marketing news service on shipments by rail and by boat.

CROP AND LIVESTOCK ESTIMATES

Mr. President, the other amendment which I shall call up provides for an appropriation of $100,000 of additional funds for crop and livestock estimates, especially for fruits and vegetables. In explanation of the amendment, let me say that the production of fruits and vegetables occupies one of the most important activities of farmers throughout the Nation. Fruits and vegetables are grown commercially in every State of the Union. While not all fruits and vegetables are grown in every State, especially for commercial production, yet every State has some fruits and some vegetables to contribute to the national economy.

The production of fruits and vegetables utilizes about 15,000,000 acres in this country. Their production accounts for approximately one-seventh of our total agricultural income. This production has greatly increased in the past 20 years, particularly as to vegetables, there being about two and a half times the vegetable production of the early 1920's. Notwithstanding this increase, the Department of Agriculture estimates on the dietary habits of the people of the Nation indicate that there are not enough fruits or vegetables produced to provide a balanced diet for all the people of the country. To effect a balanced diet and increase and encourage the proper production of these commodities would result in a general wholesome improvement in national health and well-being.

The present funds of the Department of Agriculture do not permit the continuance of reports on the marketing of fruits or vegetables, either frequently enough or in sufficient detail to enable the farmer intelligently to market his complete crop. Estimates of production for the most part have been issued monthly. Many fruit and vegetable crops begin the movement to market in an interval between the time the monthly reports are issued and when weather conditions or catastrophes render such monthly estimates completely out of date.

This makes it necessary for weekly reports to be of real value in the marketing of such commodities. Weekly reports, taking the place of monthly reports, would render a much better service and would allow for the interference of untimely conditions which render ineffective the infrequent reports necessitated by existing appropriations. Greater detail in reporting, along with more frequent reporting, would enable the farmer to adjust his marketing practices to the needs of his consumers.

My first amendment calls for an appropriation of $75,000 and is for an improved news service on the truck movement of fruits and vegetables. The second amendment calls for an appropriation of $100,000 for more frequent reports on fruits and vegetables and their marketing.

In view of the vast increase in fruit and vegetable production in this country, in view of the unfavorable condition—growing progressively worse each year—of the fruit and vegetable producers, and because of this new element in the transportation of fruits and vegetables—namely, the trucking industry—and also because of the very large producing areas adjacent to industrial centers which are devoted to the production of fruits and vegetables not now receiving the attention of the Department, I really believe that the two amendments I have sent to the desk should be included in the bill. Both of them are recommended by the farm organizations; both I know are essentially necessary to the orderly marketing of these important crops.

Each of the 48 States is now engaged in the production of fruits and vegetables, and each is vitally interested in the expansion of these two services. A few years ago, these services were curtailed in a number of important cities of the Nation, including my own home city. It occurs to me that instead of curtailing these services, as a result of the increased production of these two crops, we ought to be expanding the services.

NEW YORK MARKET REPORTERS MADE A VOLUNTARY EXPERIMENT

Mr. President, for a period last summer, and throughout the autumn, the market reporters for New York markets agreed to put in extra time in order to send out a 6 a. m. market report on fruits and vegetables. These men agreed to work overtime, to volunteer their services, to render to agriculture in that portion of the country the service which this amendment contemplates. In a word, they "tried it out." They gave this service as a sort of personal sacrifice toward the development of an improved agricultural economy. These men reached the market about 4 o'clock in the morning, and at 6 o'clock they released their reports. Radio stations carried the reports to farmers back in their homes at breakfast, and gave them the very latest information—complete information as to the condition in the markets at that particular time. They gave them information which would stabilize the market, information which would enable them better to serve the consumers and themselves—enlightenment which is necessary in the proper conduct of any industry. The service worked well. It worked so well that it would be difficult for our farmers to get along without it, to relinquish a gain they have already made, and to yield when victory is seemingly in their hands.

It is safe to say that this system proved to be one of the most popular services we have ever had. For several months the reporters on the New York market put in 12 hours a day just to try out the plan, and certainly they are entitled to much credit. It is obviously unfair to request them to continue working on this schedule. They cannot do it. In my judgment this important work ought to be made permanent. The only way it can be made permanent is by the approval of the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. President, the orderly processes invoked by this administration to stabilize the agricultural economy of our country were without a peer among the agricultural nations of the world; and certainly nothing in comparison was ever contemplated by any previous agricultural administration. Only the sympathetic cooperation of the President of the United States, the intelligent application by the Secretary of Agriculture and his aides to the discharge of a duty and responsibility, and the earnest and willing cooperation of the Congress—and particularly those in the Congress in charge of agricultural legislation—made this enviable record possible.

DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES IS A SUCCESS

I wish to support the disposition of surplus commodities by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. I am particularly interested in the activities of that branch of the Department, first, because the farm program is a national one; and, second, because I know of few activities by which the problems of the city and the country are dealt with more effectively than through this Corporation.

Last year Congress made available through the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation an amount equivalent to 30 percent of the customs revenue, and in addition, $113,000,000 to deal with surplus problems. Stated in the simplest terms, this is what the Secretary of Agriculture has been doing with that money:

He has been using it to help farmers faced with surplus agricultural production and low prices. According to the annual report of the Corporation to Congress those funds made it possible to buy nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs. Farmers in every State received help from this activity, and needy people in every State were benefited, for every pound of the supplies went to unemployed persons. Simply and effectively by that operation it was possible to help the farmers and to help needy persons as well. That activity helped to cut through the paradox of unfilled needs in the midst of plenty.

Some of us may live in cities, but nevertheless we have a real appreciation of the farm problem and of the scientific methods applied by this administration in the solution of that problem. We want the products of the farm, and we know that the farmer must have a decent living if we are to obtain them.

We know, in addition, that through the activities of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation our State and city welfare departments are receiving help to meet the problems of poverty and need. Some wishful thinkers had the idea that when war was declared, in spite of its horrors, it would mean prosperity to the United States. That this is not so we all know. It cannot be so, because as nations engaged in war or in preparations for war initiate purchases in our market of goods which are listed as equipment for war, they necessarily curtail their purchases of farm products and of other commodities in this country. The situation in providing exchange for such goods makes it compelling that they do so. We have all had experiences with either the elimination of the purchase of farm commodities or the threat on the part of other nations to cut off the purchase of farm commodities in the United States. We know that if they buy an airplane, they will not buy an added bale of cotton. We know that if their money is to be used in the purchase of ammunition, it will be withdrawn insofar as the purchase of tobacco is concerned. So the argument that war means a boom to the farmers of America is not a reality; nor is it contended to be such by anyone who knows the farm problems.

I was very much interested to find that during the past fiscal year the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation spent about $2,000,000 for apples, pears, and raisins. I have just been informed that during the current fiscal year they spent about $20,000,000 for those commodities. The reason is very simple. The foreign markets do not exist for those products in the way and in the volume in which they have existed in the past. Unless we realize the chaos that might develop in our agricultural economy as the result of these violent interruptions of purchases by foreign governments, as the result of these apparent shifts from agricultural goods to military equipment, and unless we make ready to meet those violent changes, we shall be faced with a very unstable condition at home.

The war has not settled our problem of unemployment any more than it has solved our agricultural problem. We hear a great deal of comment about the number of unemployed in this country. The unemployment problem is involved in this provision of the agricultural appropriation bill, because while the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation makes its purchases from the farm, they are ultimately consumed by the unemployed in the urban centers of our country.

With reference to the actual number of our people who are unemployed, I should like to believe the most favorable reports I have read lately, but as I delve into the statistics I am afraid I must subscribe to those which have been furnished by such organizations as the American Federation of Labor and others who have been studying the subject for a long period of time.

I find that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation has made available surplus commodities to about three and a half million families. From these statistics we can get some idea about the number of unemployed. The heads of these families, with their dependents, include a total of 13,500,000 persons who would be unable to consume the commodities which the farmers have produced with so much effort were it not for this particular agency of the Department of Agriculture. If we add to that number of 13,500,000 persons all those who are employed by W. P. A. and other Federal and local work-making programs, and then, if we ascertain how many of the 13,500,000 persons are of working age, we shall, in my judgment, come to the conclusion that somewhere in the neighborhood of eight or nine million persons in our country are without work today. The point I wish to make, however, is that this is a dual activity—beneficial on both ends—as helpful to the farmer as it is to the urban relief worker. It should receive the support of those who believe in a stabilized agricultural economy, and it certainly should have the added support of those who believe in properly and adequately taking care of those of our people who are on relief.

I am interested—and I know my colleagues are—in needy people, no matter where they may be. Therefore this item in the appropriation bill as it pertains to the future efficacy of this agency will, in my judgment, receive almost united support.

FOOD STAMP PLAN IS TREMENDOUSLY POPULAR

Like many of my associates, I have been watching with a great deal of interest another new development which has to do with the elimination of the devastating agricultural surplus.

That new activity is commonly referred to as the food-stamp plan. The food-stamp plan was tried out in Rochester, N. Y., in close proximity to my home. That is the first city in which the experiment was ever attempted. I know, and I can tell my colleagues, that it has been a tremendous success there. The people of Rochester, whether they be bankers or merchandisers or relief workers, no matter what their category, are willing to recommend a continuation of this method of getting the surplus from the farmer to the worker in the city. The increase in the commodities placed on the surplus list not only give promise of better markets for farmers, but mean that the neediest persons in our community are getting more of these protected foods. Moreover, every phase of retail and wholesale trade is uniformly stimulated. Even the bankers, who for a short time thought the increased business was causing them too much trouble, have ended by cooperating fully with the food-stamp plan.

Rochester is the only city in New York which has been designated for the food-stamp plan. I understand that the plan has been announced in about 60 other cities throughout the country, and that within the next few months it will expand to about 100 cities in all. I know that my State represents one of the largest markets for agricultural products in the United States; yet, because it is a big State, there is real danger that many of the areas which would be very materially helped by the program may not be designated.

The Senate is now considering the addition of $85,000,000 to the funds available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation for the program which has been so carefully tested and has proved so successful. It is my understanding that if such funds are made available, all of them cannot be used for the expansion of domestic consumption. Approximately one-half of the funds probably will be necessary for export encouragement, for the development of new uses, and for other current activities. Consequently, with the amount of money now under consideration, it will not be possible to do much more than run the program for the coming fiscal year in the 100 areas which will be selected this year.

According to the reports I have received, more than 700 communities in every section of the Nation have requested this program, and more applications are coming in all the time. The applications are not emanating from farm areas. They are not conveyed to the Department of Agriculture by representatives of farm organizations. The requests emanate from the urban centers of the country. They carry with them the recommendation of the chamber of commerce, of the board of trade, of the welfare department, in some cases of the bankers, and of other elements which are to be found in the cities of the United States. This program has proved itself to be very successful; and I desire again to make the point that the requests which are coming are not coming from the farmers of the country but from those who would benefit equally with the farmers who live in the urban centers.

As I have said, according to the reports I have received, 700 communities are now requesting the extension to them of the food-stamp program. I know of no areas in my State which do not want to have the program, and all would like to have it at a very early date; yet, Mr. President, very little expansion will be possible unless Congress appropriates more money than is being considered in connection with this bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have tendered an amendment to provide for the appropriation of $113,000,000, which is the same amount that was appropriated out of the Treasury last year for this purpose. I hope the Senator will be here to help us adopt it.

Mr. MEAD. Let me assure the Senator from Wisconsin of my support of the amendment which he proposes. I believe it will prove itself a very valuable asset in the stabilization of our agricultural economy. I am glad the Senator has taken an interest in this item. I know of his genuine interest in agriculture, and I am pleased to know of his particular interest in this item.

Mr. President, in my own thinking on this matter I have been guided by two principal considerations. The first is that this is a good program, with overwhelming public support. It is good for the farmers, for the unemployed, and for the businessmen. The second point is that the expansion has been gradual, with careful, businesslike administration. In view of the problems of the farm and the city, I very strongly feel that the designation of new communities during the coming fiscal year should not be impeded.

Last year, as the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has stated, we made available $113,000,000 for this kind of work. This year we are talking about appropriating $85,000,000—a curtailment of a program which, in my judgment, should be expanded. In my opinion, the developments of the foreign and domestic situations, and the emergence of a new program which is fundamentally sound, justify not only the appropriation of an amount of money at least equivalent to the amount we made available last year but an extension of the program and an increase of the appropriation.

I think we should make available sufficient funds to provide for at least 100 additional cities during the next fiscal year. This is an activity which is broadening the market for domestic agricultural products, and a program which does it by increasing the welfare of the people of our own country.

I do not like to face the responsibility for hampering one of the soundest developments in agricultural policy that we have witnessed in recent years. If 200 communities can be included in this program, we shall know that millions of farmers have been assured better markets for meats, dairy products, poultry, fruits, and vegetables. By the same token we can be sure that millions of needy people in our own country will have more of the food we are producing. That is why I believe it is simple caution and good common sense to make available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation at least as much money as was made available last year.

I wish to say, Mr. President, as I conclude, that reviewing the history of the agricultural nations of the earth, particularly since the termination of the World War, we find that as a result of machine innovations and the adoption of new methods and refinements, every nation in the world considered a major agricultural producing nation is producing more than it can market; is producing more than it can by its own internal program utilize without great loss, and in some cases without the ultimate destruction of the commodity. There was a time when wars were fought to acquire added acreage, in order to feed the peoples who lived within the conquering nation, but today it is not a case of adding to the productivity of the nations; the nations have another problem, that of eliminating overproductivity. America leads in the formation of an intelligent program for the elimination of its surplus agricultural commodities, and no agency has made a better contribution to that end than the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. I think the man who is at the head of that corporation, and those who aided him in the formation of this intelligent approach to a solution of the problem, merit our approval and our support, and we can best give it to him and to them by the adoption of the amendment which will be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but 5 or 6 minutes, to address myself to the appropriation bill now pending.

The increases which the Senate committee has written into the pending agricultural appropriation bill are more than justified. To attack the increases as being out of step with efforts to avoid increased taxes or raising the governmental debt limit is not justifiable.

The bill, as reported to the Senate, calls for $922,000,000, $208,000,000 more than when it passed the House. However, the Senate committee bill is still two hundred and sixty-two million under the appropriation for agriculture for the present year. What other department of the Government can show as large a cut in its appropriation from this year to next as that demonstrated at the moment, for agriculture? There is none.

Agricultural interests have every right to complain bitterly about the treatment they are receiving at this time. From the Budget offices of the administration, on up through the Halls of Congress, the economy paring knife has been used, not only freely, but carelessly, upon those items which would aid the farmer. The farmer seems to be looked to as the one to pay for every new gun and ship, for which a mad armament program calls, and this at a time when agriculture is in most desperate need.

As a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, over which he presides, I wish to pay my compliments to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who so patiently has labored through weeks of hearings to the end that worth-while gains might be saved for agriculture. His service through these years should never be forgotten by the farm people of every State. He has been able to win and save them much.

It is not becoming to us that we should find heart to cut or restrict benefit payments and other aids intended to accomplish fair prices for agriculture. It certainly is no cause for pride to point to the fact that while we acknowledge agriculture to be the foundation of the largest part of our Nation's prosperity, we permit so little of the national income to be shared by the farmer. The farm people constitute one-fourth of our entire population, yet are enjoying only 6 or 7 percent of the national income. How long may we expect such a condition to continue without dire consequences to the whole Nation?

Instead of increasing the amount carried by this agriculture appropriation bill by only $208,000,000, as the Senate committee has done, we would be fully justified in increasing it by at least $700,000,000. To do that would be only to fulfill the assurance of the Government to the farmers of something approaching a parity plan, and that was the assurance given in the passage of the farm-parity bill. We pass the law and then refuse to appropriate the funds necessary to comply with the law.

If this policy is to continue, we would better acknowledge the farm program a failure and move in its place such law as would insure an American price for that part of farm productions consumed by Americans and make the payment of such prices in no degree dependent upon appropriations by Congress. If the present program is to be continued, then we ought to show our good faith by providing the funds necessary to its success, if not by direct appropriation, then by some such legislation as the wheat-certificate plan. I do not prefer this plan except as it shall be demonstrated that no chance exists for the cost-of-production program as a substitute for the present farm program, and except as Congress may refuse to appropriate what is necessary to pay parity prices under the existing law and program.

As to balanced budgets and the avoidance of increasing debt limitations, let me suggest that not all this desirable thing be taken out of the farmer. And at this particular time it ought to be noted that so long as one-third of our total estimated governmental income for the year is budgeted for the Army, Navy, and armament, at least one-third of any economy cuts ought properly be exercised upon those Budget estimates. Operation upon these tremendous items is the real opportunity given Congress to accomplish economies. But to cut these agricultural appropriations more than the two hundred million already cut is to insult plain common sense.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to speak only a few moments in relation to the subject commented on by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who has just addressed the Senate.

I agree that the farmer, especially the dairy farmer, is the Nation's No. 1 forgotten man so far as Government aid is concerned. Out of almost a billion-dollar appropriation for agriculture it seems singularly strange that the dairy farmer does not get much help. The only item in the entire bill that is earmarked for the dairy industry is an appropriation for the Bureau of Dairy Industry, and that provides for total salaries and expenses of $731,405, out of which amount $353,580 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia. That does not leave much for the dairy farmer himself. The bill is top-heavy in its administrative costs and lopsided in its benefits.

We must remember that the dairy farmer gets none of the parity payments. There is also provision for the disposal of surplus commodities, $85,000,000 being appropriated for that purpose, but that, too, fails to pull the dairy farmer out of his economic bog.

My colleague the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is to offer an amendment which I will support 100 percent, and which has been commented on by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the amendment calling for the appropriation of $113,000,000. On March 30 last year I offered an amendment to the bill then pending asking that an additional $50,000,000 be used for the purchase of dairy products.

Mr. President, everyone appreciates that proceeding in this manner does not provide a cure, it is a palliative; but as we look abroad over this land of ours and see that the farmers, who compose the great economic segment which is, in fact, the very backbone of the Nation, are the ones who have not been receiving their just proportion of the national income, we can step aside and say that we will agree to a palliative in order to assist the farmer until a cure can be found.

Mr. President, I desire to insert in the RECORD certain tables which show how farm income in 1939 compares with farm income in 1929. They show that Wisconsin, the great dairy State, ranks forty-second in the list of State farm incomes and compared with other States she is receiving now 72 percent of what she received in 1929, whereas other States, which are receiving great sums from the Government have incomes over 100 percent parity. For example, we can consider Arizona 108 percent, Florida 104 percent, North Carolina 103 percent, and so on.

I ask that these tables be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, it is about time the Department of Agriculture began to realize that America's farm lands produce something besides wheat, corn, and cotton. In Wisconsin last year our cattle produced nearly 12,000,000,000 pounds of milk, which is an all-time high in Wisconsin. It represents 11 percent of all the milk produced in the United States. The Nation's dairy industry yields from 19 percent to 23 percent of the national farm income. It is high time that it received some recognition.

The Government pays some of the southern farm States benefits totaling as much as 32 percent of the total farm income in those States. Wisconsin's farm aid was whittled down to 7 percent of its total farm income last year.

Cash farm income, including Government payments, was higher in all East North Central States except Wisconsin.

The income from dairy products in Wisconsin makes up nearly 50 percent of the total farm income and that income has been torn to shreds by lower prices.

In the face of these facts it is difficult to see how the Department of Agriculture can continue to play favorites with certain segments of our agricultural economy. The dairy farmer contributes about 20 percent of the national farm income. In view of that fact there is no reason on earth why he should be treated like an illegitimate child when agricultural appropriations are made up.

I repeat, I am 100 percent back of the amendment which will be proposed by my colleague.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, pages 2999 and 3000 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 18 contain certain statements which were made with respect to the working balance in the Treasury of the United States which may give an erroneous impression unless corrected.

I was not on the floor of the Senate yesterday when these statements were made, and I take this opportunity to make clear the situation with respect to this working balance.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] stated that there existed today in the Treasury a working balance of $1,620,000,000, and inferred that this working balance could be used to pay in part for current expenditures of appropriations made by Congress in excess of the current revenue.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] interjected with the statement that he could see no need of maintaining a balance of $1,600,000,000, but that a balance in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000 should at all times be maintained as a working balance in the Treasury of the Government.

Both the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Kentucky inadvertently overlooked the fact that in the Budget submitted to Congress by the President on January 3, provision was made to reduce this working balance to the extent of $1,150,000,000 so as to avoid the necessity of increasing at this time the existing debt limit. Therefore, when this is done, as the Budget provides, the working unencumbered cash balance at the end of the fiscal year, July 1, 1940, will be approximately $500,000,000—just one-half of the amount stated by the Senator from Kentucky as being the minimum necessary for sound and prudent administration of the Government's fiscal affairs.

I simply rise, Mr. President, to make clear in the RECORD that under the Budget as now presented to Congress the working balance will be reduced to an amount as low as this Government could safely operate on.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In speaking of this reduction, is that exclusive of the $700,000,000 to be taken from other funds?

Mr. BYRD. That is exclusive of the $700,000,000, representing recovery from the Government corporations.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said yesterday, an adequate balance should at all times be maintained in the Treasury of the Government so as to meet all obligations coming due, and any further reduction in this working balance would not be in conformance with prudent fiscal operations. We should, therefore, not expect to use any part of the working balance left on July 1, 1940, of approximately $500,000,000 to pay any part of increased or new appropriations to be made by Congress.

It is well, I think, to note here, too, that in addition to reducing the working balance by $1,150,000,000, the Budget likewise proposes to recover from Government corporations the sum of $700,000,000 to be placed into the general Treasury in order to pay current expenditures. Up to this date, notwithstanding my frequent requests, the Budget Bureau has declined to give information as to the corporations and the amounts from which this recovery will be made.

Therefore, on March 12 I introduced a resolution, which is now pending before the Senate, requesting that this information, which should have been available months ago, be given immediately by the Director of the Budget.

I regard the diversion of these funds from the corporations as a vital question affecting the pending Budget, as unless such recovery is made, and unless the working balance is reduced, as provided in the Budget estimates, the existing Federal debt limit of $45,000,000,000 will have to be increased within the next fiscal appropriation year. I do not think any device should be adopted to exceed by subterfuge the legal debt limit.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have received numerous letters from my constituents in behalf of the necessary appropriations for Dutch elm disease control. As I understand, the Bureau of the Budget recommended some $500,000, and the House reduced that amount by $100,000.

I desire to say that while I cannot ask for the full amount which my constituents request, namely, $1,000,000 for the control of Dutch elm disease, I shall ask for the restoration of the $100,000 which was taken from the amount estimated by the Bureau of the Budget to be needed especially for research work in that particular field.

Mr. President, this research field is essential to the success of the control program. The Dutch elm disease was brought to this country on elm logs from Holland about 1926. It has been prevalent chiefly around New York City. Recently it has begun to spread rapidly in the Ohio River Valley. Although it is problematical whether it will be possible to eliminate completely this disease, it should not be allowed to spread. It should be held in check in the various areas where it is now at work, and attempts should be made to check further inroads on our elm trees.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to restore the $100,000 cut from this item by the House, so as to restore the amount to that recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next committee amendment is, on page 12, line 5, after the word "stations", to strike out "$6,860,000" and to insert "$6,865,000", so as to read:

In all, payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico for agricultural experiment stations, $6,865,000.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted a report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8641) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

"To complete carrying out the purposes of the joint resolution creating the Temporary National Economic Committee, approved June 16, 1938, to be available only for allocation to the departments and agencies represented on the committee for the necessary expenses thereof, including the objects specified under this head in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938, $60,000, fiscal year 1940, to remain available until the expiration of the Seventy-sixth Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$850,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$41,387"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$306,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is this the bill which contains the appropriation for grasshopper control?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What was the result of the conference on that amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. We were forced to recede on the matter of the increase, with, of course, a nonbinding understanding that the House would be liberal and consider it favorably if an emergency develops which requires the additional appropriation. There was an item of $2,000,000 in the bill and there was an unexpended balance of $400,000. The House conferees insisted that that be allowed to remain and be used, and that it would be adequate for immediate uses. They said that if we came back in another deficiency bill or any other bill and asked for an increase, they would not be insistent against the increase.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, has the Senator been in touch with other Senators who are particularly interested in this item since the conference?

Mr. ADAMS. We just concluded the conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Downey	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	Ellender	Lucas	Shipstead
Bailey	Frazier	Lundeen	Smathers
Bankhead	George	McCarran	Smith

Davis	La Follette	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am responsible for having suggested the absence of a quorum, in relation to the report on the deficiency bill conference report, because I knew that many other Senators, aside from myself, were very much interested in the item of $3,000,000 to be immediately available for grasshopper control which the Senate placed in the bill.

It is a matter of great regret to me that the Senate conferees have seen fit to recede on this item, because it must be clear to Senators that if anything is to be done with regard to grasshopper control the money must be made available in time to utilize it early this spring.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], as I understood him, stated that there was a nonbinding agreement of some kind with regard to the item.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, no conference committee can bind the House. What I mean is that the members of the conference committee said that so far as they were concerned they would be helpful in securing additional appropriations if the need for them developed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the program is to be continued at all it should be carried on on a comprehensive scale, and the need is just as clearly demonstrated now as it will be some time later. There is always a lag, as the Senator knows, and every other Senator knows, between the time an appropriation is made available and the time when the poison for the grasshoppers can be distributed into the areas where it is necessary.

Despite the statement which the Senator from Colorado made—I know he made it in the best of faith—I think we are confronted now with the issue whether or not we shall have an adequate program for grasshopper control this spring. If we do not get adequate funds now, the effectiveness of the program will be destroyed, even if Congress should determine later on to make a further sum of money available, because of the fact which I have already pointed out, that unless this poison is prepared and distributed at the proper time, it is ineffective and the money is largely wasted.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, everything the Senator from Wisconsin says is absolutely true, but may be emphasized by a further expression.

Any money appropriated too late is a wasted appropriation. I am interested in the other phase of this appropriation. Grasshopper control and Mormon-cricket control are combined in this item. I learn from the West that the grasshoppers and the Mormon crickets are now coming forward to destroy the infant vegetation. Unless we meet that problem with an appropriation now, to be immediately available, in the future we shall simply waste any money we may appropriate.

I think it was a great mistake for the Senate conferees to recede. I hope something may be done so that the action of the conferees may not be concurred in because I know the conditions in the West.

If I may proceed further on the Senator's time, it will not do to say that the infested areas have been reduced. The infested areas have not been reduced. Letters from those on the ground and communications from those who are in touch with the subject evince the fact that the infested areas are as they have been in the past, and unless we meet the condition now, when the infestation is in its infancy, we shall waste any money we may put into it in the future.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada for his statement, and I agree wholeheartedly with everything he has said.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. I wish to reinforce the statement of the Senator. Grasshoppers usually follow a wet season. This year we have had more moisture in Oklahoma than usual. I have seen the grasshoppers so thick out there that they ate up everything but the mortgage. [Laughter.] One year I planted some alfalfa. It was young and just coming up. We had 500 turkeys. The grasshoppers started swarming over the alfalfa, and I told my farmer partner to drive the turkeys down into the young alfalfa. He did so, and, believe it or not, it was not long until there was not a feather left on the turkeys. [Laughter.] The grasshoppers ate them all off.

When the grasshoppers really start, they are bad. We need all the law allows and all the traffic will bear to poison the grasshoppers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I appreciate the interruption of the Senator; but I trust that his humorous story will not divert the Senate from the serious aspects of this problem.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The situation confronting the conferees was this: The House had appropriated $2,000,000. There was $400,000 already available, which made a total of $2,400,000. The Senate added $1,000,000. The Senate conferees very vigorously and actively maintained the position of the Senate. One of the members of the conference from a Western State and I tried our best to persuade the House conferees to agree to the extra $1,000,000, but the House conferees said they would not agree. We either had to accept what they would agree to or get nowhere at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not wish anything I have said to be interpreted as any indication that I think the Senate conferees did not do everything they thought they could for this item. I am sure I have said nothing that can be so interpreted.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not, but I wished to let the Senator know exactly what confronted the Senate conferees in connection with this amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am sure the Senate conferees did everything they thought they could do in trying to bring about an agreement on this item. On the other hand, Mr. President, as we all know, often items of this kind are reinforced in their position if the Senate rejects the conference report and sends it back with further insistence upon an amendment, because such subsequent action indicates the Senate's determination.

I wish to point out in conclusion, as I did at the outset, that in my humble opinion we are now confronted with the issue as to whether or not there shall be any effective grasshopper-control program.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I remember, our experience with the attempt to poison grasshoppers has not been one which in my opinion is very creditable to Congress. Undoubtedly, moved by an earnest and honest desire to save money and not to appropriate money unless it was necessary, we have assumed an attitude of holding back the appropriation until we saw the great damage confronting the western part of the country, and then spasmodically tried to appropriate some money to poison the pests, finding from experience that we had let the day go by when we could effectively and economically have met the situation had we appropriated ample funds to begin with.

In the West, where grasshoppers usually occur, we often find that before we can go through the formula which is necessary, first to obtain the appropriation, then to obtain the necessary poison, and then to obtain the distribution of it, we are too late on the ground. The grasshoppers have already done their damage.

Mr. President, the grasshopper menace is a serious thing in some parts of the country. No one can tell with any degree of certainty what section of the country will be afflicted. Some of the worst grasshopper scourges the country has ever seen have been caused by a migratory grasshopper which came through the air, nobody knows how far, from a region thousands of miles away from the place where the grasshoppers did all the damage. It is not always possible to tell just what the danger is, and what we shall have to contend with. I do not believe any Senator would want to pass by the problem without doing anything, because it is a scourge over which the man who is producing the crop has no control whatever. He is not to blame in any degree, directly or indirectly, for the affliction which comes, and when it comes, especially from some species of the grasshopper, it is as destructive as a fire which burns everything up. There is nothing left when the grasshoppers get through. It seems to me that the only way effectively and economically to meet the situation is to be prepared in advance so that we may have the poison ready, if necessary, or at least have all the machinery put together so that almost overnight the poison can be applied where it ought to be applied to be effective.

I do not know whether or not there is anything else in the deficiency bill which is of such immediate importance that it would be detrimental to the country if the conference report were sent back. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] or the Senator from Colorado whether or not any serious damage or loss would occur if the report were now rejected by the Senate. It seems to me it would be good psychology to show the stand of the Senate and its determination to provide an ample appropriation for grasshopper destruction by rejecting the conference report, especially if there is nothing else in the bill which would be in serious danger. What has the Senator from Colorado to say in that respect?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there are a number of rather emergent items. There are no major items, but there are a number of salary items. A certain number of persons will have to be dismissed from the service if the deficiency bill is not passed.

Mr. NORRIS. When would the dismissal have to take place?

Mr. ADAMS. I think some of the terms expire on the 15th of March. Some have now expired, because there has been some delay in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. In the Senator's judgment, would there be any difference in the attitude of the House conferees if we should reject the conference report?

Mr. ADAMS. My judgment is that we should not accomplish anything.

Mr. McKELLAR. We should at least show what we want to do, and our earnestness in the matter. Such action might be effective and helpful in connection with future legislation.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator permit me to take just a moment of his time?

Mr. NORRIS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has the floor. If I may take just a moment of the Senator's time, I shall try to draw the picture as we saw it.

The Senate added $1,000,000 to the appropriation. Every effort was made by the Senate conferees to impress upon the House conferees the desirability and the necessity of the added appropriation. We were reminded by the House conferees that the House had appropriated $2,000,000. Four hundred thousand dollars was already available. We were also reminded that the actual infestation was not more than a third of what it was a year ago. I am saying that on the authority of the Department of Agriculture. Personally I do not know about it. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] makes a different statement. The officials of the Department of Agriculture brought to us plats showing the areas of infestation. Some areas which were badly infested a year ago were cleared up. We were not able to persuade the House conferees as to the immediate necessity for an amount greater than the $2,400,000 which would be immediately available. They said to us that "If we take back this appropriation with the added $1,000,000, we are sure that the House will reject the added $1,000,000." That was their statement. We know nothing as to the accuracy of it, of course.

My own feeling was that there was some merit in their contention; that is, that the $2,400,000 was a large appropriation for this purpose to start the work, in view of the assurance which was given us that if the infestation proved to be beyond the capacity of this appropriation to meet it, they would immediately urge the House, upon request, to add another appropriation.

A year ago in the deficiency bill the appropriation was $3,000,000. Subsequently we added $1,750,000. As a matter of fact, I think a year ago every cent asked for by the Bureau was appropriated. At that time we were very positively told that if we furnished all the money the Bureau requested, while they could not completely eradicate the grasshopper, there would be such a suppression of the pest that in the future it could be controlled with reduced appropriations.

Your conference committee acted in the best of faith. They tried to carry out the Senate's wishes. I am convinced that for us to go back for a further conference would merely result in delay, and would not accomplish anything.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the fallacy of the argument offered by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is that we must face different conditions with changing seasons. The grasshopper and the Mormon cricket do not always come forward at the same time in the same period of the year. Their prevalence depends largely on climatic conditions. In other words, the Senator from Oklahoma mentioned the fact that a wet season is usually followed by an infestation of grasshoppers. A different season may be followed by an infestation of Mormon crickets. But whether the season be of one kind or the other, the calamity is the same; and when we see farms and agricultural tracts absolutely wiped out, when we see the entire forage of the open domain destroyed, when we see farms put out of business because of these pests, we know that it would have been a thousand times better if the pests had been met at a time in their existence when they could have been destroyed.

If the grasshopper and the Mormon cricket are permitted to go from an adolescent state into a state in which the pest lays its eggs for the season yet to come, then the destruction of the grasshopper or Mormon cricket for this season does no good for the season that is to follow. A thousand times better would it be to appropriate the additional million dollars now, so that we may destroy the pest in its incipiency, than to permit it to go on and on, and keep on appropriating from year to year.

The answer to the argument that an appropriation will be made a month from now or 6 weeks from now is simply that it will be too late; the harm will have been accomplished, and a million dollars expended then will be a million dollars lost; whereas $3,000,000 expended now, as the appropriation bill provided when it left the Senate, might accomplish the desired results. To send the bill back to conference is the one and only thing to do if the Senate meant what it said when it appropriated the additional million dollars.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as one of the conferees, I simply wish to concur in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

I have always been sympathetic with appropriations for this purpose. I voted for them last year, and in the conference with the House the conferees then had a difficult time in arriving at the conclusion contained in the report securing the additional appropriation. In the conference upon this bill I think we spent more time upon this item than upon any other. The House conferees were united in their position. Among the House conferees was one Member from a Western State, asserting his intimate knowledge of the conditions with respect to the grasshopper pest. I must say that his arguments seemed to be very influential with his colleagues among the House conferees. They took the position stated by the Senator from Colorado—that the Department now have approximately $400,000 available, and that with this appropriation of $2,000,000 they would have sufficient funds to insure taking care of the matter. They then stated that if a situation should arise demanding more money we could rely upon their cooperation, and that they would join in reporting a joint resolution appropriating additional funds. They called to our attention the fact that when this bill was upon the floor of the House, no Member from any Western State offered an amendment seeking to raise the amount appropriated, calling it to our attention as evidence of the fact that the Members of the House from the Western States believed the amount to be sufficient.

Under the circumstances, we were confronted with the necessity of either agreeing with their contention or holding up the bill. We thought the wise thing to do was to agree to the $2,400,000 at this time, rather than to delay the report upon the bill.

I do not believe that by taking the bill back to conference we could change the situation or induce the House conferees to agree to a larger amount. My judgment is that the Senate should adopt the conference report. No one can tell whether or not the House would change its attitude; but that is my honest opinion after listening to the arguments that were made.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. If we should reject the conference report, would not the parliamentary situation be that the House conferees would then go back to the House after we had voted, and the House would take a vote on this item, and, of course, that would be controlling upon the House conferees? It would result, would it not, in a vote being taken by the House? Of course, if the House should reject the increase, there would be no use in our standing further for it. We should have to agree with them; but it seems to me it would put the matter right up to the House, which would vote directly on the question.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, of course that is one of the things that might follow. It would seem that it would be the proper thing to do. That was the reason why I called attention to the argument made by the House conferees, because we had discussed the question as to what would be the attitude of the House. That attitude they expressed in the way I have indicated, by calling attention to the fact that they had just passed upon the matter in the bill, and that not one word was uttered by any Member of the House in favor of an increased appropriation. They did call attention to the statement of the officials of the Department as to the reduced infestation, as indicated by the maps which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has had in his hands. I do not know anything about that. I will say that I have always relied upon the statements of the Members of the Senate from the Western States who are familiar with the matter, and have voted for this appropriation, and in conference have urged its retention; but I do not believe we shall arrive at any different solution as a result of sending the bill back to conference.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, it has been suggested or intimated that I was a member of the conference committee considering the item that is in dispute. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] was mistaken about that. I was not a member of the conference committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think I am mistaken about it. The Senator from North Dakota was on the subcommittee which considered the bill.

Mr. NYE. Quite right.

Mr. McKELLAR. But not on the conference committee.

Mr. NYE. But not on the conference committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. NYE. But I do not want to depreciate the weight of the report which the conferees bring back to the Senate. I have not any doubt that when they reported a sincere belief that nothing would be gained by sending the bill back to conference, they meant just what they said; but if we adopt their view I have every reason to believe that we will have the identical experience we had last summer and the summer before, when, by reason of the Senate finally giving in on the deficiency bill, we put the Bureau of Entomology to a task and then up against an experience which finally cost the United States Government a good many hundreds of thousands of dollars by reason of the interruption of a program, and waiting for the additional funds that were necessary to complete the program.

When, a year ago this coming spring, it was adequately demonstrated that the moneys appropriated were not sufficient, I distinctly remember how splendidly the House committee, the Senate committee, the House, and the Senate themselves responded. I think we were only a matter of 2 days in securing the passage through the Congress of a joint resolution affording sufficient funds, and only 1 other day was required to get the bill up to Hyde Park for signature and make the funds available; but waiting even a comparatively few days led to an exceedingly costly experience. It was costly to the morale of the persons who were engaged in the program of trying to exterminate the pest. It was costly, to say the least, in dollars; and the farmers who contribute as much or nearly as much as the Federal Government contributes in the way of labor in spreading the poison suffered an injury to their morale that slowed up the program in a terrific way.

The amount asked for this year is approximately half of the amount required last year. About the 21st of January the Bureau of the Budget made and sent to the Congress its estimate of what was needed. That estimate took into consideration the $400,000 carry-over from last year. It is not fair on the part of the House conferees to argue that that $400,000 has not been taken into consideration, for it has been. The estimate required $3,400,000 of appropriation for this year. If we should have the good fortune not to need all of that amount, no one would be happier than we from the States which are suffering this annual infestation.

Mr. President, except for the fact that the program undertaken last year and gone through with was so highly successful, I should no longer be insisting upon appropriations to conduct this sort of a program. There can be no denying the fact, however, that when the Bureau of Entomology is given what it declares itself to need to conduct its program, it can do a thorough job; but deny it the funds that it estimates to be necessary, and there is bound to be delay, and there is bound to be lack of the completeness of program which last year was proved possible of attainment.

Under all these circumstances I could not possibly feel justified in doing other than insisting, for my own part, that the Senate reject the conference report. If another day or 2 days should be required, I see no serious injury that will come to any one. If, then, there is failure on the part of our conferees to win their point, we can only do what we did last year, and take our chance ultimately of getting the additional funds if and when demonstration of their need is shown.

Mr. President, I feel called upon to say one thing more. I feel myself in no small part to blame for this failure. When the deficiency bill was sent to the Senate, there was apparently a desire to get it through the Senate committee as fast as was possible. The Bureau of Entomology desired to be heard upon this item; but the subcommittee was so complimentary as to suggest that we could probably get into the bill what was required without taking the time necessary to hear the Bureau of Entomology, and I withdrew my insistence upon a hearing for the Bureau. The consequence was that the Senate went to the House in conference without any record whatever of an adequate consideration of the needs of the grasshopper-infestation program. Never again under like circumstances will I consent to waive hearings, in the light of the experience which has been ours with the House in the past.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I agree with what has been said respecting the grasshopper situation. The Bureau of Entomology makes very careful estimates of what is needed. They conferred with the various agricultural colleges, and the past fall a committee was appointed, which held a conference regarding grasshopper control. They, together with the Bureau of Entomology, recommended that $3,000,000 plus was necessary in order to take care of the situation during the coming season, and I believe that it is necessary.

In the past we have had the experience of getting the poison too late, and it doing no good. In my particular section of North Dakota, in the northeast corner, during the last 2 years the farmers have succeeded in poisoning the grasshoppers early in the spring. They prepared their poison in April. But in some sections of the western part of the State they did not get the poison early enough; it was not spread sufficiently to cover the vacant land so the grasshoppers hatched and moved into my part of the State and did a great deal of damage later in the season, which was due to the poison not being applied in sufficient time to take care of the grasshopper menace.

I hope the conference report may be defeated, and the matter taken up with the conferees of the House again, and insistence made on the appropriation of the full amount asked for this purpose.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I support everything that has been said by the able Senators who have just spoken. I have been familiar for several years with the program that has been followed in Montana. It seems to me it would be very unwise to fail to appropriate a sufficient amount to carry on an effective campaign. If we are not to carry on such a campaign, it would be better to discontinue the work altogether. That has been the experience in Montana.

Several years ago we carried on a very effective campaign during the early part of the season of infestation, but we finally came to a point where we could not get the necessary bait to continue the combat against this very serious condition, with the result that there was a complete failure. If there is to be a successful campaign to eradicate this pest, we must have adequate funds, and have them ready at the time when they will be needed. Unless we can have them, it would be just as well to discontinue the program entirely.

I certainly think that the Senate, after having heard the facts which have been stated here this afternoon, should oppose the acceptance of the report.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the committee were confronted with two graphs, which I hold in my hand, one showing the infestation a year ago and the other showing the infestation at this time, both prepared by the Department of Agriculture. It is perfectly obvious from these reports that the areas of severe infestation have been very greatly reduced; I think more than one-third.

In the State of Montana, for instance, practically all of the State was included in the infested area. The last report shows that perhaps four-fifths of the State of Montana is clear.

We were confronted with these graphs. I wish Senators would look at them and see what has been accomplished; and if the things which have been accomplished mean anything, I think that something is to be said for the viewpoint of the House conferees that not quite as much of an appropriation would be required. We have tried to relieve the situation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it not a fact, however, that the amount proposed and carried in the bill as it passed the Senate was only a little more than half what was provided the year before, so that even the Senate position represents a marked decrease in the amount of funds available for this purpose; and I think we should take into consideration the fact that the infested area is less this year than last.

Another point I should like to make in that connection, if the Senator will bear with me, is that the incidence of infestation is heaviest upon the most productive land, and that it is not fair to say that the territory which is infested has been decreased in extent unless we take into consideration the productive character of the land which still remains infested.

From the standpoint of the farmer and from the standpoint of economy of the States which are infested with Mormon crickets and grasshoppers, the productive area is the one which is most important to the farmer and to the economies of the respective States.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I had practically concluded. I was merely endeavoring again to emphasize the fact that we were confronted in the conference with Members of the House who were adamant in their viewpoint, and we were confronted with some facts which we were not quite able to meet. The appropriation last year for this purpose was $3,000,000, as against the proposed appropriation this year of $2,000,000. That is, the recession in the appropriation is one-third.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, it seems that these maps merely prove the wisdom of the appropriation made last year and the effectiveness of the program. It looks to me as if we should follow through and complete the work, and that these graphs furnish an argument for an adequate appropriation to finish removing the pests.

I am not scientist enough to know, but from what I know about grasshoppers from a layman's standpoint, I imagine it is pretty hard to teach grasshoppers birth control, and there might be enough grasshoppers produced in the infested States to spread the grasshopper pest all over the farming area.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The representation was made to us, which I appreciate as a member of the conference, that the House of Representatives was willing to assume the same position they took last year, to make an initial appropriation, and if, as the season advanced, there was indication of grave danger, they would be willing to supplement the appropriation. Senators will remember that the supplemental appropriation made last year was not attached to any bill; it was under a separate resolution passed by the House upon a showing of the facts.

One other argument was made to us by the House conferees which undoubtedly has merit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt for just a moment, we are pursuing exactly the same plan that was pursued last year, and it was a success last year, why should it not be equally a success this year? We are doing exactly the same we did last year.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me make this further statement about the representation made to us by the House conferees. It is a known fact, which all must concede, that severely cold weather does kill off the grasshoppers. There is no question about that; it is the testimony of the Department. If there is a freeze at the right time in the spring the eggs are killed and any young grasshoppers which hatch are killed and there is not an infestation.

The House conferees argued that there has been unusually cold weather in the infested area this year, and that for that reason the House has a right to anticipate that the infestation will not be so great as in other years. If it is not so great, there is no need for the money. On the other hand, the House conferees gave us the assurance that if the grasshoppers should appear the conferees would do exactly what they did last year.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as to the graphs presented by the Senator from Colorado, first was the "Grasshopper survey, 1938; Infestation of crops expected in 1939." We were also presented with the next graph, "Grasshopper infestation expected in 1940, based on fall egg survey of 1939." So that the best information we can secure from the Department is this estimate. This is the infestation they expect, from the best scientific knowledge they have at hand, and the infestation they expect is only about one-third of what occurred this year, according to this graph.

The argument was made to us, that being true, that we would be appropriating $2,000,000, plus $400,000, and if it should turn out that the expectation was not justified, and a situation should arise demanding a larger amount, the House would join us in providing the needed money.

In view of the fact that the House conferees assured us that they would favor an appropriation in case an infestation developed, we thought it was best to follow the action included in the conference report.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, it is a fact, nevertheless, that the experts who prepared those charts have admitted that the amount necessary to carry on the campaign this year is the $3,500,000, which, I believe, was the original estimate. It seems to me that it is obvious that if we do not have the funds ready with which to carry on the campaign when the necessity appears, we will lose out entirely, and will be right back where we were in 1939. We promised the committee in 1939 that if we got the necessary funds a vigorous campaign would be made, and that if we failed we would not come back and ask them for more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to point out, in response to the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, that the amount carried by the Senate committee bill is less than the Budget estimate. I think we are all aware that the Budget Bureau has not been making overly generous estimates, certainly so far as any of our domestic programs are concerned. The Budget estimate was more than the Senate committee provided in its action upon this item.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator from South Carolina is familiar with that fact. We made that argument to the House conferees.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I also wish to point out that if it were possible to provide poison and get it distributed when the time comes for its use, it might be wise to follow the course of procedure which the House conferees urged, but I think the experience of last year and of previous years has demonstrated that there is a lag between the time when the need for funds is evident, and the action of Congress thereon, and the distribution of the poison to the areas where it is needed.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Is it not also true that it would be better for us to have more than we need than to be short? I know how these poisons are distributed. It means work, and no farmer wants to get the poison and mix it with bran and go out and scatter it unless it is necessary. The House conferees sent word, according to the report here, to this effect, "Wait until we see whether we need more, and then, if we need more, we will come back and ask for it."

Mr. President, let us turn this matter around, and let us get enough, and then if there is any left it is not to be used unless needed. It seems to me that is a wiser attitude to take than to wait and try to rush through a bill in the last minute to get the necessary material out there before the grasshoppers eat up the crops.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the experience with this control program clearly demonstrates the soundness of the position taken by the Senator from Oklahoma. In previous years, when we have had inadequate funds, the impression which the experts have been able to make upon the grasshoppers and the Mormon crickets has been negligible, and it looked as though the program was a failure, whereas last year, when adequate funds were supplied—the amount which the Bureau of Plant Entomology said was necessary—they made a very substantial showing in the effectiveness of this program.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I think the Senator's statement ought to be qualified at least to this extent, that the showing made by the Bureau of Entomology last year would have been much finer than it was if there had not been the delay occasioned by the wait for supplemental funds which had to be provided.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Exactly. That was the point I was just about to make; that although the funds supplied last year for this purpose were those estimated to be needed by the experts in this field, the delay occasioned by following the program which is now recommended by the House conferees and by the Senate conferees resulted in the program not being as effective as if the money had been made available. I believe, Mr. President, that if we are to have an adequate and effective program for grasshopper control and Morman cricket control, we have got to provide for it in the bill. So I hope the conference report will be rejected.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the statement made by the Senator from Colorado. He made the statement, illustrating it with maps, that the grasshopper infestation at the present time was much less than last year. That shows the good work that was done last year. But I want to call attention to the fact that the same people who made those maps have asked for the three and a half million dollars to take care of the situation this year. They need it or they would not have asked for it. If it turns out that too much money is appropriated, the part not needed will not be spent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. (Putting the question.) By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Ashurst	Davis	La Follette	Pittman
Austin	Donahey	Lee	Russell
Bailey	Downey	Lodge	Schwartz
Bankhead	Ellender	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Frazier	Lundeen	Sheppard
Barkley	George	McCarran	Shipstead
Bone	Gillette	McKellar	Smathers
Brown	Green	McNary	Stewart
Bulow	Guffey	Maloney	Taft
Byrd	Gurney	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Byrnes	Hale	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Harrison	Minton	Tobey
Caraway	Hatch	Murray	Townsend
Chandler	Hayden	Neely	Vandenberg
Chavez	Herring	Norris	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Nye	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Holman	O'Mahoney	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I have not taken any part in this discussion, and I do not want to delay the Senate now, except to call attention to two or three matters which have been brought out in the present debate.

During the last 7 years I have paid rather close attention to this particular type of appropriation. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has presented some graphs prepared by the Bureau of Entomology. Those graphs have very little meaning, Mr. President, because they are based on an egg count made in the field by representatives of the Bureau of Entomology. The number of insects that hatch out is dependent entirely on the climatic conditions—no, not on the Hatch bill, as suggested by some Senator, but on the hatching conditions. [Laughter.] But, Mr. President, when the egg hatches and the insect emerges, the insect has to eat, and has to eat immediately, and it eats the first green thing that is available. You cannot convince the insect that it can wait until the Congress of the United States has made an additional appropriation to prepare poison bait.

Mr. President, there have been times when additional appropriations were secured with reasonable dispatch—with exemplary dispatch. I recall that in 1935 the Bureau of Entomology estimated that $25,000,000 damage resulted to farmers and the farming interests of the Middle West because of the delay in making the appropriations.

I believe we should send the Senate conferees back with a record vote which they can show to the House conferees. I have no criticism of them or the action they have taken, but we ought to give them that vote so they can go back to the House conferees and say that the Senate insists on this item, which is the only one in question.

Mr. President, it will not do to compare the present situation with other situations when Congress has appropriated more money than perhaps was needed. In this case the money will not be used if it is not needed. The farmers are often faced with the condition that within 24 hours they see the tender growing crops destroyed by reason of the money requested not being made available by Congress. They simply cannot wait the slow processes or even the speedy processes of congressional action when millions upon millions of insects are destroying the farm crop.

So, when we compare the possibility of perhaps appropriating more than would be actually used with that unfortunate situation of finding that there is not enough available for a proper program, it seems to me that every Senator should be convinced of the wisdom of sending the Senate conferees back with a strong vote which they can present to the House conferees.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. Is it not true that the experts who made this chart are the same experts who told us they needed three and a half million dollars? If we take the experts' word in one case, it seems to me we ought to be influenced by the experts' recommendation in the other.

Mr. GILLETTE. The amount that was appropriated is less than that which the experts themselves said was necessary. From my experience with them in the past, I believe they would not make an overstatement as to the amount necessary.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We have had experience in the last few years in not obtaining appropriations in time to accomplish what was necessary to accomplish. I remember that one time an appropriation of a certain amount of money for combatting insects was defeated, and then after the grasshoppers hatched they overran the countryside in such great quantities that an emergency appropriation was put through Congress, but it came rather too late.

Mr. President, a few dollars utilized at the right time would do more good than a thousand dollars made available too late. I think the Senator from Iowa is absolutely correct. I thank him for calling to the attention of the Senate the fact that to get the appropriation in time is as important as the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator from Minnesota who did yeoman service in this work in the last few years.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Chair state the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." I transfer the pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] and will vote. I vote "nay." I am not advised how either the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Oklahoma would vote if present.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained on business in various Government departments.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Delaware [Mr.

HUGHES], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea," and the Senator from Utah would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—25

Adams	Chandler	Lodge	Tobey

So the conference report was rejected.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments, request a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot finish the agricultural appropriation bill today. I think it is almost time to suspend, unless the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] wishes to proceed further.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to move a recess at 5 o'clock?

Mr. BARKLEY. I had planned to do so.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think it would serve any useful purpose to continue further this afternoon. However, I should like to make a brief statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yesterday the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] propounded an inquiry as to whether or not any commodities which have been purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation were the same agricultural commodities as have been dealt with in the reciprocal-trade agreements. I stated that I was not sure of my ground, but that it was my recollection that no such commodities have been purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

It seems that my recollection was in error, and that some of those commodities have been dealt with in the reciprocal-trade agreements. I have a statement from the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation dealing with this subject. The statement was made with particular reference to a statement attributed to Representative REED of New York to the effect that the Surplus Commodities Corporation had spent $30,000,000 on surplus products for distribution to the needy, when $92,000,000 worth of the same products were coming in from abroad. The statement deals fully with the statement attributed to Representative REED of New York, and gives a rather full discussion of the various commodities which have been purchased, and how they have been affected by the reciprocal-trade agreements. I ask unanimous consent that this statement may be printed in full in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Surplus Commodities Corporation had spent $30,000,000 on surplus products for distribution to the needy when $92,000,000 worth of the same products was coming in from abroad.

Mr. REED was doubtless referring to the tabulation introduced by him during the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act (vol. I, p. 469). That table includes 20 products (fish, apples, beets, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, cheese, eggs, grapefruit, grapes, milk, canned peas, dried peas, fresh peas, potatoes, raisins, rice, tomatoes, and wheat cereal), which the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchased at some time during the 2 fiscal years, 1937–38 and 1938–39.

An examination of the actual situation with respect to each of these commodities, as regards the relation between duty reductions under the trade agreements and purchases by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, reveals the following two facts:

(a) With few exceptions, duty reductions have not coincided with Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases, either because they applied to quite different commodities or because they were in effect at wholly different times of the year.

(b) The few exceptions relate to certain products on which United States duties were reduced in the trade agreements with Canada. By the terms of those agreements, Canada granted to the United States as great (or greater) reductions in the Canadian duties on these same products imported into Canada from the United States as were granted by the United States to Canada. Moreover, since the United States regularly exports larger quantities of each of these products to Canada than Canada exports to the United States, the net result of the reciprocal reductions was to reduce the domestic surplus with which the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation had to cope.

In general, it may be said that the presentation of this material has provided an excellent illustration of the great care that has been taken in the trade-agreements program to prevent duty reductions on farm products from harming domestic producers. A statement of the specific commodity situations involved is presented in the following paragraphs.

Importations of fish and cheese accounted for over 90 percent of the total imports ($83,843,000 out of $92,298,000). The total purchases by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation of these two products amounted to approximately $740,000, as compared with total purchases of approximately $30,000,000. Purchases of fish were made only in the month of June 1938, because of a temporary emergency situation following record fish runs in that year. Nearly 75 percent of the total imports of cheese into the United States during the past 2 fiscal years came from Italy, Switzerland, the Netherlands, and France. The types of cheese imported differ from those produced domestically and are brought in to meet particular consumer demand. Purchases of cheese by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation were limited to the average type American cheddar cheese, and were made only in the month of June 1938.

The remaining imports included 18 commodities and totaled in value approximately $8,500,000. Imports of 11 of these 18 commodities were nonexistent or negligible. For example, the importation during 2 years of 52,000 bushels of apples, a half ton of beets, 170 tons of cabbage, 135 tons of carrots, 20 tons of cauliflower, and 96,000 pounds of celery is listed. No one of these is equivalent to one-tenth of 1 percent of our domestic production. The importation of 22,000 gallons of milk is listed, as well as 430 tons of raisins. The more substantial items included are 110,200,000 pounds of cheese valued at about $24,000,000; 65,800,000 pounds of fish valued at $60,300,000; about $1,000,000 worth of grapes; 137,000,000 pounds of rice; and 121,000,000 pounds of tomatoes valued at $2,600,000.

It is apparently assumed that the purchases of these commodities would have been unnecessary if they had not been imported. The facts are as follows:

The small quantities of vegetables enumerated which had an aggregate value of less than $15,000 in 2 years practically all came into the country when domestic supplies were out of season. This is also true of the larger item, fresh tomatoes, though even the imports, which came in mainly during December, January, and February of the 2 years, were equal to 1 percent of our own domestic supplies.

The grapefruit imports valued at $155,000 in the 2 years may be compared with a farm value of fifteen to twenty-one million dollars for the United States crop. Grapefruit production has been expanding very rapidly. In 1938, for example, it was over twice the size of the 1936 crop. It is this factor that has necessitated Federal aid to the industry. I am extremely doubtful that the exclusion of a few thousand boxes with production in excess of 40,000,000 boxes would be of any benefit to producers and it would be unfortunate for the few consumers who can afford to buy grapefruit out of season. The same statement is applicable to the negligible imports of fresh peas, principally from Mexico, the small amount of table grapes from Argentina, Chile, and the Union of South Africa reported principally from March until May.

Imports of raisins into the United States, which have been declining each year since 1930, are made up almost entirely of fancy pack, high-grade cluster raisins intended for the holiday trade.

Purchases by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation have consisted of the ordinary seedless or muscat raisins of which approximately 25 percent of the annual United States supplies are exported.

Approximately 90 percent of the United States imports of milled rice, mentioned by Representative REED, consist of broken rice, of which the bulk comes from the Netherlands and Belgium. The particular type of broken rice imported is a byproduct of the milling of rice for human consumption and includes only the smallest size screenings. This rice is utilized almost entirely by brewers who mix it with malt in order to produce a lighter beer. The type of rice acquired by the Corporation is similar to that which was exported during the 1938 fiscal year in quantities four times as great as the quantities of broken rice imported during the same period.

Of the white potato imports into the United States mentioned by Representative REED, approximately 95 percent are certified seed potatoes which are not intended for human consumption. The imports of potatoes for consumption are negligible. All potatoes purchased by the Corporation have been distributed for consumption by needy unemployed families on relief.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Georgia for finally obtaining the correct figures in connection with this conundrum. I myself have been seeking them for some time, and I am sure his report is now accurate.

The report shows that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation spent $30,000,000 to help reduce surpluses in commodities which had $92,000,000 worth of exports. So the net result of the expenditure from the Treasury under the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation was merely to pay for about a third of the imports, which it seems to me is a thoroughly ludicrous and incongruous situation.

As I glance through the letter presented by the able Senator from Georgia the response is that there are compensating exports in these same crops. However, the fact remains that we confront the interesting picture that one branch of the Government is seeking to relieve surplus burdens in farm commodities while those same farm commodities are coming in competitively from abroad. Meanwhile another department of the Government is making trade treaties further reducing the tariffs upon every one of the items to which the Senator from Georgia's statement refers.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. A number of Senators on this side of the aisle, including myself, are interested to know whether or not the Senator would mind enumerating the commodities to which he refers, if he has the information available.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very happy to do so if the Senate wishes to take the time. The commodities are: Apples, beets, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, cheese, eggs, fish, grapefruit, grapes, milk, peas, potatoes, raisins, rice, and tomatoes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senator from Michigan seen the monthly export and import report, No. 239, issued February 3, 1940, by the United States Department of Agriculture, Agricultural Marketing Service, relating to exports of dairy products, oleomargarine, and eggs from the United States for the month of December 1939, as well as the imports of dairy products and eggs for the same month?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have not seen the report.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think it furnishes a very striking illustration of the point the Senator has made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that the Senator put it in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not wish to part with the copy of the report which I have, because I wish to make use of it within the next few days. However, if I can find another copy I shall be glad to put it in the RECORD later.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I was not able to follow the entire list of commodities which the Senator read, but as I understood the first item he read was apples.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator contend that the apple industry has not benefited as a result of the reciprocal trade agreement policy?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, that is entirely beside the point. I am not arguing that question. I am arguing the point that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation is using its funds to reduce surpluses—I will give the Senator the figures. Four million nine hundred and seventy-eight thousand dollars was spent to help reduce the surplus in apples, while 52,000 bushels of apples were coming in as imports. Meanwhile the reciprocal-trade treaties in respect to apples are reducing the tariffs from 25 cents a bushel to 15 cents a bushel through the Canadian agreement.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator add what I think is a very essential point—the extent to which the apple industry has benefited as a result of having opened up for it markets in Belgium, Holland, France, England, and other countries through the medium of the agreements which were made with those countries?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I stated at the outset of my observations that the rebuttal is that there is an export offset. I do not have the export figures. I am commenting only upon the exhibit submitted by the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the statement by the Senator from Michigan pretty well goes to the crux of the matter. It is all very well to leave out the important part of any figures. I do not care to enter into an argument about reciprocal-trade agreements in general; but I know that if there is any group in my State which is anxious for the continuation of the trade-agreements program, it is those who are engaged in the production of apples. I think the Senator from Michigan made an unfortunate choice when he started the list with apples, because apple producers have benefited very materially as a result of the program.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment.

Mr. President, I chose no example. "Apples" happens to begin with "A," and it is the first commodity on the list. I read the list to the Senator from Florida in response to his inquiry. I trust I was justified in showing him that courtesy.

The reciprocal-trade treaties enter into this particular argument only incidentally. I was dealing with the contemplation—fundamentally involved in the pending bill—that in 1938 and 1939 we spent $30,000,000 of Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation money to reduce surpluses, to which imports of $92,000,000 in the same commodities contributed. It does not seem to me to make sense.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho and Mr. SCHWELLENBACH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I must first yield to the Senator from Idaho. Then I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, just a moment. It might be interesting to state that since that treaty was ratified, England has issued an embargo on the shipment of apples; and I suspect that the apple growers of Washington and Idaho are not so happy about the situation today.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. What the Senator from Idaho says is correct. It has resulted in a feeling of dissatisfaction upon the part of our people so far as England is concerned. That is a matter of foreign relations which I do not think it is necessary to consider here; but the point the Senator from Michigan makes is that we are making a mistake in appropriating money for the Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase surpluses in this country because of the fact that in the case of certain of these commodities we are permitting imports. I am speaking purely of apples because that is the only item on the list that I understood the Senator to refer to, the first one that I happened to hear. But if, as a result of this program, we have increased the exports by ten times the amount of the imports that come in, certainly it is no argument against this item in the agricultural appropriation bill to object to that, if we get 10 to 1. It cannot be used as an argument against our taking some of the money to take care of the surplus. Had it not been for the program of the reciprocal-trade agreements, the surplus of apples which would necessarily have been taken care of out of appropriations in this bill would probably exceed by 10 times the amount which is actually necessary in this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not wish to have the Senator from Washington put into my mouth words which attribute to me a purpose which I do not hold in connection with this discussion.

I happen to favor the appropriation for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, and have repeatedly so stated. The purpose of this observation has nothing to do with the fundamental idea of reducing surpluses in this fashion. I submit, however, that if we are to reduce surpluses in this fashion, we should do equally well for agriculture if we were to prohibit competitive imports whenever there is any agricultural surplus in this country.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in view of the debate which has occurred I think I will change my plan as originally stated, and have inserted in the RECORD at this point, with the permission of the Senate, Report No. 239, issued February 3, 1940, by the United States Department of Agriculture, relating to imports and exports of dairy products, oleomargarine, and eggs, distinctly and clearly showing an excess of imports over exports, and raising the perfectly natural query how much of these imports had to be absorbed by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. I should like to have this original document returned to me tomorrow, if convenient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that there may be incorporated in the RECORD at this point the report of the Department of Agriculture indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask one question about the exhibit. I am not sure that I understand just what the exhibit is; but, from the remarks made by the able Senator from Vermont, I was under the impression that he was giving to the Senate and the country a statement of the exports and imports for only 1 month. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I notice that there is a summary for more than the month of December, but the detail relates to the month of December 1939. Here is a line giving the figures for January to December, inclusive, 1939; and here is another line giving the figures for January to December, inclusive, 1938. So, it is clear that the report also includes a summary of the year. The table is endorsed:

(These export and import statistics are compiled from official records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and are subject to revision.)

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am not going to make any objection to the introduction of the exhibit; but I want to corroborate the observation made by the able Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] just a few moments ago with respect to the introduction of statistics of this kind. I am not complaining at all; but it only goes to show that when we take the statistics for just 1 month, or 2 months, or any portion of the year, and attempt to explain to the people something definite with respect to how these reciprocal-trade agreements are working, it seems to me that the statistics do not present the true picture.

One of the things I have constantly complained about in connection with the reciprocal-trade agreements is the statistics that have been introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from time to time. I do not say that any Senator or any Member of the House introduces them with other than the best of intentions from his viewpoint; but it seems to me that figures and statistics in connection with this very important program should be somewhat all-inclusive, and represent a distinct period of a few years, rather than any particular month or any particular section of the year, in order really to demonstrate how the agreements may or may not work.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I rise only to observe that my purpose in offering this exhibit was rather limited; but if any inference can be made that helps on the issue relating to trade agreements, I am glad to have the exhibit used for that purpose. So far as my offer went, it is not subject to the criticism suggested by the very learned Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the table referred to by the Senator from Vermont?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CENSUS QUESTIONNAIRES

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I desire at this time to give notice that upon completion of the consideration of the pending legislation I shall seek to have Senate resolution 231, known as the census resolution, become the pending business before the Senate, especially in view of the fact that on April 1 the census takers will begin their enumeration.

The Committee on Commerce has filed a report today giving the green light to this resolution. Therefore, in view of what I have explained, I ask the majority leader if he will not use his high office and his great influence and join me in bringing Senate resolution 231 before the Senate immediately at the conclusion of the consideration of the pending measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Replying to the Senator from New Hampshire, my answer would be "No." It has been planned for some weeks to take up the trade-agreements bill as soon as the agricultural appropriation bill is out of the way, and I do not think the Senator's resolution or any other legislative matter should intervene before that measure is taken up for consideration. The trade-agreements bill has been put off. It was reported nearly 2 weeks ago by the Committee on Finance, and I could not consent to the taking up of the Senator's resolution, or any other measure, in advance of that, because it has been understood from the beginning that it would follow the pending bill. I feel that I must be frank with the Senator.

Mr. TOBEY. I want the Senator to be very frank with me, and I will be so with him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot cooperate with him for the purpose of having his measure injected ahead of the trade-agreements bill.

Mr. TOBEY. I point out to the majority leader that the trade agreements to which he refers, and the measure covering which he would have take precedence over anything else at this time, will not expire until June 12, whereas the taking of the census will start on the 1st of April. He who runs may read the import of that statement.

I will go a little further and inform the Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, of the statement made in a press interview by a member of the Committee on Commerce a few days ago. This was a statement by one who fought the resolution in committee, as was his privilege and right, and I honor him for doing it, because he thought it was wrong. However, after the committee had voted to report the resolution he gave to the press this statement:

I will use every effort in my power to see that Senate Resolution 231 does not have a chance to get to the Senate floor.

I say to the majority leader that that is not a combination in restraint of trade, but it may well be a combination in restraint of good legislation, and I speak by the card when I say to him and to this honorable body that if I ever knew of righteous indignation in the *n*th degree, I know it has been expressed all over this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf of Mexico to Canada, over the questions to be asked in the coming census, and if there is to be any cutting off of an opportunity to present this matter, or any ganging up against it, those responsible will not have to answer to me, but they will have to answer to the people of this country, regardless of party.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what the Senator means by that, but so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to answer to anyone, including himself, for my attitude in the matter which he has brought before the Senate at this time. I have no way of identifying the committee member who voted against the resolution in the committee a few days ago, and who is threatening to use all legislative means to prevent it coming before the Senate. I do not know anything about that. I did not see the article referred to, and I do not know whether it is an accurate quotation of the Senator referred to or not. But regardless of all that, I realize the interest of the Senator from New Hampshire in this proposal. He has whipped up a lot of furor and fuss about it, and I can understand how he desires to continue to agitate it here, and probably get a vote on it. But, as I stated a few minutes ago, it has been understood for 2 weeks at least, even before the committee reported the trade-agreements bill, that it would follow the agricultural appropriation bill. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has been waiting patiently to have his bill considered, and was waiting even before the agricultural appropriation bill was taken up. No one knows how long the consideration of that bill will take. If there are any amendments added to it, of course, it will have to go to conference.

Mr. TOBEY. I make the prediction that I think it will take to April 2, so as to shut off consideration of the census resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may contribute to its being delayed that long, but I have no reason to believe that the trade-agreements bill should take more than a week. It should not take longer than that. So far as the debate is concerned, I do not see why it should take longer than 1 week.

Mr. TOBEY. Then, at the end of 1 week, if I make the request of the Senator, assuming he is correct, will he join me in taking up Senate Resolution 231, or giving it the "green light"?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will cross that bridge when I come to it. I do not desire to pledge myself as to what bill may come up. The Senator may get his measure brought up and get a vote on it; but I do not wish to say now what my attitude will be in the future.

Mr. TOBEY. What does the Senator say to my suggestion that the present reciprocal-trade agreements will continue, under the statute, until June 12?

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that.

Mr. TOBEY. And the enumerators will begin to take the census April 1, only about 10 days from now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say, also, that the Secretary of Commerce has provided a way by which anyone who objects to answering certain questions may mail in his answer. Everyone knows those answers are not to be made public. If anyone dislikes to tell his neighbor, who may happen to be an enumerator, whether he made over $5,000 last year or not, he may mail a confidential letter to the Secretary of Commerce imparting that information, and it will, of course, be kept confidential.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is entirely wrong in his conclusion, because his premise is wrong. The proposition made by the distinguished Secretary of Commerce, Harry L. Hopkins, as a compromise, or a way out of this thing, is not, as the Senator has stated, that the answer is to be put into an envelope and to be mailed in, but his answer is to be put in an envelope and handed to the census enumerator.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is to be mailed in.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not know whether it is or not. But there may be written on the back of the envelope "John Jones" or "Mary Quinn."

The Senator has brought out a point which I shall answer. He states that a compromise has been offered. Let me say that the report filed today by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], chairman of the Committee on Commerce, states it as the opinion of the committee that these questions as to income are not legal under the statute. Therefore that is the opinion of the committee which has been considering the resolution, plus the talk among ordinary citizens, in cumulative form, and if the questions are not legal according to common report, and the report of the committee, that should be the end of the whole thing, and it follows that the questions as to income should be deleted, being outside the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to comment on the legality of the questions at this time. The Solicitor for the Department of Commerce, in what seemed to me to be a very able opinion, held that they were legal.

I have heretofore stated that one of the questions that was asked of every farmer in the United States related to his indebtedness, to his income, and to the number of mortgages on his property. I do not recall that the law specifically sets out that kind of questions, but those questions were asked and answered, and no one raised any criticism about it. But I do not care to go into that. I suppose it will be gone into when the matter is brought up.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Would not April 1 be an appropriate day on which to take up the Tobey resolution? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Very likely; but I do not care even to commit myself irrevocably to that until I come to it.

Mr. TOBEY. I say to the Senator from Oklahoma that wisecracks may be in order, but you cannot laugh this thing off.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if wisecracks are not in order, I move that we take a recess.

Mr. TOBEY. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had yielded to the Senator.

Mr. TOBEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. If I am out of order, I will take my seat.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. TOBEY. I desire to make a sporting proposition to the Senator from Kentucky. [Laughter.] In view of the alleged fact that it is important that the reciprocal-trade agreements be acted on, I make this proposition—let the Senator and me agree right now, before this body, that we will give up 1 day to considering Senate Resolution 231—and only 1 day—and at the conclusion of 4 hours' debate vote on it. That is a sporting proposition. Will the Senator agree?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator's resolution, like many other measures on the calendar, should take its regular course. I do not care to enter into any agreement now about it.

If the Senator has concluded——

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from New Hampshire will not be through until he gets Senate Resolution 231 on the floor and gets a vote on it. He is not representing his party, but is a witness to the manifestations of the righteous indignation of the people all over the country, thousands and thousands of them.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be open to question, but I do not care to debate that at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the following nominations under the Farm Credit Administration:

Roy M. Green, of Kansas, to be land bank commissioner; and

Carl R. Arnold, of Ohio, to be production credit commissioner.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of several officers in the Regular Army to be assistants to the Quartermaster General, with the rank of brigadier general, for a period of 4 years from date of acceptance, and also the nomination of Brig. Gen. Raymond Hartwell Fleming, Louisiana National Guard, to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. Walter Grant Bryte, Jr., Air Corps, for appointment to temporary rank from March 11, 1940, as major in the Air Corps, Regular Army, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Regular Army.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

David A. Pine, of the District of Columbia, to be an associate justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, vice Joseph W. Cox, deceased; and Edward M. Curran, to be United States attorney for the District of Columbia, vice David A. Pine, who has been nominated to succeed the late Joseph W. Cox as an associate justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCARRAN also (for Mr. KING), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John E. Hushing to be United States marshal for the district of the Canal Zone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Roulhac Gewin to be United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry C. Walthour to be United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John E. Sloan to be United States marshal for the western district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have been asked by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to allow the nomination of Dorothy B. Keeling to be postmaster at Camp Taylor, Ky., to remain on the calendar.

I ask unanimous consent that the rest of the postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of Dorothy B. Keeling to be postmaster at Camp Taylor, Ky., will remain on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say by way of explanation that I have received a telegram asking that the nomination in question be held up until I receive a letter making some sort of protest against the nominee. I wish to see what the letter contains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, all the other nominations of postmasters on the calendar will be confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our most merciful Father, we rejoice that the night is not eternal and when it is gone there comes another day bringing with it a new, glad morning of hope and promise. O let us hear in our breasts the musings of the peace of God which passeth all understanding. Do Thou inspire us by the mercies of our Saviour to follow after love which is the soul's richest attainment and heaven's highest vocation. Knowledge may come, wisdom linger, but love never faileth. It is the oldest and the newest remedy for human ills because it is the divinest. We praise Thee that the everlasting arms are as dependable as the everlasting hills and humanity's hopes are realized in a dateless Christ. As heirs of an ageless kingdom, we look up to Thee with gratitude and praise. O Thou, who whispereth through the worlds of space, let us hear the music we hope to sing. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the procedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8641) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3046. An act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

ROLAND HANSON

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Roland Hanson, a minor, and Dr. E. A. Julien, and insist on the amendments of the House, agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and appoint conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. KENNEDY of Maryland, RAMSPECK, and THOMAS of New Jersey.

WARREN ZIMMERMAN

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4126) for the relief of Warren Zimmerman, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. KENNEDY of Maryland, RAMSPECK, and THOMAS of New Jersey.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing, I report back a privileged resolution, Report No. 1810, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 409

Resolved, That a revised edition of the compilation containing information concerning monetary and other benefits available to persons who have served in the armed forces of the United States and their dependents pursuant to laws administered by the Veterans' Administration and other Government agencies, including the War Department and the Civil Service Commission, prepared by Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN, Representative from Texas, be printed as a House document; and that 20,000 additional copies thereof be printed for the use of the House document room.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman will remember that in the meetings of the Committee on Printing I stated that I would have no objection to having this document printed providing the Veterans' Administration or someone in authority checked to see that the statements made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas were the laws as now enacted. Has this been accomplished?

Mr. JARMAN. Pursuant to the suggestion made by the gentleman, I may say that, while that probably has not been accomplished yet, I made inquiry this morning and have been assured by General Hines that it will be done.

Mr. RICH. Before the document is printed?

Mr. JARMAN. Before it is printed. It will not be printed for several months. This is merely authorization for the printing.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial entitled "Cuba's Vast Importance to the United States."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein an editorial entitled, "Americans All," the slogan.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a speech released by Under Secretary of Commerce Noble with relation to employment facts in connection with the coming census.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a statement recently appearing in the Chicago Evening American by the financial editor indicating the earning power of corporations for the year 1939.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in two particulars: First, to insert a speech made by myself over the National Broadcasting System entitled "Government by a Minority Is Un-American," and also to print in the RECORD a news release from David Lasser, president of the Workers' Alliance, and a reply from M. S. Eccles, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board.
